"No, I don't know that he did so. He told me a few days ago that he would. He had a quarrel with Lucy, who has a violent temper, and he said that I should be his heir. He told me that she did not treat him with either affection or respect, and was determined that she should not become wealthy at his death—that she did not deserve it. That's all I know about it."

"Then you don't know that he made a will?"

"No, I never saw him alive after that Tuesday morning, I think."

When the Coroner arrived we proceeded to Edwards' house where the usual inquest was held.

The country physician testified that death had resulted from a fracture of the skull with some blunt instrument.

A neighbor—one of two men who found the body—testified that he found near by a round stone, of three pounds weight, stained with blood.

I testified concerning the will.

Ross Edwards again admitted that his uncle had told him he would make such a will; that he knew he often changed his mind; yet denied that he had any knowledge of the murder.

"Where were you during the early part of Tuesday night?" asked the Coroner, eying him sharply.

"Let me see, I took a walk across the fields to the river and had a swim. I got back by 9, I think."

"Did you meet any one on your way to the river or coming back."

"Not a soul."

The verdict of the Coroner's jury was unfavorable to Ross Edwards, and he was taken to Wellington, briefly examined by a magistrate, and committed to jail.

I remained behind to see if any new facts could be learned, and it is singular that the Constable and Coroner, with their prisoner, had been gone half an hour before I thought of the will. Then I sought the two countrymen who had discovered the body of Mr. Edwards, and asked:

"Were there any indications that he had been robbed?"

"Yes," they both replied. "The pockets were turned wrong side out."

"What! Was the inside pocket of his coat turned wrong side out?"

"Yes, and a little memorandum book lay on the ground, nearly covered with dust."

"Did you see anything that looked like a will—a good-sized paper?"

"No, nothing but the memorandum-book. It had a little money inside. We handed it over to Lucy, just as we found it."

Here was a new and singular feature of the case. Where was the will? Had Ross Edwards been so stupid as to take it with him after committing murder, to make sure of it? If so, it could probably be found in the room he occupied in the tavern, or even on his person, and that would be a piece of evidence that would establish his guilt beyond a doubt.

"Ah, how short-sighted men are when they commit crime," I mused. "Even the shrewdest of criminals are sure to leave some clue."

I hastened back to Wellington, and found Mr. Brush.

"Did you search him?" I asked.

"Yes," he replied, "I took all his effects—knife, pipe, tobacco and a pocket-book with fifteen dollars and twenty cents in it."

"Nothing in the shape a will?"

"No."

"Had he any opportunity to throw anything away after his arrest?"

"No, I'm certain of that. I watched him like a cat."

"Then get out a search-warrant and we will go to the Cross-Roads and take a look at his room in the tavern."

This was done at once, and we went to the Cross-Roads that afternoon, when we made a careful examination of Ross Edwards' room, and everything in it. No will was found, nor did any of his clothes show marks of blood.

"He must have more cunning than I gave him credit for," I remarked to Mr. Brush, as we mounted our horses to ride back to Wellington. "Where can that will be?"

Within a month the County Court was in session, and Ross Edwards was tried for murder. Yes, and to the astonishment and indignation of everybody, he was acquitted. Not because the jury believed him innocent, but because the evidence against him was not conclusive.

"He is the luckiest murderer I ever heard of," I said to several brother attorneys, and they all with me.

Not long after Ross Edwards was set at liberty, the daughter of the murdered man called on me and said she desired to contest the will, and would place the case in my hands. She stated that her father was probably not in his right mind when he made his will; that he often had peevish spells; that he frequently flew into a passion about nothing; and that she had done nothing whatever to offend him on the morning that he started for Wellington with the avowed intention of making a will that would disinherit her.

Lucy was a rather handsome young lady, not over 22, with black eyes and a clear complexion. Her manner was candid and earnest, and I was soon convinced that if her father had not been deranged she at least believed him to be so, and I readily agreed to take the case. We were in consultation half an hour in reference to what witnesses might be summoned to testify to the old man's eccentricities of character, and she had risen to go, when I said:

"Why, how forgetful I have been! Unless the will is produced, there is no use contesting it."

"Why, I have it!" she replied.

To my astonishment, she deliberately drew from her pocket and handed me a legal paper, which I immediately recognized as the missing will.

"Where did you get this?" I asked, almost with vehemence.

A puzzled look came over her face—a flush—then she turned deathly pale.

"Where did you get this?" I again demanded, as a fearful thought flashed across my brain.

She tottered a few steps, sank trembling into a chair, and covering her livid face with her hands, ejaculated:

"Merciful heaven! What have I done?"

"What have you done?" I echoed, with some severity. "I'll tell you, girl. You have murdered your father!"

"No, no, I haven't!" she said, frantically, while she clasped her hands and looked up imploringly into my face. "Oh, I didn't kill him! Spare me! Save me!"

"Spare you! Save you! Why?"

She dropped her face upon her hands, and was silent.

"Answer me, girl!" I said, sternly. "Did your cousin Ross kill your father? Speak the truth."

"No," she replied, beginning to cry.

"Then you did?"

"No, no, no!" she wailed piteously.

"At least you know who did?"

"No one did; he was thrown from his horse."

"How do you know?"

"I saw it."

"You saw him thrown from his horse and killed?"

"Yes."

What mystery was here? Was the girl crazy? No, that could not be, for why was she so frightened? and, above all, how came she in possession of the will?

"Why did you try to have Ross hanged for murder?" I asked.

"Because I hated him."

"How came you to see you father thrown from his horse?"

Here she burst into a perfect convulsion of sobs and tears, and after a few seconds regained control of her voice so as to say:

"Oh, I'll tell you all! I might as well now. But they won't hang me for that, will they?"

"For what?" I asked, unable to surmise what was coming.

"I know I'm as bad as if I'd committed a murder," she replied, "but I did not kill him with my own hands. I knew that he had gone to town to make a will that would disinherit me, and it made me hate him and Ross both. He rode a fiery horse, and I made up my mind to frighten it, hoping, I confess, that it would throw him off, and I didn't care if it killed him. So I went out on the road in the evening to wait for him. I knew he generally got home about 9 o'clock, when he went to town, and I knew what time to go. I took a white sheet with me, and when I heard him coming I wrapped it around me, and as he rode near I ran suddenly across the road, directly in front of the horse. The animal was frightened as I had expected, and instantly whirled and ran away, while my father was thrown violently to the ground, his head striking the loose round stone that was found near by. He did not move afterward, and I took the will from his pocket and hurried home. I was foolish enough to think I ought to preserve it, and it has exposed my crime. It looks like a judgment."

Justice to the innocent compelled me to have Lucy Edwards taken into custody so soon as I had heard her astounding story.

She repeated the confession she had made to me, and the people were a second time amazed.

Ross' neighbors, who had refused to recognize him since his release from prison, and who had even talked of ordering him to leave the community, now hastened to take him by the hand and say that they never believed him guilty, and had constantly predicted that time would bring his vindication.

Ross was soon placed in possession of his fortune, but he was so generous as to make every effort to obtain the release of his unnatural cousin, saying he was determined to provide so liberally for her that she should not miss the estate she had so justly forfeited.

The singular girl, however, who seemed a strange mixture of cunning and stupidity, once more astonished everybody by escaping from jail one night, after which she set fire to the old homestead—but it was happily extinguished in good time—then disappeared from the neighborhood, and was never heard from again.

Lime Water for Burns.

A correspondent writes that the readiest and most useful remedy for scalds and burns is an embrocation of lime water and linseed oil. These simple agents combined form a thick, cream-like substance, which effectually excludes the air from the injured parts and allays the inflammation almost instantly. He mentions a case where a child fell backward into a bath-tub of boiling water, and was nearly flayed from her neck to below her hips. Her agonies were indescribable; but her clothing being gently removed, and the lime and oil preparation thickly spread over the injured surface, she was sound asleep in five minutes. Subsequently, the parts were carefully washed with warm milk and water three times a day, the oil dressing renewed, and the little patient rapidly recovered. Though all the scalded skin came off, she did not have a scar. This remedy leaves no hard coat to dry on the sores, but softens the parts, and aids nature to repair the injury in the readiest and most expeditious manner. This mixture may be procured in the drug stores; but if not thus accessible, slack a lump of quick lime in water, and as soon as the water is clear, mix it with the oil and shake it well. If the case is urgent, use boiling water over the lime, and it will become clear in five minutes. The preparation may be kept ready bottled in the house, and it will be as good six months old as when first made.—American Farm Journal.

Early Musical Genius.

Rubenstein gave his first piano concert at Moscow when he was nine years old; Liszt appeared as a pianist when nine before a company of noblemen, who subsequently paid the expense of his education; Gounod took the grand prize for musical composition awarded by the French Institute when twenty-one; Wagner composed four operas when twenty, and his Rienzi was brought out in Paris when he was twenty-four; Verdi became organist in the old Church of Busseto when seventeen, and his first opera was put on the stage at La Scala, Milan, when he was twenty-five; Offenbach became leader of the band at the Theater Francais when twenty-six, and composed his first opera at that age; and Theodore Thomas began playing on the violin in public when only six.

Life on the Farm and in the City.

Thousands of young men, discontented with the farm work of their fathers, have an ideal city life in their minds, where the young man, gaily trigged out with fashionably cut clothes and jewelry, makes a stunning appearance and seems to be free from ordinary human cares. A recent letter from Chicago gives a picture of clerical life which has a valuable hint in it to those who long for such employment, to enable them to escape the more laborious work of the farm. A short extract is given to show how thoroughly the individuality and the manhood must be crushed out to give place to the mechanical obsequiousness of the clerk:

"It is estimated there are 20,000 in Chicago. The salaries of these animated automatons range from $6 to $15, seldom as high as $18 per week; and how under heaven they make the legendary 'two ends' meet is one of the mysteries. The salaries of those who gain their livelihood by their 'shape' rather than by brains and brawn, have been cut down since the fire fully 100 per cent. There has been no reduction in living expenses consequent upon high rents, which have been very generally maintained. These clerks are compelled to lose their individuality completely, and have become, in consequence of their virtual slavery, veritable puppets. Supposing there was not the constant terror of loss of situation—and there is, for an advertisement in the Tribune for any manner of a clerk will bring from 500 to 1,000 applicants—each able to bring 'the very best references,' and we may say the clerk receives the munificent pittance of $12 per week, which is certainly the average salary. To get board at as low a price as $6 per week, and this will only procure the vilest of hash, he must live from two to four miles from his place of business. As he must be behind his gorgeous counter—money is put in furnishings, not salaries, in Chicago— at 7:30 o'clock promptly, it necessitates the expenditure of 60 cents a week for car fare. His lunch is not often included in this dyspepsia-producing boarding-house regime, and $1.50 at least must be expended during the week for restaurant dinners. His washing will cost $1 more, for his linen must be spotless, and his absolutely necessary incidental expenses will swell this total to $10, leaving $2 per week with which to array himself in costly apparal, for he must be faultlessly dressed. When it is true that more clerks receive $10 than $12 per week, and the fact that many have families to support is considered, a picture of exquisite misery is furnished that should prompt some artist to achieve renown by portraying these miseries and making the clerk their embodied type.

"But these are not all his miseries. The 'floor-walker' or foreman has an eagle eye for delinquents, and the slightest dereliction is visited with a stinging reprimand, a hissed curse, or that consummation of all horrors, dismissal; and, so fearful of this do these clerks become, and so groveling are they obliged to be in consequence, that I have stood by in disgust and seen them chew prints in proof of their 'fast color' at the suggestion of ladies.(!) Manliness, sentiment, consideration, are all evolved. Labor is valued in these huge establishments at just what it will bring, and five hundred employes are morally so much machinery. The caprices of women with time on their hands to kill; the petulance of women who carry their shrewishness into their inquiries for tape and tarletan; the whimsicalities of grandmothers and the virulence of spinsters; the torment of women who want forty dozen samples 'to send to a sick cousin in the country,' but who are really making patch-work and quilts; the thoughtlessness of girls who end a raid on a department with the remark, 'Guess ma'll have to come;' snickering women, terrible women; handsome women, ugly women; holy women, thieving women; and all the countless contemptible little exhibitions of snobbishness on the part of all women who mistake them for evidences of womanhood and caste—all have to be overcome and smoothed away by the despairing clerk, or judgment day comes."

A Queer Gathering.

At Birmingham, Eng., a tea party was recently given to some invited guests who were all known, nay, self-confessed drunkards. At the time and place appointed 300 persons assembled. With the exception of two women, who came in cabs, and are said to have given proof that they had not been invited by mistake, the drunkards behaved in a most respectable manner, the very babies—admitted, we conclude, by favor of drunken mothers—joining, after their manner, in the temperance songs of the hosts of this strange party. The inebriate guests even looked tolerably well, for though some were ragged, a good many appeared to have washed their faces and combed their hair. Their neatness was, however, nothing to their temper, which seems to have been perfect, for they sat drinking their tea and eating bread and butter while addressed by one of their entertainers on the subject of their degraded condition. "Outcast, besotted, terribly depraved, and almost hopeless," were the adjectives applied to their fallen, but for the time being, comfortable selves, as they drank the harmless Congou for a change; and not a few, having turned down their cups, signed the pledge, thus giving the stamp of success to one of the queerest social gatherings of the day.

Rat's Sagacity.

Whilst Mr. Joseph Terrell was sitting in his back porch, about dusk, the other evening, he noticed two rates coming from under some wood close by. Noticing something peculiar about them, he paid close attention, and discovered that they had a straw in their mouths, one rat at each end. The rats went down to a little pond in the yard, laid the straw down, took a drink of water, picked up the straw, and marched back in the same way they went down. Just before reaching the wood Mr. Terrell killed both rats, and upon examination found the largest and oldest rat had been totally blind. Mr. Terrell says the old rat was very fat, and is satisfied that the other rats have been feeding him on young chickens and turkeys, as well as watering him. Mr. Terrell vouches for the truth of the above.—Ballard (Ky.) News.

Fighting for Their Lives.

A letter from Slohold, Pa., thus describes what befell three young women who went a-berrying: They were obliged to cross the pond to reach the woods. Before entering the boat they saw something in the distance swimming in the water. Thinking it was a dog, they paid no further attention to it, but started on their way across the pond, which is about two miles wide. After rowing for several hundred yards, the girl who was piloting the boat saw that what they first thought to be a dog swimming in the water was a buck, which was coming directly toward them. Having a clumsy pair of oars, it was some time before the boat could be turned, and then the deer had reached to within a few yards of them. The girls became greatly terrified, for the deer was fast gaining on them, and from the way it snorted and plunged, they were satisfied it meant mischief. While the one rowed with all her might the other two paddled, thus somewhat increasing their speed; but the deer was slowly gaining on them, and knowing they could not reach the shore before being overtaken, they ceased rowing to prepare for the inevitable battle. When the deer, snorting and plunging, had reached to within a few feet of the boat, it stopped for a moment. Then it made a sudden plunge, and as its head struck the side of the boat the brave girls brought down their raised paddles upon it with such force as to drive it under water. The girls again raised their only weapons, and as the head rose to the surface they again brought their paddles to bear upon it with the same result.

When the deer again raised from the water it seemed to realize that this was to be the death struggle, and its eyes gleamed like balls of fire. It made a lunge, and threw its forefeet over the side of the boat near the oar locks. This nearly capsized the clumsy craft, and threw Maggie Jordan, the oldest of the three, into the water; but as she fell she caught the edge of the boat, and was hauled in by one of her companions. Then the heroine at the oars, as she felt the animal's breath in her face, raised a paddle and struck for her life, and as the blow fell across the deer's head the blood started from its nostrils, and it sank back helpless and seemingly dead, but really only stunned. The girls then started for the shore, leaving the deer struggling between life and death in the water.

Reaching the shore, one of the girls ran to a small log cabin, an eighth of a mile distant, in which lived a family by the name of Berger, and told what had occurred. Mr. Berger seized his rifle and went to the pond, where he found the wounded deer yet struggling in the water a few rods from the shore. He rowed out to it, and seizing it by the antlers, cut its throat, and then towed its body to the shore. The deer was the largest ever killed in the neighborhood, weighing 227 pounds.

American Swindlers Abroad.

Says the Paris correspondent of the London Telegraph: There is excitement among the jewelers of Paris over a robbery, of which two Americans are heroes. I am sorry to notice that our trans-Atlantic brethren are rapidly earning a discreditable fame in the department of high-class swindling. Some days since two past masters of this business called upon a wealthy tradesman of the Paris Royal and invited him to send good chains for approval to the Hotel Viollet. Here, as in other cases of fraud by Americans, there was evidence of thought, of cautious boldness and of cunning to which we are little used in the proceedings of their European kindred. The jeweler went, but no business was done on the first occasion. He found the gentlemen comfortably installed and in no hurry for negotiation. They passed as representatives of Messrs. J. D. Conover & Co., of Philadelphia, and no suspicion could be aroused by their manner. The next day the jeweler brought seventy-two gold chains, all of which were approved and purchased. The Americans sorted them with apparent intelligence, and arranged them by groups in a tin box. The vender looked on, and when all was finished he put the box beside him and wrote out his bill. The strangers moved about and talked, but without any suspicious action. The account complete in duplicate, they asked to have the box tied up and sealed. This also was done leisurely, the bill discussed and discount settled. It came to nearly £400. Then the Americans gave back the parcel of chains, requesting the jeweler to take it at a certain date to Messrs. Munroe, bankers, Rue Scribe, when his bill would be discharged. Thereupon he left. It was mere chance that led him, some hours after, to call upon Messrs. Munroe, where he learned that no such persons as those described were known to the bankers. Filled with sudden alarm, he reopened the tin box, and found in it rolls of lead. On going to the Hotel Viollet the Americans had vanished, leaving their baggage, which contained many more boxes of the sort, wax, ribbons, and other paraphernalia, the use of which had just been demonstrated.

What is the Sun.

Prof. Rudolph, in a lengthy paper on the sun says: A molton or white hot mass, 856,000 miles in diameter, equaling in bulk 1,260,000 worlds like our own, having a surrounding ocean of gas on fire, 50,000 miles deep, tongues of flame darting upward more than 50,000 miles, volcanic force that hurl into the solar atmosphere luminous matter to the height of 160 miles; drawing to itself all the worlds belonging to our family of planets, and holding them all in their proper places; attracting with such superior force the millions of solid and stray masses that are wandering in the fathomless abyss that they rush hopelessly toward him, and fall into his fiery embrace. And thus he continues his sublime and restless march through his mighty orbit, having a period of more than 18,000,000 years.

Decline of Immigration.

The monthly arrivals of immigrants at New York for the last four years from Jan. 1 exhibit some interesting figures. The following is the statement:

From the foregoing statement it will be seen that immigration has this year fallen one-third below that of the corresponding period of last year. This is caused by the bad accounts of the times sent home to laboring classes by their friends already in our midst. The Irish and Germans have been deterred to a great extent from coming here. Italian immigration is at a stand-still. On the other hand, there is a fair influx of Russians of the substantial class. One party of these alone exchanged roubles at Castle Garden the other day for $100,000. As prices stand in the West this sum will purchase a great deal of land.

Terrible Crimes in India.

The appalling features of East Indian crime are disclosed in the recent reports of the Calcutta Criminal Court, from which the Pall Mall Gazette has selected several cases:

In Cuttack a woman draws a child aside, takes the silver bracelets from her arms, and flings the little victim into a tank, on the surface of which the body is found floating a few days afterward. In Behar a man strangles a boy nine years old for the sake of his silver bracelets and gold earrings, and throws the corpse into a sugar plantation. At Moorshed a bad Chamoo robs a child aged five, and drops her into a deep and rapid part of the river. At Benares a fellow entices a boy twelve years old into his house, and there cuts his throat in order to get possession of his silver bracelets, while a friend looks on and mildly expostulates, but neither seriously interferes nor gives information to the police. Another takes a neighbor's son into the fields, under pretense of helping him to fly his kite, there strangles him with his waist cloth, and strips him of the trashy trinkets with which he was adorned. Yet another conducts a boy aged nine to witness a religious procession, but, passing near a ditch, suddenly throws him down, partially strangles him, tears the silver ornaments from his arms and feet, and flings him into the ditch, which is fortunately dry, and where he is found before life is quite extinct.

By the promise of a melon Leola inveigles Debee Dee, seven years of age, from his father's house, brains him with a hoe, and buries his turban and trinkets in a field, leaving the body where it had fallen, and where it was found by the anxious father. This murderer, like the others, on being charged with the crime, at once confessed his guilt, and pleaded as an extenuating circumstance that he was prompted by an evil spirit.

A woman holds a little girl under water until she is drowned, the temptation being a silver dollar of the weight of two rupees.

Two women one evening ask a child, eight years old, to come to them on the morrow for some fruit, and when she eagerly arrives, the one holds her while the other passes a rope round her neck and pulls it till the breath has fled. The body was speedily found in the midst of some tall grass near the house, and the spoils consisted of a silver collar weighing four rupees.

A woman of Tipperah was engaged in cooking her food, when, according to her own account, a child not above six years old came toddling up to her. Suddenly a thick darkness enveloped her, and a voice sounded in her ears, bidding her strangle her little visitor. Thereupon she seized the child by the throat, and the darkness passed away. So she dug a hole in the floor of her house and laid the body therein, after taking off the few valueless ornaments.

A girl, aged nine, herself recently betrothed, drowns her playfellow in a shallow watercourse; while a boy, fourteen years old, leads in play a youthful companion to the edge of a tank, smashes his skull with a flint, possesses himself of the scanty ornaments, and then lays the crime at the door of a neighbor.

The Capture of New Orleans.

Hon. Gideon Welles, Secretary of the Navy under President Lincoln, publishes an article in the Hartford Times in defense of Admiral Farragut as the capturer of New Orleans. This article is in reply to a statement in the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court, delivered by Justice Swayne, in the case of the City of New Orleans, appellant, vs. the New York Mail Steamship Company, in which the expression occurred: "On the 1st of May, 1862, the army of the United States captured the city of New Orleans." Mr. Welles proves that the city was captured by Farragut on the 25th of April, and held by him until the arrival of the troops. He also quotes from the records of the War Department to show that repeated injustice has been done to the Admiral. A chronological record published by the department, and purporting to give a record of all events of the war, does not contain Farragut's name, and gives the credit for the capture of the forces on the Mississippi, below New Orleans, to Admiral Porter, who was a subordinate under Farragut. The article concludes:

"I have felt it a duty to the navy, to the truth of history, and to the most distinguished hero of the war, to correct the persistent misstatements which have been and still are made in regard to the capture of New Orleans, and to some of the attending circumstances and events of that period. The document, which is sent out by the War Department as a 'chronological table of battles, skirmishes, etc., which took place during the rebellion,' is not truthful and reliable, insomuch as it suppresses and fails to make mention of some of the most important and conspicuous battles which took place, and wholly omits the name of the most distinguished hero of the war."

Wasted Fly-Power.

It was Hamlet who expressed a preference for the "fly to ills we know not of," or words to that effect, and Hamlet either was or pretended to be insane. The idea that there is any more annoying torment possible than the frequent fly affords, is an unsound notion, a sign of a very thick skin or of a very thick head. But setting aside for the time the direct discomfort that the creature works for man, it is interesting, and instructive, too, to see the seriously injurious effect that its indirect influence seems to have upon the world's industry. There are, in round numbers, 33,000,000 cows, oxen, horses, and the like, in this country, which for about ten hours a day during fly time keep their tails in almost constant motion. It is no exaggeration to estimate that they swing them at least ten times a minute, with a force equal at each swing to raising one pound a foot. That is, their tail force is ten pounds a minute. One horse power is 33,000 feet pounds in a minute, so 3,300 cattle would exert with their tails one horse power, and all these creatures in the country would put forth upon the fly the aggregate force of 10,000 horse power. Now the entire force of all the steam engines and water wheels in the country used in the manufacture of steam engines and boilers is less than 12,000 horse power. That is, the force wasted by our domestic animals in waving their tails to keep the fly away is almost sufficient, if rightly applied, to move all the motive machinery in the land.—Hartford Courant.

Negotiating with Burglars.

A week ago last night the house of Mr. H. R. Groff, at No. 42 Wood street, was entered by a burglar or burglars, and some $600 worth of jewelry stolen. Each piece was marked, and as bills descriptive of each were immediately got out it became a matter of difficulty for burglars to dispose of the property. The next step was to open a negotiation with Mr. Groff to see if he would not be willing to lose a small sum for the recovery of a large one. A note was accordingly dropped to Mr. Groff, the burglar saying he was "ready to make a negotiation." If Mr. Groff would send him $300, he said, and agree to ask no questions or attempt to discover the thief, every piece of jewelry would be returned. An answer was requested through an advertisement in the paper. Mr. Groff concluded to open negotiations, but did not feel disposed to stand the $300. He accordingly published a personal notice to the effect that the offer was too high. The same day another note came. The burglar was willing this time to take $200, and wanted an answer immediately. It came, and was to the effect that the bid was yet too high. The third epistle was immediately received, and the price of redemption marked down to $150. Mr. Groff thought that he could stand the toll, and accordingly published a notice to that effect. The next step was to settle means by which the transfer could be made. Mr. Groff received a note telling him to have the cash at home with him at night, and that some of these evenings he would have a chance to dispose of it. Thursday night last Mr. Groff heard a tap at his window, and on throwing up the sash, saw a man below in the darkness who asked him if he was "ready with the stamps."

"The money is here," said Mr. Groff; "come in and you shall have it."

"I guess I wont come in," said the man, "or you might recognize me. The jewelry is here all right, and I will give it up when you hand out the money."

Mr. Groff declined to accede to the cheeky request, and told the man if he would hand in the goods he should have his money. The man at first declined to do so, and insisted that the cash should be passed out first.

"Why can't you trust me as well as for me to trust you?" asked the burglar.

"Because I claim to be an honest man, and you are a thief," said Mr. Groff.

The answer seemed to throw a new light into the mind of the man outside, and he finally decided to pass in the goods, which he proceeded to do. Mr. Groff took them in, looked them over and found all there, and then passed the roll of bills to the brassy thief. The latter thereupon departed as silently as he came. Mr. Groff thinks there were two or three other men in the yard, although he saw only one.—Cleveland Leader.

Learn a Trade.

I never look at my old steel composing rule that I do not bless myself that, while my strength lasts, I am not at the mercy of the world. If my pen is not wanted, I can go back to the type-case and be sure to find work; for I learned the printer's trade thoroughly—newspaper-work, job-work, book-work, and press-work. I am glad I have a good trade. It is a rock upon which the possessor can stand firmly. There is health and vigor for both body and mind in an honest trade. It is the strongest and surest part of the self-made man. Go from the academy to the printing office, or the artisan's bench, or, if you please, to the farm—for, to be sure, true farming is a trade, and a grand one at that. Lay thus a sure foundation, and after that branch off into whatever profession you please.

You have heard, perhaps, of the clerk who had faithfully served Stephen Girard from boyhood to manhood. On the twenty-first anniversary of his birthday, he went to his master and told him his time was up and he certainly expected important promotion in the merchant's service. But Stephen Girard said to him: "Very well, now go and learn a trade."

"What trade, sir?"

"Good barrels and butts must be in demand while you live. Go and learn the cooper's trade and when you have made a perfect barrel bring it to me."

The young man went away and learned the trade, and in time brought to his old master a splendid barrel of his own make.

Girard examined it, and gave the maker two thousand dollars for it, and then said to him:

"Now, sir, I want you in my counting-room; but henceforth you will not be dependent upon the whim of Stephen Girard. Let what will come, you have a good trade always in reserve."

The young man saw the wisdom and understood.

Years ago, when the middle-aged men of to-day were boys, Horace Greeley wrote:

"It is a great source of consolation to us that when the public shall be tired of us as an editor, we can make a satisfactory livelihood at setting type or farming; so that while our strength lasts, ten thousand blockheads, taking offense at some article they do not understand, could not drive us into the poorhouse."

And so may a man become truly independent.

The Pay of Whisky Gaugers.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has adopted a new schedule for the payment of gaugers by means of which it is estimated from $75,000 to $100,000 a year will be saved. Under the working of the old method of paying for the quantity gauged per month at ten cents per gallon, compensation not to exceed six dollars per day at any time, it was usually the case that the six dollars were charged for days in which no gauging whatever was done. The new schedule allows pay only for the days on which gauging is actually done, at the rate of ten cents per gallon, to an amount not in excess of six dollars per pay.

Tiny Builders.

Rock builders consist of forms of vegetable as well as animal life. The vegetable builders are found in the ooze which covers the marine plants drawn up from the bottom of the sea. They consist of zigzag links of boxes, attached at their corners. These vegetable forms, so minute as to be invisible to the naked eye, have the power of secreting the elements of flint or silica from the water in which they live. They are very curiously marked, and there are many varieties of them. The city of Berlin was built on an immense bed of the remains of these minute vegetable forms, and the unstable foundations of the houses is owing to this fact. They are so small that one of them is but the seventy-millionth part of a grain. They live in the water, and damp moss contains them. They increase by subdivision, one being capable of increasing to a million by this process, in twenty-four hours. Their method of building is simply by living and then dying and leaving their flinty skeletons to form the solid rock. They block up rivers, give the green tinge to the Arctic ocean, form a white stone which has been found in masses five hundred miles long and eight hundred feet thick, and the clouds of dust which are blown from the desert are made up of them. The second class of rock builders are endowed with animal life. The pyramids and the sphinx were built of stone made by these animals, which are mere specks of jelly, some of which have the power of covering themselves with shell; yet they are able to walk without feet, to capture their prey without hands, and all by means of the gelatinous substance of which they are composed. They throw out threads of living flesh, which seize and digest their food—as though we could digest a beafsteak by taking it in our hands. The rock of the pyramids is composed of their cases or shells, and is thus full of organized remains. The stone of which Paris is built is composed of these fossil shells. They form marble, and thus enter into the most beautiful forms of sculpture. These little builders do their work solidly, and it is still going on. They labor at the bottom of the deep sea, which, though it was once thought to be devoid of life, is now found to be a populous empire, thronged with active life and strange forms. They never rest, but perform their mission faithfully and well, thus setting an example which the larger animal, man, would do well to profit by.

SCHENCK'S PULMONIC SYRUP, FOR THE CURE OF CONSUMPTION, COUGHS AND COLDS.

The great virtue of this medicine is that it ripens the matter and throws it out of the system, purifies the blood, and thus effects a cure.

SCHENCK'S SEA WEED TONIC, FOR THE CURE OF DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, ETC.

The Tonic produces a healthy action of the stomach, creating an appetite, forming chyle, and curing the most obstinate cases of indigestion.

SCHENCK'S MANDRAKE PILLS, FOR THE CURE OF LIVER COMPLAINT, ETC.

These Pills are alterative and produce a healthy action of the liver without the least danger, as they are free from calomel and yet more efficacious in restoring a healthy action of the liver.

These remedies are a certain cure for Consumption, as the Pulmonic Syrup ripens the matter and purifies the blood. The Mandrake Pills act upon the liver, create a healthy bile, and remove all diseases of the liver, often a cause of Consumption. The Sea Weed Tonic gives tone and strength to the stomach, makes a good digestion, and enables the organs to form good blood; and thus creates a healthy circulation of healthy blood. The combined action of these medicines, as thus explained, will cure every case of Consumption, if taken in time, and the use of the medicines persevered in.

MR. H. R. STEVENS:

Dear Sir—I am seventy-one years of age; have suffered many years with Kidney Complaint, weakness in my back and stomach. Many of my acquaintances have taken it, and I believe it to be good for all the complaints for which it is recommended.

Yours truly,

BOSTON, Feb. 13, 1871.

MR. H. R. STEVENS:

Dear Sir—About one year since I found myself in a feeble condition from general debility. VEGETINE was strongly recommended to me by a friend who had been much benefited by its use. I procured the article and, after using several bottles, was restored to health, and discontinued its use. I feel quite confident that there is no medicine superior to it for those complaints for which it is especially prepared, and would cheerfully recommend it to those who feel that they need something to restore them to perfect health.

Respectfully yours,
U. L. PETTINGILL,
Firm of S. M. Pettingill & Co., 10 State-st., Boston.

Dr. C. Fulton, of Bucyrus, Ohio, says:—"Hon. Judge Lee of this county had been troubled with Kidney affection for some months; I put him on your Buchu and Dandelion, and in a few days he was improved. In two weeks time, without other medicines, he passed from his bladder, an irregular calculus, an inch in length and a quarter of an inch in diameter, which he will send down to you as a remarkable specimen of its kind. He is now free from all pain and a sound man." Not a Mad Stone. TEAS—Our Tea trade is the wonder of the country. No one ever dreamt such a trade could be built up. We sell more chests daily than some houses do pounds, and still our trade is increasing. It is no uncommon thing for us to purchase two hundred chests at a time, and here is the great element of our success. As by purchasing such larger quantities direct of the Importers we save our consumer, at least the three extra profits of jobbers, speculator and wholesale grocer, who make 10 to 20 cents per pound. This our customers get the benefit of. No middle men with us. As with teas, so with sugar coffee, syrup and all other goods. No secret—it is simply in purchasing all our goods at first hands and re-selling direct to our customers at small margin, and save them at least 20 to 40 cents a pound on tea and 20 per cent on all other goods.

JOHN L. DAVIS,

Early to rise.

Dr. Cross in the New York Tribune.

Farmers generally do not rise as early as they did twenty years ago, and I think they ought not to. Some, however retain the old habit and are up at 3 and 4 o'clock, have breakfast at lamplight, and then work commences. Now, I know well enough that if there are hired men, and if work pushes, it is necessary to stir early, but on the whole, I think what is known as the habit of early rising is so much an error as to do more harm than good. I should say that for an ordinary household, where nobody but the family is in the house, breakfast at 8 o'clock is soon enough for winter, and from 6 to 7 for spring and summer. It would be a good plan though, if there is one in the house who likes to rise early, to build the fires so that the rooms may be warmed, though by having good stoves fires can be kept up all night. I object to breakfast by lamplight, because the children are made to get up when they would be much better off in bed and asleep. It is cruel to tear boys out of bed in the dark and cold, since they always go to bed tired, and, growing as they are, they need all the rest and recuperation they can get, and when they do arise they ought not to be hurried out to the barn, probably in cold damp boots, to fodder and take care of the stock. It is much better for the man himself to go out and see that the work is properly done, though the boys might go along, if they are warmed, and help and get fresh air before breakfast.

I doubt whether any thing is gained by feeding cattle before sunrise, and I am sure milking ought not to be done until the morning becomes a little cheerful. The amount of work which boys can do in cold mornings is not much, and it will seldom be done well. They are in a hury to get back to the fire, and they ought not to be blamed, it would be a good plan to have them help about breakfast is there if help needed. The point I want to make is, boys are neither tough nor strong, nor have they got the use of their muscles so that they can apply to advantage what strength they do possess. If school hours press and they are to go, they ought not to have any time to spare. When night comes everything should be made comfortable; have plenty of lamps and paper.s An intelligent father neglects his duty if he does not help the teacher, and a vast help can be given by hearing the children read, and in making them read correctly, and considering various subjects.

A Womons Rights

"Pullman car, Madam?" politely inquired the gate man in the long depot at the head of La Salle street, the other day, addressing a self-reliant looking woman of uncertain age.

She only gave him a watchering glance and marched on.

"Pullman car—right this way," said a breakman with a label on his cap band, as she came up to him.

Her face only grew harder, and she muttered something about these brutes of men between her teeth.

"Pullman car missus— right in here," obsequiously intimated the colored porter from the platform as she reached the rear coach.

Then that female was enraged. She gave the astonished Etheopian one killing frown. She righted about face.—She started back to the ticket office, sachel, umbrella, bundles and all. She caught the ticket agent's eye through the window and as she came up she explained:

"Give me back my money, sir."

"Wh-why, good lady," said the agent, "what's the trouble?"

"Trouble enough," she replied. "I was a goin' to Oskaloosa to the Woman's Sufferage Meetin', but I ain't goin' on no Pull-MAN car; no, sir. If ye ain't got any pull-woman cars on your old road, I won't patronize ye; that's all

And the agent explained to her. He pacified her feelings, and taking her by the arm, got her aboard the train just as it was started for Iowa.—Chicago Journal.

LOGANSPORT, Ind., Sept., 21, 1875.
Editor Auburn COURIER:

Dear Sir—The Fast Mail is proving a success—why cannot Auburn come in for a share, and get transit from seven to twenty-four hours in advance of present delivery. I have the authority to guarantee the delivering of mail from the fast line at 8.05, a. m., at the Eel River depot, if the people will furnish a carrier from the depot to the office. Mr. Ryan tells me there is due him, about eight dollars for carrying the mail from the early train last spring, and that he feels under no obligations, and declines to assume the responsibility of carrying the mail for that train without a small compensation at least, and now the question for the people, the business men especially, to decide is, whether they will contribute and pay for the delivery of the fast mail, or whether they will be deprived of it. I will be pleased to make arrangements for its delivery, as soon as arrangements are made for the carrying from the depot to the office. I am sir, very respectfully yours.

THE TOOTHACHE.—A gentleman says, after suffering excruciating pain from toothache, and having tried in vain to obtain relief, Betty told me a gentleman had been waiting some time in the parlor, who said he would not detain me one minute. He came—a friend I had not seen for years. He sympathized with me, while I briefly told how sad I was afflicted.

"My dear friend, I can cure you in ten minutes."

"How? how?" inquired I; "do it in pitty."

"Instantly," said he. "Betty, have you any alum?"

"Yes."

"Bring it, and some common salt"

They were produced, my friend pulverized them, mixed in equal quantities; then wet a small piece of cotten, causing the mixed powders to adhere, and placed it in my hollow tooth.

"There, if that does not cure you I'll forfeit my head. You may tell this in Gath, and publish it in Askelon; the remedy is infallible."

It was so. I experienced a sensation of coldness on applying it, which gradually subsided, and with it the torment of the toothache.

A great storm is reported at Galveston, Texas. A report says telegraph communication with Galveston is still interrupted. A steamer arrived at Brashear to-day, bringing passengers and files of Galveston papers to the 18th, Saturday morning. They contain accounts of the storm, incidents etc. The storm was very severe. Buildings were uproofed, trees, awnings, and fences blown down, streets, buildings, bridges, wharves etc., badly damaged, and several small houses washed away. Passengers report that from one-half to three-fourths of Galveston Island was submerged, and estimate the damage at not less than $1,000,000. Only two lives were lost in the city and two in the bay—Dr. Peet and his nephew, who were at the boarding station, which was carried away.

In a bad Fix

A citizen who was walking along the Jackson road the other day says, the Vicksburg Herald, saw a man up a tree near the roadside, and halting, he inquired:

"What are you doing up there?"

The man made no reply, and the citizen continued:

"What's the cause of your being up there?"

At that moment a woman rose up from the fence-corner, rested a club on the fence and remarked:

"I'm the cause stranger, and if you'll wait till he comes down, you'll see the worst field of carnage around here that ever laid out of doors?"

The citizen drove on, and she turned to the man up the tree and continued:

"Polhemus, I can't climb, and you know it, but if you'll drop down here for two minutes, I'll give you a quit-claim deed on the farm!"

Charles Francis Adams has been moved to write a letter to a friend in Brook'yn in which he admits that his choice for the presidency by the people would be very greatful to him, but at the same time he declares that the work he has undertaken will engage the remainder of his life. He therefore declines the honor by anticipation There is not much likelihood that Mr Adams will go into politics next year and the agitation of his name in that connection is superfluous. Mr. Adams is a man of sterling worth and of great ability as a statesman. Descended from an old and honorable family which has given to the country two of its presidents, he is already a part of history. The failure of the Cincinnati convention to nominate Mr. Adams in 1872 has doubtless assisted him in making up his mind mind not to let his name be used a second time.

So enamored has our government became of the beauties and benefits of protection of home interests, that the line dividing the country from Canada is a virtual Chinese wall. Travelers crossing from one country to the other are subject to the annoyance of a senseless search of their baggage, and even of their persons, lest some article of merchandise escape its payment of the prescribed tariff duty. The people of Canada have asked for free trade, but it has been refused. They now complain of the annoyances to which they are subject by our custom houses. The protection policy is nothing less than an intolerable nuisance and will be abolished by the next administration.

THE REAPERS.

The reapers bend their dusty backs;
The ascending sickles sway;
At every stroke the golden ears
Recline to give them way;
The heavy ears fall bowing down,
And nestle at their feet,
Such will, such work as theirs perforce
Must win—must homage meet.

So careless of fatigue they go,
So true, so [illegible],
The admiring [illegible] on the road
Leans o'er the gate to see;
With marvel of the soon-fallen breadth,
The [illegible];
But the reapers labor for us all;
'Tis need they should work well.

For the [illegible]
Shall crimson in the west,
And the [illegible] poppy [illegible] fade,
And [illegible]
Each golden spear that upward points
Shall fall upon the field,
And the farmer drain a sparkling glass,
Rejoicing o'er the yield.

Ply, bonny men, your sickles bright,
And give the people bread!
At every conquering stride you take,
On want and woe you tread.
Drop, heavy ears, and give the strength
You gathered from this plain,
That man may rise refreshed and firm,
And do great things again.

God bless the hands, all hard and brown,
That guide the cleaving plow,
That cast abroad the shining seed,
And build the wealthy mow;
They rear the bread our children eat;
'Tis by their toil we live;
Hurrah! give them the loudest cheer
That grateful hearts can give!

THE WIFE'S REVENGE.

"No strawberries? What in the world is the reason you didn't order some?" exclaimed Edward Lester, as he entered his pleasant home in the suburbs of Boston. "You know, Maria, I am very fond of them, and you are determined to punish me in some way if you can."

"Punish you, Edward? What do you talk so for?" returned the wife, a sweet little woman, full of beauty and grace.

"You know I like them very much," added the petulant husband.

"But they taste too strongly of the money."

"Come, come, Maria, no more of Poor Richard's saws, I am heartily sick of them."

"You would not have me pay sixty cents a box for strawberries, would you?"

"Why not?"

"It is too much."

"No, it isn't."

"You cannot afford it."

"Yes, I can. Isn't my salary $1,500 a year?"

"I do not think strawberries at sixty cents a box, are very profitable," replied the pretty wife, with a pleasant smile.

Edward Lester did not deserve such a beautiful, sweet tempered wife as Maria.

But, in spite of his petulant manner, he was really an excellent fellow, and loved the pretty little woman with all his soul, though it is true he had a singular way of showing it. He deserved a thrashing for his hasty words, yet as he eventually learned better it is not worth while to dwell too long upon the dark side of his character.

The first year after his marriage he had boarded, but desiring to have the comforts of home in all their purity, the young couple had decided to go to housekeeping.

Edward would have hired a large house at a rent of $400 a year, if his wife had not persisted that such a dwelling would wear her life out. He then left the matter entirely to her, and she found a nice little cottage seven miles from the city, at a rent of $150. The husband liked it very well, and Maria furnished it in a very plain but neat style.

They were at home now, and for a time the novelty of the thing kept Edward in excellent humor. But he was a reckless fellow, and had no idea whatever of the value of money. He always spent his salary, and sometimes a little more.

Edward was out of humor because he had no strawberries, and when he sat down to the table the tea was too weak, the bread tasted of saleratus, and the butter was strong. He snarled and growled, first at Maria, and then at Bridget, till the wife was almost discouraged. But she did not yield to the impulse of the moment and get out of temper. She kept smiling, however cutting and severe came the criticisms of her husband.

After tea he was a little modified, for there seemed to be nothing more to grumble at, and even condescended to smile.

"Edward, I want fifty dollars to-morrow," said Maria.

This was rather a remarkable request for the careful little woman to make, for she was very prudent in regard to her private expenses.

"Certainly, Maria," replied Edward. "I hope you are going to buy a new silk."

"I am."

He handed her the money and hoped she would dress herself a great deal better than before, for he could afford it.

"I am going to spend as much money as I can," said she.

"That is right, Maria, do," added the reckless husband. And Edward soon had reason to repent this advice, for Maria now seemed to spend all her spare time in asking for money. He was too reckless, too magnanimous to deny her or suggest that she was exceeding the bounds of reason.

She was merciless in her drafts upon him, and to supply her demands, for he had not the courage to refuse her modest requests, he was obliged to curtail his own private expenses. On several occasions he had been obliged to borrow money to meet her requisitions upon his purse and being an honest man he had to cut off many luxuries in order to pay these loans.

What had got into Maria? She was extravagant, and yet she did not seem to dress much better, or his house to be supplied with many additional luxuries. But he was too proud to complain. He did hint, but she would not take a hint.

A year passed by and there was no improvement in the reckless woman. Fortunately for him his salary was raised to $2,000, but it was scarcely done before Maria demanded a fifty dollar bill.

"You spend more money than you used to spend, Maria," he suggested.

"What is the use for me to pinch myself, if you spend all you get?" smiled Maria, so sweetly he could not say another word. "I want to have the good of the money while it is going, as well as you."

Edward had some doubts as to the consequence, but what puzzled him most was to know what became of the money. Another year passed by, and the danger of running in debt, stared him in the face.

"Maria, we are living too fast, I am afraid," he observed in a melancholy tone.

"I am afraid you are, for yesterday you brought home a pair of chickens, for which you paid twenty cents a pound," replied Maria with her usual smile.

"Pooh, Maria, I don't mean these little things. We must have something to eat, and while my salary is two thousand dollars a year, I mean to live well."

"Great trees from little acorns grow," she added.

"Let us stop the bung-hole then," continued Edward, desperately. "Would you believe, my dear, that I have given you six hundred dollars a year for the last two years?"

"What is six hundred dollars a year for a lady? You were reading, the other day, that a great many ladies in New York spend two thousand dollars a year for dress alone. You certainly cannot complain of six hundred."

"Oh, no, by no means. I do not mean to complain," replied Edward.

"I knew you didn't. Whatever I spend goes for a good cause."

"I suppose so; but I don't care anything about it, only that I am getting a little short. There is Dr. Smith's bill of sixty dollars. I don't see how I can pay it."

"Let it rest, then. He will never ask you for it."

"But I don't like that way of doing things. I don't like to get in debt. I will go and see him."

And he did go and see him. The doctor was a rich man, and offered to take Edward's note, payable any time he pleased, which offer the latter eagerly accepted, promising to take it up in six months.

No change for the better appeared in the affairs of the young couple. Maria kept asking for money, and she was so pretty, so sweet-tempered, and so gentle, that Edward could never refuse. If he demurred, she coaxed it out of him.

At the end of six months, the doctor's note was due, and Edward could not pay it. He had borrowed money till he was ashamed to do so any more. But he had a nice sense of honor, and instead of letting his creditor whistle for his pay, he went to see him to produce a further extension.

"Doctor, I am hard up," said he.

"Sorry to hear it."

"My family is getting to be expensive."

"Be prudent, then."

"I can't, my wife—"

He checked himself. He was impulsive, and did not mean to say anything about Maria.

"What of her? Is she extravagant?"

"Well, yes."

"Put the bit in her mouth, then," laughed the doctor.

"Don't like to do that."

"Musn't let her ruin you."

"I hope she will not."

"Be firm, Lester. There is only one way to do with an extravagant woman; shut down upon her before she ruins you."

"I haven't courage to deny her."

"I'm sorry for you; what can I do for you?" asked the doctor, who seemed to be in the best of humor.

"That little note of mine—"

"What note?"

"Why, the one I owe."

"But you paid that."

"Come, doctor, you are quizzing me."

"'Pon my soul, I am not. Didn't you pay it a few days after you gave the note?"

"No, surely," replied Edward, confounded by the statement.

"But I am sure you did. Here," continued the doctor, pulling an account book from his pocket, "here is where I entered the cash. You have got the note."

"Not I."

"Look over your papers and you will find it. I will go home with you."

They repaired to the cottage, and Edward, all the time protesting that he had not paid the money, ransacked the papers for the note.

"There it is!" exclaimed the doctor, pointing to a paper.

To Edward's astonishment he read the note, with the signature torn off. He was utterly confounded at the discovery. He had no recollection of having paid it, and Maria declared she had not seen him pay it.

He was mystified, but was satisfied with the result, though he could hardly believe it. If any one had paid it, it must have been his guardian angel, and he hoped she would not charge him the amount.

Three years from the time of Edward's introduction to the reader had passed away, and his finances were in no better condition. By a great deal of entrenchment of his own expenses he had contrived to keep out of debt. Instead of dining at Parker's at an expense of five or six dollars a week, he made a quarter of that sum suffice. His tailor's bill had been reduced one-half, and all other bills in proportion. Better than all, he had been cured of grumbling at Maria, for if he complained of anything she was sure to ask him for a fifty dollar bill on the same day. In fact, he was afraid of her.

Maria, in her demand for money, had been even more remorseless during the last year than before, and had actually taken eight hundred dollars of his two thousand. And there was not much show of it in the house or upon her person. If he had hinted at an explanation she turned him off so sweetly and adroitly that he could not resist.

"Maria, we must turn over a new leaf," he remarked. "Here I am without a dollar in the world—and never shall have while things go on in this way. I have given you eight hundred dollars this last year."

"Have you, indeed? What is eight hundred dollars?" chuckled she.

"There is Raymond's house opposite, for sale. It is a beautiful place, and can be bought for four thousand dollars, by paying fifteen hundred down. I was thinking if I had saved my money I might have been able to buy that place."

"No use to cry for spilt milk, Edward," replied Maria.

"I know that, but we needn't spill any more milk. I have been very economical the past year;" and he proceeded to detail the retrenchments he had made.

"You have done very well, Edward."

"Yes, my dear, better than you have done. Who would have thought I should ever preach economy to you?" he laughed.

"What was the use for me to be prudent while you scatter your money like chaff?" asked the wife with infinite good humor.

"No use, I confess."

"I will turn over a new leaf if you will. You used to find fault with me because I couldn't buy strawberries at sixty cents a box."

"I haven't lately."

"No, you haven't."

"And I never will again. Now, Maria, I was thinking if we could save up four or five hundred a year for three or four years we might buy a house."

"Very true, we will begin now, if you like."

"With all my heart."

"You shall allow me a fixed sum for my personal expenses."

"Say two hundred dollars."

"Half that sum will do."

"But you can't come down all at once from eight hundred to one hundred."

"Yes, I can," replied the pretty woman, the mischief gleaming in her radiant eyes.

"Then we can buy a house in three years."

"Suppose you buy Raymond's now!"

"But I cannot. I haven't a dollar in the world after my bills are paid."

"Then I will let you have fifteen hundred dollars to pay down."

"You? You are facetious, Maria. What are you laughing at?"

Maria, for some reason or other, had burst into a violent fit of laughing.

"You shall have the money, Edward. But you must promise me not to tell any one what an extravagant wife you have, as you did Dr. Smith."

"What do you mean, Maria? Forgive me for that!"

"I will, my dear," replied she; and going to a drawer she produced two bank books and placed them in her husband's hand.

One of them indicated that she had a thousand dollars in one savings bank, and the other six hundred in another bank. Of course, Edward was astonished—it was his duty to be astonished.

"Your extravagant wife has saved sixteen hundred dollars of your money in spite of your teeth, besides curing you of sundry reckless habits." And she threw herself upon a sofa and laughed until she had nearly gone into a fit.

"Maria, you are a jewel! I am amazed. You paid Dr. Smith?"

"I did."

"He lied to me then."

"No, he didn't; you and I are one, so of course you paid it. I had to tell him my secret, and in return he informed me what an excellent character you had given me for prudence and economy."

"Forgive me, Maria. You have made me the happiest man in the world."

"And I am revenged."

"Revenged?"

"You found fault with me every day when you came home, and I resolved to punish you. I knew you would not refuse me money, and I have at length brought you to your senses."

"I see where the money went to, now."

"Do you, indeed?"

"To tell the truth, I thought there was very little show for the money I gave you."

Sixteen hundred dollars, money in hand, was a large sum to Edward, who had spent everything as fast as he got it. He felt like a new man—like a rich man. What a treasure was Maria, who, besides being pretty, sweet-tempered and devoted, was a thorough financier.

For my part, I should not like a financier on any other terms. A prudent, but growling, ill-tempered shrew, would be my abomination; and before her I should prefer a pretty, sweet-tempered, devoted woman, who would spend all I could get.

The Raymond place, and a delightful place it was, immediately came into Edward's possession. It is paid for now, and our friends are as happy as during their honeymoon."

Incredible Inhumanity.

From Philadelphia comes a story of brutal treatment to an old man nearly seventy-five years of age, by his son, a second-hand clothes dealer, in one of the slums of the city. The old man had about $200, which the son succeeded in getting hold of, and soon the father disappeared. The police got wind of the affair and made a search about the premises for the missing man. The son was asked what he had in his cellar, and he immediately replied that he was keeping his dogs there, but denied that his aged father was imprisoned in the wretched hole. This denial, however, did not satisfy the officers, and they concluded to explore the cellar for themselves. The door was unlocked and the two officers went down into the cimmerian darkness. They had provided themselves with a candle, fortunately, and struck a light. The white-haired old man was discovered lying upon a rotten straw mattress in one corner of the black hole, in a terrible plight. The atmosphere of the damp abode was staggering and poisonous, there being no ventilation in any nook or corner.

Around him was a pack of savage dogs, while the dirt floor was strewn with bones and half-eaten plucks in an advanced stage of decomposition, and emitting a horrifying stench. The unnatural son had not a word of apology to utter in extenuation of the cruel usage of his father, but the latter complained bitterly. The son was ordered to take his parent out of the dog pit, which he did. Not satisfied with the persecution he had already inflicted, the son took the old man across the street to an empty house which he had rented, and locked him up in it. There was no bed in it for him to sleep upon, no chair upon which to sit, no light to dispel the nightly gloom, and no companionship but the huge rats which thrive in great communities among the shambles and dens of the street. In this miserable rookery the old man existed for three days and nights, his son taking him water and cold scraps of victuals once a day with which to ward off starvation. Finally, another son, who had heard of the fiendish treatment which the old man was receiving, came and took him away to his home in West Philadelphia.

PROGRESS IN AFRICA.

Americans Lead the Way—What the Yankee is Doing Toward Civilizing Africa.

The London Daily News publishes an interesting account from Egypt of the progress of the Khedive's officers in exploring and opening up the interior of Africa to civilization, from which we extract the following:

Col. Long, the young American officer, who made himself famous by his daring and successful expedition to M'tesa, and who has since made other equally successful explorations, has returned to Cairo, bringing back live natives of different tribes, together with many curious war weapons and implements, showing the different degrees of civilization attained. He gives a most graphic account of his adventures, and may be expected soon in Europe to make preparations for other explorations which are to be entrusted to him, to penetrate farther into the heart of Africa under the Khedive's auspices. Seven steamers now ply between Khartoun and Ragaff, above which the rapids render the Nile unnavigable. The distance between Khartoun and Gordon's headquarters is over 1,000 miles.

He has established lines of posts so as to keep his communications open, and has made peace with the tribes with whom Baker was at war, adroitly availing himself of Abou Saood (Baker's bete noir) in the first place, and then dismissing him, thus checking the slave trade most effectually by turning its instruments to other uses. Gordon has proved a great success, and his occupation of the country has cost the government nothing, as he has made it self-sustaining by the produce he has sent to Cairo. Col. Purdy (an American officer in the Khedive's service) has reached the capital of Darfur, and reports that there is plenty of water in the Nile between that point and the point of his departure, so that the obstacles which baffled Baker seems no longer to exist.

Col. Colston (also an American officer) is pushing on probably into the interior by another route; while Mitchell, the geologist of the Gordon expedition, who is not from Kennar, between the Nile and the Red Sea, has discovered two gold mines, formerly worked in ancient times, the shaft still open. He reports that with modern appliances one of these shafts could be profitably worked. In fact, the energetic Khedive, seconded by equally energetic officers, is pushing explorations of all kinds into this terra incognita with a success equal to his efforts. Germany is working along the western coast of Africa; France is organizing an expedition from Senegal; Stanley is pushing on from the eastern coast, and the dream of the heroic Livingstone seems at last in process of speedy fulfillment.

Four European Powers have successfully established themselves on the western coast of Africa—Dutch, Portuguese, French and English. For 235 years the Dutch flag floated over the Fort of Elmina, on which Maurice of Nassau placed it in 1737, after which it was abandoned. France has long held Senegal, and England Sierra Leone and the adjacent dependencies, and Portugal since 1415 has been an African land-holder, still holding Lower Guinea. But, with justice, this region has ever been considered the unhealthiest on the globe; while the Nile basin, with cultivation and civilization, is capable of becoming a garden, according to the more recent account of its explorers.

A Ghost Worth Having Around.

The Bridgeport (Ct.) Farmer says that city possesses a wonderful materializing medium. The story is as follows: "It was only a few weeks ago that the person to whom we refer became conscious of his peculiar powers, but since his discovery he has continued to exercise them and they have rapidly developed. Thus far the seances have been held in the presence of a small party of his acquaintances, in a darkened room, which, with the exception of a small table, is utterly destitute of furniture. No believer in spiritualism had yet attended these sittings, so that it cannot be said that any of his audience were unduly prepared to give credence to the genuineness of the manifestation, and yet all of the spectators with whom we have conversed are convinced that there was no collusion or trickery in the effects produced. One of the remarkable feats performed by the spirits is the bringing upon the table a supply of fresh tropical flowers. The flowers exhale a beautiful fragrance, are fresh with dew, and of varieties which cannot be produced in this vicinity. The members of the circle the other evening were also regaled with splendid cigars dropped upon the table by spirit visitors, and the medium himself was refreshed a day or two ago with a plate of ice cream furnished by the same mysterious agency. The medium can also materialize the spirits so that they become visible to those in the room. The spirits also play on musical instruments and write messages on the wall and table, which to the ordinary observers are mere hieroglyphics, but to the spiritual vision of the medium are really intelligible."

A Long Fast.

About one year ago Mr. Wm. Fallon, of the town of Harmony, Wis., missed one of his pigs, and after diligently searching for the same, gave it up as lost. A few days ago he had occasion to remove a straw-stack which was built about the time the pig was missed, and on reaching the bottom he was astonished on finding the missing pig, which was alive, but reduced somewhat in flesh. Mr. Fallon gave the pig all the milk it could drink immediately on taking it out of its prison, from the effects of which it died shortly afterward.

YESTERDAY, when an old lady on the Barber street cars got out a nickel to pay her fare, a gentleman held out his hand to take it and save her the trouble of leaving her seat.

"What you want?" she demanded, giving him a keen look.

"I'll pay your fare for you," he politely replied.

"I'd just like to see you or any one else get hold of my money!" she exclaimed. "I've traveled afore this, and I know what I'm about—I do!"

And she strutted forward and deposited her fare in the box.—Detroit Free Press.

Useful Information.

WHITE mustard seed, swallowed whole, will relieve constipation.

TAR and sweet oil, thoroughly mixed, will make boots water-proof.

IT is said that inflammatory rheumatism may be cured by bathing the parts affected with oil and saltpeter—half-an-ounce of pulverized saltpeter in half-a-pint of the oil.

GREASE SPOTS FROM CARPETS.—To take spots out of carpets, mix a little soap in a gallon of soft warm water, then add half an ounce of borax; wash the part well with a clean cloth, and the grease or dirty spot will soon be invisible.

TO MAKE INDELIBLE INK.—Take one and two-thirds parts of nitrate of silver; sixteen parts of distilled water, two parts of gum-arabic, and one-third part of sap-green. The nitrate of silver is first dissolved in the distilled water, and the gum-arabic and sap-green are subsequently added.

TO GIVE glass great brilliancy, take finely powdered indigo, dip into it a moistened linen rag, smear over the glass with it, and then wipe the indigo off with a perfectly dry cloth. As a substitute for this, fine sifted ashes, applied with a rag dipped in spirits, will answer.

FOR THE TEETH.—Dissolve two ounces of borax in three pints of boiling water, and before it cools entirely, add one teaspoonful of spirits of camphor and bottle for use. One tablespoonful in an ordinary glass of water is sufficient when washing the teeth. It is not necessary to apply the brush with unusual force. The effect is pleasant, and the teeth are always clean and healthy, making the breath pure and sweet.

FOR WASHING CLOTHES.—The following is the finest fluid known for washing clothes, no rubbing being required: For a large washing taking half a pound of good brown soap, cut in small pieces; half a pound washing soda; three ounces unslacked lime; mix in one gallon of boiling water and let stand over night. In the morning have ready ten gallons of boiling water in clothes boiler and strain the liquid previously prepared into it. Separate the white pieces and cleanest articles from the colored and dirtier clothes and boil them the usual time first, then the remainder of the selected pieces in like manner. Take them out, scald, rinse and blue, and the washing is as white as snow. The cost is but a trifle.

Pigeon-Shooting Extraordinary.

There was a large gathering of prominent sporting men at Jones' woods today, to witness a pigeon-match, in which Capt. Bogardus, champion wing shot of America, was to kill 50 birds inside of 8 minutes, and to load his own gun. Bogardus had to stand 21 yards from the basket of birds, load his own gun, and kill 50 pigeons in 8 minutes. The pigeons were brought on the ground and a table put in front, upon which Bogardus arranged his ammunition. Will Johnson attended to the pigeons, and threw two into the air as fast as Bogardus loaded his gun. The shooter brought down the birds quickly, seldom letting them fly over 50 yards. The birds were all strong ones, and left the hands of Will Johnson as if they were anxious to fly back where they came from—New Jersey. Bogardus was just 2 minutes and 30 seconds in killing the first 20 birds. He killed the next 10 in a minute. He brought down 30 dead birds in 3 minutes and 30 seconds. He killed 40 in 5 minutes and 10 seconds; 48 in 6 minutes and 15 seconds, and 50 in 7 minutes and 30 seconds. Altogether he shot at 60 pigeons, or 30 pairs. He killed 50, the others flying away, some injured, and others falling dead in the distance, inside of 8 minutes, with 30 seconds to spare, which is a wonderful performance.—New York Sun.

English Seamen.

A disturbance of rather a serious character has occurred on board the Triumph, one of the channel squadron ships now at Devonport, in England. The men have been refused the privilege accorded until the appointment of the present Commodore, of congregating on the upper deck for conversation prior to turning in for the night; and the disaffection thus occasioned is said to have been increased by the fact that a seaman's leave has been stopped for 10 days because he wore elastic side boots, on the ground that in wearing them he was not in uniform. The men at first manifested their disaffection by chalking up in conspicuous parts of the ship uncomplimentary and threatening phrases to the commander, and growling in an undertone at him as he walked his rounds. Eventually a spit kettle was thrown at him by some of the crew, and he was struck in the leg with considerable violence. The quartermaster was summoned on deck, but he was unable to identify the offenders. Swabs and other things have since been continually thrown about, and a court of inquiry is regarded as certain. The seaman punished for wearing elastic side boots has had his grog stopped, stands two hours by himself on the upper deck daily, and a sentry watches over him while he takes his rations.

An Incorrigible Window-Smasher.

Ten years ago, a man named Richard Hampton broke the shop window of a harmless watchmaker in Woolwich, England. He was sent to prison for nine months, and on the very day of his discharge returned to Woolwich and smashed the same window. This time the Court gave him eighteen months; and once more, on the day his sentence expired, he returned and again broke the same window. His third sentence was for ten years; but the other day he was, for good conduct, discharged on a ticket of leave, having served nearly eight years. Promptly for the fourth time, he went straight to Woolwich, and once more smashed the same window, and being thereupon brought into court for a fourth sentence, he remarked that he would break that window as often as he got the chance, for the rest of his life. He is now in for another ten years.

SWEET TIME.

Sweet time of apple bloom!
When winds breathe low and calm;
And all the earth enchanted seems,
As wrapp'd in sweet and [illegible];
The pulse beats softly, lest a throb
The vision might dispel.

Sweet time of apple bloom!
When through the perfumed air
The birds flit lightly, to and fro,
Sing softly, chirp, and twitter low;
As if the brooding wings of peace
Hover'd the new-born spring.

Sweet time of apple bloom!
When boughs, fresh garlanded,
Distant woo the bee with rosy lip,
From golden hearts the sweet to sip,
And o'er the sparkling nectar sing
Their song of full content!

Sweet time of apple bloom!
When life its [illegible] renews,
And, clasping memory's faithful hand,
Goes through the shadow-haunted land,
Adown that sacred Appian Way
No alien foot may tread.

Sweet time of apple bloom!
When haunting beauty fills
The eager eye; the longing heart,
That worn with storm's and sorrow's smart,
Sees in thy bloom fair prototype
Of an immortal spring.

A GENTLEMAN in want of a house for the summer months, in a little town on the west coast of Ireland, found a commodious residence close to the beach. Abandonment of the Penikese School.

The Anderson School of Natural History, located on Penikese Island, in Buzzard's Bay, which was founded at the expense of so much exertion, money and anxiety on the part of the late Prof. Louis Agassiz and others, appears to be undergoing about the last mutation an institution of the kind is able to stand. It was the intention of the trustees to establish a permanent fund of $150,000, and run a steamer between the island and New Bedford daily, thus reducing the price of supplies at the island, and greatly augmenting the attractiveness of the place. The death of the projector, however, was a death blow to the prospects of the institution, which, indeed, has ceased to be an institution at all. The existing trustees of the remains of the school appear not to have been of late, at least, kept well posted respecting the financial condition of their trust, and much dissatisfaction is said to have resulted from a clear statement of facts by the treasurer. However this may be, it appears that definite action has been taken upon the matter, and that all movable property connected with the concern is to be turned into cash under the hammer of a Boston auctioneer for the benefit of creditors. A small portion of the school paraphernalia, such as would not pay for moving, has been given to the school at Wood's Hole.—Boston Journal.

TRANSPORTATION.

Water-Routes and Railways—The Cheap Transportation [illegible] Discussed.

We print below that portion of the late address of the Hon. James R. Doolittle before the Winnebago County (Ill.) Agricultural Society relating to the transportation question:

[illegible] I bring [illegible] to [illegible] to the farmers of Winnebago county. I might come here to learn it. But there are two or three topics upon which I have bestowed much and anxious thought, topics of great interest to every farmer and to every friend of republican institutions. They are embraced in two questions:

[illegible] the great highways of commerce a cheap and free transportation of heavy products?

Second. How shall we save our republic from the dangers and frauds of elections, as conducted, especially in large cities?

[illegible] second involves our liberties. The one concerns the bodies, the other the souls of men.

In my opinion the great value of water routes has been underrated since railways have come. Americans are [illegible]. With them it never rains; it always pours. From one extreme the pendulum swings to the other. I would not underrate the power and value of railways. They can hardly be overstated. They have become a great force in modern civilization. In common with all our people I have [illegible] power [illegible], and which charms us. I can never look upon a locomotive, moving upon its track of iron or steel, with a train, at thirty miles an hour, without a feeling of awe and admiration. I see in it an emblem of Infinite Power. I see in it an outgrowth of the thought and invention of all [illegible]

But the truth is, in railway building, as in other business, our intense Americanism has itself shown. Our zeal, energy, and faith in the future of everything American have run away with our discretion. We have built too many railroads for the time. They may be good enough for the next generation; but the thing has been overdone for the present.

Indeed, it is in this that we find the immediate cause of the panic of 1873, the end of which we have not reached.

If two railways are built where one can do the business, and, by doing all, make a fair profit, or interest upon the capital invested, at rates which, when the business is divided between two, will bankrupt both, two consequences follow:

First. There has been so much loss or destruction of capital to the country, for the present, laid out in useless rails, in useless bridges, and in "digging useless holes in the ground," as if all that one of them cost, in gold, had been thrown into the sea.

This premature building of thousands of miles of railway, which do not pay running expenses and repairs, has produced the same present effect as if all the money they cost were wholly lost. It is not so much the want of money—the want of gold and silver, or of currency—that men feel so keenly now, as the want of something to buy money with; the want of collaterals to borrow it on. It is that which distresses our people. The waste of capital, labor and population by the late civil war, from which we have by no means recovered as yet; the enormous debt and constant drain of taxation which follows it; the extravagance of our people in their houses and in their living, made the burden all that we could bear. Add to that the enormous cost of building thousands of miles of railways that do not pay, and we realize what has eaten out our substance, and made the heavy burden under which we groan. I repeat, the destruction of capital, without returns, in making useless railways, pushed forward by speculators in town lots, railway construction rings and Credit Mobiliers, of which Jay Cooke was a leading spirit, brought on the panic of 1873.

But let us return to the case supposed, of building two railways to do the business of one. Not only can one do the business cheaper than two, and the whole cost of one is lost, but a second consequence is likely to follow. One or both become insolvent, the weaker comes under the control of the stronger, or both under control of some other mammoth corporation, so that what was begun to make competition, and thereby cheapen rates, fails of its purpose, and ends in monopoly.

I do not deny that some great through lines may, and do, fairly compete, and thus cheapen rates. The railways from independent seaports, like Portland, Boston, New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore, when operated in the interests of the great cities where they terminate, do that. They cheapen freights to the seaboard. But even these combine, sometimes, to put freights up.

A half dozen railway managers, in an hour, may confer by telegraph, and raise passenger rates at will.

They may fix the price of freights in winter time, and in summer up to a certain point. Beyond that they cannot go. But what is the power that restrains; that regulates them in the summer time? The cheap water routes of the lakes and of the Erie canal.

Without underrating railways; without rushing headlong to the other extreme, of foolishly and prematurely wasting capital in useless and chimerical water routes; wisely confining ourselves to what is practicable, feasible and economical, let us turn our attention once more to the opening and improvement of the great water routes, as the great regulators of commerce.

In due time let us, therefore, hope to see the Erie canal made deeper and wider; with its banks walled, if necessary, to prevent washing when navigated by steam, so as greatly to increase its capacity. Let us hope to see the water routes through the Dominion opened, and the St. Lawrence improved, so that vessels of large burthen from Liverpool can come into Lake Michigan. Let us hope, too, that with a lighter tariff of duties, a diminished public debt, and a freer commercial intercourse, before the close of this century we shall see the Dominion itself seeking to enter the Union of States, and to become a part of this great Republic of the world.

Long before that let us hope to see, also, the canal from Chicago to the Illinois river enlarged to one hundred and sixty feet in width, and eight or ten feet in depth; the Illinois river improved, until every steamboat on the Mississippi which comes above St. Louis will come into the harbor of Chicago, there to meet the vessels of the lakes and ocean. Then Chicago would become the head of river navigation, as it is now of lake navigation. By such a canal a river of pure water from Lake Michigan, flowing from one to two miles an hour, will pour through a city of a million inhabitants, giving it health and commerce, and creating, as it falls at Joliet and at other places on its way to the Illinois, water powers which will add to the working force of this great State more than a million men.

Before that time, let us hope the Hennepin canal, and Rock river canal feeder leading into it, will be completed; and, thereby, the commerce of this valley made forever cheap, open to all, and free from monopoly. Railways, of necessity, tend to centralize power over commerce. Water routes always tend to freedom, and to guard the equal rights of all.

Let us hope, also, that long before that time the Fox and Wisconsin river improvement, from Green Bay to Prairie du Chien, of first importance to the States of Wisconsin, Iowa and Minnesota, will be fully completed.

Again, let us turn our eyes toward the South to contemplate what the future may do when enterprise, free labor, and free emigration shall come into full play in that great country, so long oppressed by negro slavery. Let us hope to see fully realized the great idea of Jefferson, when he purchased Louisiana to give to the United States control of the natural outlet of the valley of the Mississippi. Let us hope to see the mouths of that river deepened so as to admit the largest ships of the ocean, and ocean vessels of more than a thousand tons burthen, to ascend that river to Cairo and St. Louis.

Let us hope to see, at last, the [illegible] by Washington so long ago, fully realized by a union of the waters of the Ohio and of the Chesapeake, by the Kanawha and the James. Let us hope to see the union of the navigable waters of the Tennessee and the Alabama; and many other great natural water routes from time to time opened and improved in all the States of the South, where winter is so mild as hardly to interrupt water navigation at all.

When all these things come, as they surely will come, if we preserve the Union of the States and maintain the republican institutions [illegible] at the close of this century! Covering so [illegible] of this new world; peopled as it is by the most energetic and enterprising from [illegible] civilized nations and their children, not [illegible] the golden kingdom [illegible] the silver kingdom [illegible], nor the brazen kingdom of the Grecians, nor the iron kingdom of the Romans, ever equaled it.

The "Herald's" Lightning Train.

To commemorate the [illegible] lightning express train [illegible] 1875, the managers of the Herald invited representatives from the papers in New York city and vicinity to enjoy the trip on Sunday last to Buffalo. The Commercial gives an account of the trip, from which we [illegible]:

"At Syracuse the train was ten minutes late. [illegible] was attached to it the famous locomotive No. 110, with the [illegible] "Jem" Wood, and after breakfast the train was whistling along again. It was from Rochester to Buffalo that the "lightning" feature was really exhibited. Palmyra, 58 miles, was run in [illegible] minutes, a gain of 8 minutes. Between Batavia and Buffalo 3 miles were run at the extraordinary rate of 75 miles an hour, while the whole run, 25 miles, was made in 30 minutes, and the train arrived in Buffalo 10 minutes ahead of time. The stretch to Niagara Falls [illegible] was done at the ordinary rate of speed, reaching there on time. To persons sitting in the car during the fast traveling a most unaccountable feeling was experienced. To walk through the car was impossible. Telegraph posts were passed at an average of one in two seconds, while trees and hedges in many instances appeared to be an interminable mass of bramble and brush. Many persons in the cars were alarmed, although the high rate of speed seemed to be generally admired. All along the route at every house were people gazing at the swiftly passing train, with wonder and amazement depicted on their countenances, and in one instance people rushed from a little country church, which bordered on the roadside, stood for an instant, and as the train whirled around a curve the astonished worshipers were seen re-entering the church.

A Story About King David.

The following extract is from an interesting article on the Talmud in the Cornhill Magazine:

"There is a touching passage in the book of Psalms—all the more affecting from its mysterious wording—a passage which few sincere Christians can read without tears, in which David, who has evidently been lately suffering some serious distress, prays to be saved from the lion's mouth, 'for,' says he, 'Thou hast heard me from the horns of the unicorns.' Now here the difficulty, of course, lies in the unexpected introduction of the unicorns. Adam Clarke satisfies himself with saying that the Psalmist alludes to the Gentiles. Not so Rab Hunah, in the Midrash Tehillim, who thus explains the passage literally without recourse to allegorical exegesis. When David was feeding sheep he found one day a unicorn sleeping in the desert. He took him for a high hill, and ascending pastured his flock. The beast, after awhile, awoke, rose, and David rising with him, touched the heavens with his hand. Then said the son of Jesse in this unexpected emergency, 'If the Lord will help me down from this unicorn, I will build him a house of a hundred cubits, the size of this animal's horn.' Some say he measured its width, others its length. Plenary agreement on any subject in this world seems impossible. What occurred? a lion came. The unicorn crouched in fear, and David descended. Then he became anxious about the lion, and it was on this occasion, or soon after it, that the affecting lines above were composed."

WILHOFT'S ANTI-PERIODIC OR FEVER AND AGUE TONIC.—This invaluable and standard family medicine is now a household word, and maintains its reputation unimpaired. It is indorsed by the medical profession, and prescribed daily in the Charity Hospital and other Hospitals in New Orleans. Wilhoft's Tonic is thus highly recommended by the leading medical men of the country, and is worthy of such indorsement. WHEELOCK, FINLAY & CO., Proprietors, New Orleans.

Sarsaparillian Resolvent,

THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.

1. [illegible] melancholy [illegible] sine, etc.

2. [illegible] for food, no more sour eructations [illegible] good digestion, calm and undisturbed sleep, awaken fresh and vigorous.

3. [illegible] skin [illegible] changed from the bad and cloudy appearance to a clear sherry or amber color [illegible] no pain or weakness.

4. Marked [illegible] involuntary weakening discharges (if afflicted that way) [illegible] exhibited in the secreting glands, and functional harmony restored to the several organs.

5. Yellow tinge on the white of the eyes, and the swarthy, saffron appearance of the skin changed to a clear, lively and healthy color.

6. Those suffering from weak or ulcerated lungs and tubercles will realize great benefit in expectorating freely the tough phlegm or mucous from the lungs, air cells, bronchi or windpipe, throat or head; diminishing of the frequency of cough; general increase of strength throughout the system; stoppage of night sweats and pains and feeling of weakness around the ankles, legs, shoulders, etc.; cessation of cold and chills, sense of suffocation; hard breathing and paroxysms of cough on lying down or arising in the morning. All these distressing symptoms gradually and surely disappear.

7. As day after day the SARSAPARILLIAN is taken, new signs of returning health will appear; as the blood improves in strength and purity, disease will diminish, and all foreign and impure deposits, nodes, tumors, cancers, hard lumps, etc., be resolved away and the unsound made sound and healthy; ulcers, fever sores, syphilitic sores, chronic skin diseases gradually disappear.

8. In cases where the system has been salivated, and Mercury, Quicksilver, Corrosive Sublimate, (the principal constituent in the advertised Sarsaparillas, associated in some cases with Hyd. of Potassa) have accumulated and become deposited in the bones, joints, etc., causing caries of the bones, rickets, spinal curvatures, contortions, white swellings, varicose veins, etc., the SARSAPARILLIAN will resolve away these deposits and exterminate the virus of the disease from the system.

9. If those who are taking these medicines for the cure of Chronic, Scrofulous or Syphilitic diseases, however slow may be the cure "feel better," and find their general health improving, their flesh and weight increasing or even keeping its own, it is a sure sign that the cure is progressing. In these diseases the patient either gets better or worse—the virus of the disease is not inactive; if not arrested and driven from the blood, it will spread and continue to undermine the constitution. As soon as the SARSAPARILLIAN makes the patient "feel better," every hour you will grow better and increase in health, strength and flesh.

The great [illegible] threaten death—as in Consumption of the Lungs and Tuberculous Phthisis, Scrofula, [illegible] Diseases, Wasting, Degeneration, and Ulceration of the Kidneys, Diabetes, Stoppage of Water (instantaneous relief afforded where catheters have to be used, thus doing away with the painful operation of using these instruments), dissolving stone in the bladder, and in all cases of Inflammation of the Bladder and Kidneys; in Chronic cases of Leucorrhœa and Uterine diseases.

In tumors, nodes, hard lumps and syphilitic ulcers; in dropsy and [illegible] ulcers, and in tubercles of the lungs [illegible]; in mercurial [illegible] disease, where the human body has become a complete wreck, and where every hour of existence is torture, [illegible] the astonishment and admiration of the sick. It is in such cases, where all the pleasures of existence appear cut off from the unfortunate, and by the wonderful, almost supernatural, agency, it restores the [illegible] to a new existence where this great remedy stands alone in its might and power.

In the ordinary skin diseases that every one is more or less troubled with, a few doses will in most cases, and a few bottles in the more aggravated forms, work a permanent cure.

Those afflicted with chronic diseases should purchase a package containing one dozen bottles. Price $10 per dozen, or $1 per bottle [illegible] per bottle. Sold by druggists.

AUBURN INDIANA, SEPT., 30, 1875

[illegible] Orth, writing from Vienna, says that he has yet to see a single drunken person where everybody drinks wine and beer.

A telegraph dispatch states that Governor Kellogg, of Louisiana, called upon the attorney general, and approved the course of that gentleman in refusing troops to the call of Gov. Ames, of Mississippi. In view of the fact that Kellogg's usurpation is only born with by the outraged citizens of Louisiana because it is backed by Federal troops, this may be considered as one of the sublimest pieces of impudence on record.

If the north pole is not discovered by the present British scientific expedition, there is not much use in trying it any longer. The party will winter less than eight degrees from the pole giving all of next summer to complete the remaining 450 miles. This expedition is fitted out with all sorts of scientific apparatus, especially for clambering over the rugged fields of ice which have heretofore proven an insurmountable barrier to the northern explorers.

Another idol has been dashed in pieces. A Mexican soldier who was seated by the side of Gen. Taylor at the battle of Buena Vista, says that the expression, "A little more grape, Capt. Bragg," was never uttered — Bragg did dash up to the general and asked what he should do, as he was in imminent danger of losing his battery. And Taylor replied, "Capt. Bragg,it is better to lose a battery than a battle." Thus perishes another of that large family of golden sayings which ruthless modern investigation is consigning to unmerited oblivion.

In spite of the pacific dispatches lately sent from the seat of war in the Turkish provinces, it is quite likely that there wi'l yet be a full fledged war. The hatred of race and religious differences have been smoldering for years, and the recent outbreak will not be so easily quelled. The neutral attitude of Servia has had the effect to delay hostilities, but it is quite apparent that the peace party in that province is composed of the reiging prince and the nobility, and that their good will has probably been purchased with Turkish gold. The people are in full sympathy with their brothern of Herzegovina and Bosnia, which has lately joined the insurrection, and it is next to certain that all the states of northern Turkey will follow suit. In this case the dismemberment of the Ottoman empire in the west will be a foregone conclusion.

Of the financial plan of the Erie convention, the Pittsburg Post (dem.) says: "The idle clamor of a few ringsters about the currency will avail nothing. The democracy do not depart from ancient faith, that gold and silver are the constitutional basis of of the currency. To reach this without bankrupting the masses is the aim of the party. The wisdom of this course is made apparent by studying the result of the cruel fallacy of forced resumption. It is yet more than four years until the time fixed by the act of last winter, and what is the result? Already the currency is locked up, business is prostrated, manufactures are nearly at a stand-still, and the condition of things are growing worse every day, and unless this unwise and wicked act is repealed, will continue to grow worse, until the financial crash comes with the attempt to force it."

William T. Alexander, Postmaster at Jacksonville, Ala., occupies a unique position before the great American public. He is a democrat, but yet holds a position as a Federal office-holder. He was appointed on the 18th of last August. Upon the receipt of his appointment, to set him self right before his neighbors, he published a card, saying that if he did consent to serve the Government he was yet no minion of Grant's.— Upon the publication of this bold card certain people in his town have tried to persuade the Postmaster-General to remove him on account of his disloyalty. Jewell has investigated his case and has found that there is not a republican in the town capable of discharging the duties of Postmaster; that Alexander is an efficient officer and upon this ground his commission which has been held back ever since the date of his appointment, was issued to him to-day.

Ex-Governor Curtin of Pennsylvania a war governor, now a Republican minister, is to speak in Ohio for Governor Allen.

Surely Delano has at last resigned. Grant says he has filled that position with ability and integrity. Prof Marsh, who was sent to investigate the Indian frauds thinks otherwise and so does the public.

Notice to Tax Payers.

Tax payers are hereby notified, that the Legislature of last winter changed the time in the law for paying the 2nd installment of taxes. The time expires this year on the 30th day of October instead of the 15th day of November, as it has been before. The following is the section of law passed by the Legislature.

SECTION 1st. Any person or tax payer, charged with taxes on a tax duplicate in the hands of a county Treasurer may pay the full amount of such taxes on or before the 3rd Monday of April or may at his option, pay one half thereof, on or before such 3rd Monday of November following, provided, however, that all road taxes so charged shall be paid prior to the first Monday of November, in the manner provided by law, and provided further, that in all cases where as much as one half of the amount of the taxes charged against a tax payer, shall not be paid on or before the 3rd Monday in April, the whole amount shall become due and be returned delinquent and collected as provided by law.

Remember that the time expires this year on the 30th day of October instead of the 15th day of November as heretofore. The new law requires me to commence my settlement with the Auditor on the first Monday of November, so that all taxes remaining unpaid at that date will be returned delinquent, with 10 per cent. penalty and collected as required by law.

Collectors will be entitled to mileage from the Court House door to where the delinquent tax payer lives under the new law instead of from the voting place of the tax payer to where he lives, as it was under the old law.

Do not put off paying until the last few days but come early, or we cannot make the receipts, for as yet only a few have paid their 2nd installment.

Yours respectfully,
NICHOLAS ENSLEY, Treas.

A fire at Marshal, Mich., last Friday night, destroyed the principal hotel.—Three persons who could not escape were burned to death, and a number wounded.

The Waterloo "Press" seems to think that there is nothing in the rumor that Judge Best intends resigning, and ascribes it to the over anxiety of aspiring lawyers.

The "Press" tries to be funny over a typographical error in the COURIER. We have only to refer to a similar error in the "Press" during the fair last fall, to silence the battery of our neighbor.

If some party would run a hack from this place to Waterloo during the fair, would do well financially. Start at 8 o'clock and return at about the same hour in the evening.

The attorney general says he is unable to find now any law now in force in the state, which authorizes justices of the peace to tax up costs for the attendance or mileage of witnesses. He is inclined to think, however, that justices still possess the power, notwithstanding, to compel the attendance of witnesses before them.

W. H. Dills, Esq., delivered a fine address on the subject of Temperance, last Monday evening. The Grangers gave us some marshal music as the passed through town on their way to the pic-nic grounds, last Tuesday. After passing Seventh Street, a fellow about six foot tall, standing in a pair of buckle shoes that looked like twin herring boxes, said to his big brother:

"I want to be a granger
And by the grangers stand,
With music al. around me,
And a banner in my hand."

CATARRH.—If you would avoid being rendered deaf, or unfit to mingle in society, on account of foul and nauseating discharges from gangrenous ulcers in the head, use Dr. Detchon's celebrated Catarrh Remedy. It immediately arrests its progress, and if perseveringly used, will never disappoint in a cure. Go to Davenport's Drug Store, and get a sample bottle free. Sept. 30-y

No Connection.

We are authorized to state that the popular clothing man of Waterloo Jacob Kahn, has just returned from the east with an immense stock of clothing, dry goods, Boots & Shoes, and has now the entire stock opened out for the inspection of the public. He also wishes us to say that he is not connected with any other firm in the county in the clothing line, put that he will sell at figures that cannot be duplicated in the county. He is still buying all kinds of produce for cash. Call and see him. 4w.

A woman who thought she had a tumor, sent for a Fort Wayne surgeon, last week. He came on Saturday found indeed, a somewhat tumorous appearance, but never having known any of the kind that would not yield to natural causes in the course of nine months, at least, he picked up his instruments and returned promptly on the first train.—[Lagrange Standard.

We had a case like the above in Auburn, only a little different. The doctor thought it was a tumor, and the lady the next day or so demonstrated the fact that it wasn't.

A terrible boiler explosion occured in Defiance county, on Wednesday of last week. The boiler was used with a threshing machine, and it exploded with great force. The boiler, engine and carrier was lifted bodily and hurled through the barn, smashing posts, beams, separator and everything in its course. It landed about one hundred and fifty feet from where it started and was turned completely around, and stood at the time it dropped upright, on the rear carriage. Geo Lawrence, Alvaro Lawrence and Adam Geitgey, were instantly killed and several others dangerously wounded.

NEW SHOE STORE.

Mr. Philip Lordier, the enterprising boot & shoe merchant of Fort Wayne now located nearly opposite the Aveline House, 88 Calhoun street, desires us to state that he will remove to this place in about three weeks occuping the new store room east of the bank, on Seventh street, where he will open out a large and varied assortment of Boots & Shoes upon which he will offer special inducements in the way of prices to purchasers.

MR. EDITOR:

I was in Columbia City last week and visited their new Jail, which by the way will be found wanting when weighed in the ballance. I see Bratton & Co. are using a lot of rejected Philadelphia pressed brick, they had laying in the yards of the P. F. W. & C. R. R. Co., for the last three years. They were shipped for the Adams' county Court House, and condemed by J. C. Johnson Architect, of the aforesaid Court House This same J. C. Johnson is the Architect of the Columbia City Jail. (Now ain't there a nigger in the wood pile.) He either went back on Adams county or has gone back on Whitley county. Will J. C. Johnson please rise and explain why this is thusly.

Young Hearts that Have Grown Old.

AIR—Silver Threads Among the Gold.

BY WILL E. WOLFORD.

Darling, linger with me now,
While our heads together bow,
Let us pray to Him on high,
That we may together die.
For with thee I'll always stay,
Till thou shalt flee from earth away,
Often have we both been told,
Of youthful hearts that have grown old.

CHORUS—Tell me, tell me, will you darling,
Of the songs we use to sing,
And our love together [illegible]
Of young hearts that have grown old.

Darling, think what happy days
We have spent at childhood plays,
But we together have grown old,
And our days will soon be told.
Then how happy we will be,
When we from life and earth shall flee,
Brighter we'll be than gems untold,
Of youthful hearts that have grown old.

Oh, how bright those eyes do shine,
As they fondly look in mine,
Loving ones that cannot forget
The happy time when first they met.
But now as they are growing dim,
While we bow let us look to him,
And together our lives we will fold,
And our young hearts that have grown old

Garrett, Ind.

The Fort Wayne papers are perfect ghouls, when they get on the scent of anything nasty. In fact the more nasty the case may be, the more diabolically pleased are these strange representatives of the human race. A case of love, "not wisely, but too well" occurring between members of two respectable families near Huntertown, gives the chance for parading the names of the heads of said families before the public and furnishing an opportunity to use that descriptive pen which these fellows imagine they can sling with so much grace. If anything like this should occur among themselves, which is sometimes the case, you'll see them hunting up all the reporters, and standing somebody off for the drinks, and thus hush the matter up. Policy takes the place of justice, and cheek reigns in the place of brains.

The Grangers held their meeting on Tuesday instead of to-day as was advertised, and the change no doubt operated against as large a turnout as might have been otherwise realized, yet there was a good number in attendance. The speaker of the occasion Mr. Clewson, of Indianapolis, failed to appear, or explain the cause of his absence, and Hon. Free Kelly was called upon for a short address. He acknowledged the difficulty of filling an appointment, announced for some one else, and then went on and in one of his best efforts, discussed the Grange question with marked ability. A man who can leave the plow, or the harvest field, and the next day appear before an intelligent audience, and entertain them in the manner that Mr. Kelly did last Tuesday, possesses qualities that cannot fail to be appreciated in those classes where intelligence and refinement are the distinctive characteristics.

A NEW DISEASE—Another horse diseas has made its appearance in N. Y. City It is not the epizoot, although like it in many respects. It is of a milder form, and temporary in its attacks. The symtoms are a mild cough, accompanied at times by inflammation of the throat, frequent sneezing, and occasionally a discharge at the nose. With few exceptions its victims all eat well and work without interruption. Every car and stage line has felt its influence, and it is safe to say that not one hundred horses in the city have escaped.

Fifteen hundred out of two thousand horses in the Third avenue stables were coughing and sneezing on Friday last. Ten thousand horses among the stage and car lines alone are suffering from it. On Saturday last the truck horses in Hoboken were unable to work on account of it. Superintendent Bidgood, of the Sixth avenue line of cars says, "it comes like a flash of lightning, striking every horse in the city, and as quickly pass away, leaving its effects behind it." All seem to think it is short lived, the horses having improved since Saturday.

As well as the editor of the COURIER knew the falsity of the charges of his contributor, it is a question whether his numerous patrons in this place and vicinity had not a right to expect a little different treatment from him,

Though not very well expressed, the above, from the Waterloo "Press," rather intimates that we are responsible for the views of our correspondents, when it knows that it is a rule all over the country that such is not the case. If a correspondent makes false charges, then anyone else is entitled and can always have the same public means to prove them so.

The above also intimates that we knew what was charged by the correspondent to be false. We knew that the Angola band had played two or three times for the fair, while no band from Auburn or Butler has ever been engaged So much for the falsity of that charge. As to the pumps being locked we don't know that this was ever done, yet there are some who aver this to be the case.

As to our numerous patrons at Waterloo, we have no desire to do them, or anybody else, an injury, nor to detract from the success of the fair. We are one of two from Auburn who took stock in that organization, and though under the present management we have been treated with but little or no courtesy, yet we can pass that by, and represent their interests as fairly as those of any other locality. Editors are not responsible for the opinions of correspondents and the "Press" ought to know this, after being in the business eighteen years —Were you ever awakened from a sleep haunted by dreams of business troubles, by strains of exquisite music beneath your window, sounding doubly sweet on the "stilly night?" And after the serenaders had gone, was not your sleep dreamless and more restful?—Thanks to the soothing effects of music! A company of some three or four ladies with the same number of gentlemen were out Saturday evening serenading various fortunate mortals.

—Our citizens do not appear to be particularly interested in the Fair.—Probably fairs of another kind—excursion FARES—have drained their pockets of all spare change.

—The thermometer has wavered from 60° to 70° during the last week, and that is very comfortable.

Mr. John R. Ball died at his residence last Monday, at about 4 o'clock. He had lingered between life and death for many days, not expected to live from one hour to the next.

—Our young folks have re-organized the Dramatic Club. They have purchased a fine collection of scenes from Toledo, O., and are now known as the "Star Dramatic Association," consisting strictly of home talent. They are preparing to place the Drama called, "The Drunkard's Warning" before the public in three weeks. As their past difficulties have been healed, we hope, and believe, they will succeed.

Several young men have organized a debating club. First meeting on Monday night, next. With the Drama, Debate and Church and Masonic Socials, we can surely pass the long winter evenings quite pleasantly.

—Will Carpenter, P. O. Clerk, is astonished. Last Saturday night a young man call for mail and after Will had looked, the GENTLEMAN actually thanked him. There was nothing very remarkable about his appearance either.

—Prof. Bowersox, although enduring very poor health, is doing justice to our school. I think the Trustees are congratulating themselves on having secured him. "LENA."

—The fair at Pleasant Lake was a pleasant (af) fair, and went off pleasantly.

—Ella Orton, daughter of Leander Orton, died of diptheria, last Saturday evening. Several others are dangerously sick with the same disease.

—It is thought by some that it is not manly to shed tears, but it only shows those finer feelings that should exist within every bosom. The man who fails to drop a tear for a departing relative or a dear friend, is devoid of that finer feeling, unless he belongs to that very limited class who have not the power to weep.

—Our merchants are filling up their store rooms to overflowing with the expectation of a good fall trade. The shoe trade is much more lively since the weather has turned colder, it being too cool to go barefooted.

—W. A. Woodhull, Esq., has his new house ready for the inside finish. It will be the best house in Angola, as for durability and style.

—Our round house on the Saginaw road has not been commenced yet.

—There was a row in town last Saturday evening. Several of the "roosters" were brought before Justice Dawson and fined $5 each, and one of them was cooped in the White Oak over night

—The youngest daughter of Geo. W. Poland, Esq., is lying at the point of death with that bad disease diphtheria Eugene is the darling of the household and her death will leave a sad vacancy around the hearth stone.

—The corn crop is reported as being below an average this fall, the frost being to early for it. The farmers have about finished sowing their wheat, considerable has been sowed. May a bountiful harvest pay the farmers for their labor.

—The citizens of Spencerville and vicinity, are called upon to mourn the loss of Father Zimmerman, who died last night in the seventy-first year of his age. He was a good citizen, an exemplary christian, a kind father and companion. The bereft friends have the sympathy of young and old. He was a member of the M. E. church for fifty-three years. He was always a live and working member, run well his race and died with the full assurance of gaining the reward of the faithful, who continue on to the end. As we think of his departure, and that we shall no more be permitted to listen to his good words of encouragement, and sweet words of council, we are constrained to drop a tear, but his words will live after him, and many will be the souls that will be gathered into the folds of Christ through their instrumentality.

The cattle disease has broken out in Massachusetts and Rhode Island, and a number of animals are rapidly dying off.

The experiment of publishing a daily religious newspaper in New York has failed, and the Daily Witness, which was started with this object several years ago, announces its own demise.

The platform of the Massachusetts Democracy rejoices in the removal of the "odious prohibitory law."....Vice-President Wilson's name having been mentioned in connection with the Governorship of Massachusetts, he addressed a letter to a Boston paper stating that, although he would esteem it as a great compliment, his sense of duty to the country would not permit him to accept it even if tendered by the unanimous voice of the State Convention.

Drake & Colby, one of the largest produce commission firms in the city of New York has succumbed to the general depression of trade, and made an assignment for the benefit of creditors....At Piedmont, N. H., one night last week, a man named Cotting was awakened by a tramp, who, with a cocked pistol, demanded his money. Cotting directed the tramp to a bureau containing $700. The tramp laid down his pistol to search, when Cotting seized the pistol and shot the tramp dead.

THE WEST.

The deadly kerosene lamp has piled up five more victims, in Otoe county, Neb. At a farm house out there, the other evening, a Mrs. Black was carrying a small child up stairs, with a lamp in her hand, when she was run into by a boy coming rapidly down. The lamp was knocked from her grasp and exploded, setting fire to everything combustible. The husband seized his wife and threw her in a pool of water, and in striving to rescue the remainder of the family, was badly burned and crippled for life. The mother and two children died before morning.

Jesse James is living quietly in St. Louis, among friends, and denies that he was killed at Pine Hill, Ky. It has been ascertained that the name of the dead robber of the Huntington bank was Thompson McDaniels, a Western Missouri desperado, whose brother Bill was shot while endeavoring to break jail at Kansas a few months ago, where he was held for complicity in the robbery of the Kansas Pacific train at Muncie last December.

The Kansas City Times has a special from Great Bend, Kan., saying that Col. Wheeler, a wealthy cattle-dealer who was recently reported killed by cattle thieves in the Indian Territory, has returned to Great Bend, having captured five of the thieves and recovered 200 cattle.

The story of a terrible crime comes from Williamson county, Ill. A bitter feud has for a long time existed between two colored families, living near Carbondale. One night last week one of these negroes effected an entrance into the house of the other, and proceeded to murder every human being in the cabin, slaying the man, his wife, a child of 6 years, and an old woman, who chanced to be staying there that night.

THE SOUTH.

The Gulf coast of Texas has had a terrible gale. The water swept in upon the city of Galveston in huge masses, inundating much of the town. Great damage to railroads, buildings, etc., is reported. A party of thirty workmen engaged on the government works being constructed in the harbor, were cut off from the power of rescue and perished....The Navy Department at Washington has received the following dispatch from the Navy Yard at Pensacola, Florida: "The yellow fever is epidemic at Howell's Station, on Pensacola bay, 25 miles above the Navy Yard. The people have neither food, medicine nor attendance. They are crying, in the name of God, for relief."

Later reports from Galveston, Texas, fully confirm the intelligence previously received as to the destructiveness of the storm that recently swept over that city. The gale raged with unparalleled fury for over forty-eight hours, and the waters of the gulf, which rolled in waves mountain high, were swept over the island, inundating the entire city to a depth of from one to three feet. In the entire rear east and west ends of the city the water rose to a sufficient depth to float large wooden edifices, many of which are very valuable. The residence portion of the city was most affected. From Tremont street, where this section begins, and for a distance of at least one mile and a half west, every garden and every foundation was destroyed. Domiciles were scattered promiscuously in the center of thoroughfares, many of them being jammed together. Further to the west, in the neighborhood of Oleander Park, where there are many stylish residences, the water is reported to have reached a depth of from six to nine feet. A similar story is told of the eastern end of the island, which extends from Center street at least one mile and a half in the business section of the city. Large stocks of goods were kept on the ground floors, and hence the damage must have been enormous. It is estimated that the earnings of the entire year will be exhausted in repairing the damages. Vegetation has been utterly destroyed. Upward of 150 buildings were swept away, more than 40 lives lost, and about 80 vessels driven ashore into the heart of the city....Little Rock, Ark., was visited last week by a destructive conflagration, which destroyed an entire block of buildings and the Anthony House. The loss on the hotel is $30,000; no insurance.

Perfect peace is reported to reign in the lately-reported disorderly portion of Mississippi.

Parties arriving in New Orleans from Indianola, Texas, who were in that ill-fated town during the recent terrible cyclone, [illegible] from even the most sensational reports of the devastation of life and property there. Out of 300 houses, only five are left standing. When the storm was at its height, the water rose six feet in two hours, the wind blowing at the rate of eighty-eight miles an hour, driving the water and breakers through the city at the rate of fifteen miles an hour, sweeping everything in its way, and covering the plain in the rear of the city for ten miles to a depth of seven feet. Several small settlements, numbering a total population of 150, were also swept out of existence, making, with the 250 persons who were lost at Indianola, a total of 400 lives lost. The gentlemen conveying this information give the most harrowing account of the destitution of survivors. When they left Indianola ninety bodies had been recovered. The stench in the city from the putrefaction of these dead, with the stench from the dead animals, was most intolerable. It is also stated that a party of Mexicans began robbing the dead bodies that had been washed to the plain, from four to six miles back of the city, the scoundrels chopping the fingers, hands and ears from the men and women to obtain their jewelry. As soon as this was heard of in the city a party of citizens went out and killed five Mexicans whom they caught at their devilish work....Chief-Justice Peyton, of Mississippi, has granted an injunction restraining the Auditor from paying out money for the support of the militia that Gov. Ames proposes calling out.

A strong influence has been brought to bear upon Attorney-General Pierrepont to induce him to forego the prosecution of young Fisher, who is accused of stealing the papers of the police courts so as to protect his rascally friends. The New York Liberals have determined that it would be inadvisable to nominate a State ticket at the coming election, though they reaffirmed their principles of 1872, and resolved to maintain their organization.

The platform adopted by the convention favors an economical administration of the government, and a speedy resumption of specie payments, and opposes further increase of the currency....The Democratic State Convention of Massachusetts met at Worcester and renominated Gov. GENERAL.

Portions of Canada were visited by a twelve-inch snow storm on the 14th of September.

A few months ago there was an insurrection against the government of Hayti led by one Cannote, which was promptly suppressed. Cannote and a few of his followers fled for life through the streets of Port-au-Prince, and took refuge in the building occupied by the American Minister. A mob threatened to burn the building, in their fierce anxiety to get at Cannote and his men. The Haytien government protected the Legation, but have subsequently demanded the refugees, and the American Minister has refused to give them up, knowing they would be butchered upon the instant. The American government has now sent a man-of-war to protect our Minister.... The Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows of the United States held its annual session at Indianapolis last week.

The New York Liberal Republicans in their State Convention at Albany decided not to place a ticket in the field, but contented themselves with the adoption of a platform and the recommendation that their followers throughout the State exercise each his own choice as to the candidates already in nomination by the Republicans and Democrats.... There is great excitement in England over the investigation of the recent collision between the royal steam yacht Alberta and the sailing yacht Mistletoe. The Queen was on the former when the latter was sunk, with the loss of at least two lives. The jury disagreed, but eleven of the thirteen members voted for a verdict of manslaughter.

Gen. Dorregaray has been promoted to the position of Commander-in-Chief of the Carlist armies in Spain. The London Times' Madrid correspondent says the new Spanish ministry belongs to the Union or Liberal party, founded by O'Donnell from the best elements of the new Conservative party and the Liberal party. They come into the cabinet with clean hands, and a reputation for talent and integrity. The same authority says Senor Castelar has of late modified many of his advanced ideas, and that he and his adherents will become powerful supporters of a Liberal monarchy.... A treaty of peace has been signed between the governments of the United States of Columbia and the rebellious coast States.

FINANCE AND TRADE.

Weekly Review of the Chicago Market.

FINANCIAL.

The demand for money and the general financial market is decidedly quiet. Money is abundant, and for prime security can be had at 6 per cent. Street rates, 7@10 per cent. But little currency going to the country. Government bonds are firmly held, and there is a moderate demand.

BREADSTUFFS.

The grain markets have been the center of considerable interest and attention from speculators during the past week, and fluctuations in values have been frequent. Spring wheat has been declining throughout, an average reduction of fully 6c per bu being sustained. The speculative element showed but little confidence in the market, and were anxious to sell. Eastern advices unfavorable. Corn was higher and lower, but closed about 1c lower. Oats were fairly active, ruling irregular, however, in sympathy with the fluctuations in corn. Rye and barley were firm and prices were higher. The weather had a good deal of influence with corn and oats.

There was a good demand for hides and a fairly active business was reported at 8½c for green salted and 6½c for damaged. There was nothing of consequence done in hops—quotable at 15@20c for Wisconsin, according to quality. Potatoes were dull and but few sales were reported. Quotable at about 90c@$1.00 per brl. Salt was fairly active and steady at $1.50 for Onondaga and Saginaw fine; $1.70 for ordinary coarse. Tomatoes quotable at 30@40c per bushel; turnips at 75c@$1.00 per barrel, and onions at 75c per barrel for good yellow.

SEEDS AND HIGHWINES.

Timothy closed at $2.00@2.40 for poor to good, $2.45@2.50 for prime and $2.55@2.60 for choice; clover was inactive and entirely nominal; flax sold at $1.25@1.50 for poor to prime. Highwines were steady and fairly active at a slight decline in values. Quotable at $1.15.

COOPERAGE, LUMBER AND WOOD.

There was but little doing in the first mentioned market during the past week, and there was no essential change in prices. The offerings were only moderate. Quotable at $1.12½@1.15 for pork brls, $1.35@1.40 for lard tcs, $1.90@2.10 for whisky brls, and 45@55c for flour brls. Trade was firm in lumber, but buyers were unwilling to concede to any advance in prices, and there was no change of consequence established. The market closed about as follows: $7.75 for joist and scantling, $7.75@16.00 for common to choice mill run boards and strips, $2.00@2.70 for shingles, and 75c@$1.50 for lath. There was but little done in wood, and prices remain unchanged. Quotable at $8.00 per cord for hickory, $7.00 for maple, $6.00 for beech, and $5.00 for slabs at the yards.

MISSISSIPPI TROUBLES.

The President's Views—Letter from the Attorney-General, to the Governor of Mississippi.

The following is the letter from Attorney-General Pierrepont to the Governor of Mississippi, in reply to the latter's application for aid to suppress the recent riots in that State:

To Gov. Ames, Jackson, Miss.:

This hour I have had a dispatch from the President. I can best convey to you his ideas by extracts from his dispatch: "The whole public are tired out with these annual outbreaks in the South, and a great many are ready now to condemn any interference on the part of the government. I heartily wish that peace and good order may be restored without issuing the proclamation; but if they are not, the proclamation must be issued; but if it is, I shall instruct the commander of the forces to have no childish play. If there is a necessity for military interference, there is justice in such interference as will deter all evil-doers. I would suggest the sending of a dispatch or letter by a private messenger to Gov. Ames, urging him to strengthen his own position by exhausting his own resources in restoring order before he receives government aid. He might accept the assistance offered by the citizens of Jackson and elsewhere. Gov. Ames and his advisers can be perfectly secure, as many of the troops now in Mississippi as he deems necessary may be sent to Jackson. If he is betrayed by those who offer assistance, he will be in a position to defeat their ends and punish them."

You will see by this the mind of the President, with which I and every member of the Cabinet who had been consulted, are in full accord. You see the difficulties. You see the responsibilities which you assume. We cannot see why you do not strengthen yourself in the way the President suggests, nor do we see why you do not call the Legislature together and obtain from them whatever powers and money and arms you need. The Constitution is explicit that the Executive of a State can call upon the President for aid in suppressing domestic violence only when the Legislature cannot be convened, and the law expressly says, in case of an insurrection in any State against the government thereof, it shall be lawful for the President, on application of the Legislature of such State, or of the Executive when the Legislature cannot be convened, to send troops to suppress such violence. It is the plain meaning of the Constitution and the laws, when taken together, that the Executive of a State may call upon the President for military aid to quell domestic violence, only in case of an insurrection in any State against the government thereof when the Legislature can be called together. You make no suggestions even that there is any insurrection against the government of the State, or that the Legislature would not support you in any measures you might propose, to preserve the public order.

I suggest that you take all lawful means and all needed measures to preserve the peace by the force in your own State, and let the country see that the inhabitants of Mississippi, who are largely Republican, are favorable to good order, and have the courage and the manhood to fight for their State rights, and to destroy the bloody ruffians who murder its innocent and unoffending freedmen. Everything is in readiness. Be careful to bring yourself strictly within the Constitution and the laws, and if there is such resistance to your State authorities as you cannot by all the means at your command suppress, the President will swiftly aid you in crushing lawless traitors to human rights.

Telegraph to me on receipt of this, and state explicitly what you need.

Very respectfully yours,
Edwards Pierrepont,
Attorney-General.

DROWNED OUT.

The Town of Indianola, Texas, Almost Entirely [illegible]—One Hundred and Fifty Lives Lost.

Further particulars of the great cyclone along the Texas coast have been received. The devastation is widespread, extending all along the Texas coast. The destruction of property is immense, and loss of life appalling. In addition to the ruin wrought at Galveston, the town of Indianola has been almost completely swept away and several small towns entirely obliterated. The following has been received from Indianola: Wednesday 15th, wind from the east and veering to north. On Thursday morning became more steady, increasing to a gale. The water was waist-deep. Every man, woman and child was seeking a place of safety. It blew fearfully; the situation was awful. The screams of women and children [illegible] in every direction. The water was six feet deep in the streets. About 2 o'clock Friday morning the wind veered to the northwest. The waves then became chopped; houses were washed away or tumbled to pieces. The wind toward morning began to lull a little. The water was getting lower until the wind veered north; then came up hope, until daylight began to break, and then did we behold the awful destruction around. Broad daylight revealed a scene that was terrible to behold. The town could not be recognized as the Indianola of the day previous. Ruin, total ruin everywhere. Death and destruction all around us; houses crushed to the ground, others swayed round, leaning over. The wind was now dying down, and the water disappearing from places in the streets. Those that could sailed out to learn the news. Bodies of men, women and children were found in all directions. Women were found and men also, who had floated off on doors, or anything that they could get hold of, miles away,—some beneath their roofs carried away long distances. The number of human beings drowned will never be known, as there were a large number of strangers in town. We estimate the number of lives lost at 150. A number of persons were out on rafts for hours, but in many cases were saved. William Taylor, on trial for the Sutton murder, was let out of jail to prevent his being drowned and made his escape. All the churches in the town are swept away; so is the Masonic lodge. The Court-House is safe. Great destitution prevails. The Victoria people, hearing of it, nobly sent assistance at once. Out of the entire force of pilots only one at Indianola is alive. Manager Sanborn, of the Western Union Telegraph Company, is reported safe. The office is entirely destroyed.

The town of Saluria is entirely washed away. The telegraph lines are prostrated.

Every house at San Barnardino was washed away. All but five of the people reached the steamer and were saved. Near Red Fish Point the government dredge boats were injured. Three ships chained to the dredge boats sunk. At Morgan's Point two dredge boats and two tugboats are ashore. Dispatch steamer Laura was sunk. Not a house is left standing in Buffalo Bayou. The water was ten feet above the ordinary tide.

The town of Matagorda was swept away. Only two houses remain standing.

The town of Cedar Lake was washed away, and all the people lost.

Information received from East Bay states that the suffering among the people is terrible. Out of twenty-eight human beings, five are known to be alive.

The destitution is very great in the devastated districts, and aid is being rapidly extended to the sufferers.

Useful Recipes.

Yellow stains commonly called iron mold are removed from linen by hydrochloric acid or hot solution of oxalic acid. Wash well in warm water afterward.

To fasten emery to leather, boil glue very thin, add a little milk, raise the pile of the leather, and put on the glue with the brush. Then sprinkle on the emery and let it cool.

To preserve soap grease, fill a cask half full of good strong lye and drop all refuse grease therein. Stir up the mixture once a week.

The best fattening material for chickens is said to be Indian meal and milk.

A remedy for caterpillars, which is used on a large scale in France, consists in a solution (1 part in 500) of sulphide of potassium, sprinkled on the tree by means of a hand syringe.

The best and most durable insulation for electric wires is to tin them and cover with pure rubber.

Javelle water, used for turning white the dirtiest linen and removing stains, is composed of bicarbonate of soda 4 lbs, chloride of lime 1 lb. Put the soda into a kettle over the fire, add one gallon of boiling water, let it boil from ten to fifteen minutes, then stir in the chloride of lime, avoiding lumps. Use when cool. This is good for removing fruit stains from white underwear.

Bicarbonate of soda dissolved in water, used as a lotion, will remove prickly heat.

The average yield of corn cobs is 7.62 parts of carbonate of potash in 1,000 parts of the cobs, which is nearly twice as much as is furnished by the best specimens of wood. The corn crop of this country will supply 15,400,000,000 lbs of cobs, from which 115,500,000 lbs of potash might be made.

The way they boil rice in India is as follows: Into a saucepan put 2 quarts of water; when boiling throw in a tablespoonful of salt, then put in one pint of rice, previously well washed in cold water. Let it boil twenty minutes, throw out into a colander, drain, and put back in the saucepan, which should be stood near the fire for several minutes.

Save the corn cobs for kindlings, especially if wood is not going to be plentiful next winter. To prepare them melt together 60 parts resin and 40 parts tar. Dip in the cobs, and dry on sheet metal heated to about the temperature of boiling water.

Equal weights of acetate of lime and of chloride of calcium, dissolved in twice their weight of hot water, is a fire-proof mixture for fabrics.

The ammoniacal solution of oxide of nickel will dissolve silk; that of copper dissolves cotton also.—Scientific American.

An Asthmatic Prisoner.

He was a fat man, almost as wide as the corridor door, and as he came out one of [illegible] whispered: "[illegible] he'd make for a fish line!"

"Your name is Rufus Jackson, is it?" asked the Court.

"Yes—certainly—of course my name's Rufus Jackson," wheezed the fat man in reply.

"And you [illegible]"

"No, sir—no [illegible] charge in totum. Never was more astonished in my [illegible] taken me for some one else."

"Perhaps I have, Mr. Jackson, but if you [illegible] to be lying flat on the walk, hat in the gutter, satchel in the street, and your feet spread all over! And when an officer raised you up, Mr. Jackson, you [illegible] and distinctly exclaimed: 'Zon'y g'way an' lemme 'lone I'll knock er head off!' Would a sober man make such a remark?"

"May it please the Court," wheezed the fat man, "I am a victim of asthma. I was born of honest parents, and my life has been one long epoch of respectability. I am fat. I'd give the world to be lean, but I can't be. I can't run. Other men can skip and gambol, while I must creep. I can't sing. I can't whistle. I am an enthusiastic politician, but I can't holler for the candidates on my ticket. If I try to my voice merely makes a sound like wind sobbing through a corrugated stovepipe elbow. This asthma is killing me by inches. The doctor says that I may live to see strawberries come again, but beyond that I dare not hope. Last night as I came into your beautiful city I was taken with a faintness and fell down, and if the officers had not found me I should likely have been robbed and murdered. I am indeed greatly obliged, and I can't close my remarks without complimenting the efficient police force of your handsome and orderly city."

"Fat man from Milwaukee," said the Court as the prisoner paused, "once I was like a child. I looked at things as a child. I believed every story and statement, and my heart was free from suspicion. Men took advantage of me; women deceived me with their crocodile tears—I felt sad for the men who cut their hair close and bet their money on dog fights. I have changed, Mr. Jackson. The [illegible] has [illegible] sugar. That was a good speech of yours, but I can't part company until you hand the clerk a ten dollar bill."

The prisoner smiled sadly, paid the money and was not long getting out of doors.—Detroit Free Press.

A Horrible Crime.

A horrible case of crime and murder has recently come to light in Franklin county, Mo. It appears that a widow named Rebecca Eades lived in that county in 1872, and that she had adopted two children—one a boy, Louis Merrill Taylor, 6, and his sister Kate, 12 years of age. One day, in the spring of that year, she became very angry with the little boy, and seizing an ax struck him upon the head, afterwards beating him to death. The murderess, assisted by two men named Charles Eades and William Howard, hid the body in the stove, but subsequently carried it off and buried it secretly. The girl was the only witness of the heartless killing of her brother, and it was agreed that she must be gotten out of the way. They did not dare commit a second murder, but they hit upon a plan that was almost as atrocious as murder. They mounted the girl upon a bareback mule and conveyed her into the middle of a dense forest forty miles distant, in Platte county, Mo., and, after using horrible threats, left her alone. After that Mrs. Eades disappeared from the country, Charlie Eades became a notorious horse-thief, and Howard was hung by a mob for stealing horses. The little girl at the time of her cruel abandonment, was weak and sick, but, after innumerable hardships, found her way out of the woods, and finally made her way to the home of Mr. Eldridge, the father of Mrs. Eades, but not on friendly terms with his daughter. The girl, influenced by the threats, was afraid to tell the story of her wrongs, and, consequently, said nothing about the heinous crimes of Mrs. Eades until about a year ago. A week ago, while out riding on horseback, she met Charlie Eades, and recognized him. She followed him and had him arrested. Last week, while in jail, he addressed a letter to Mrs. Rebecca Boltinghouse, No. 2628 Papin street, St. Louis. Sheriff Coffey suspected the woman was the identical murderess who was wanted. He telegraphed the Chief of Police in that city, who sent a detective and had her arrested. She afterwards acknowledged being Mrs. Eades, but denied the crimes charged against her. She had been living over a year at the house where she was captured, with a man named Bollinger, who offered to, and did marry the woman in jail. She was taken back to Platte county, where her trial will take place. She is 40 years old, but well preserved and good looking, and does not look at all the great criminal she is alleged to be. Many other crimes are charged against her. Among these is the one that, in 1871, she conspired to have her father and mother assassinated, in order to get their property, and that the murderous plan was only frustrated by the accidental discovery of it by her father.

Riches in a Feather-Bed.

Mrs. Michael McGreavy, of 85 Douglass street, Brooklyn, some time ago bought a feather bed in Seventh avenue, New York, and when she had used it for a while she found a hard lump in it which she thought was lead that had been put there to cheat her. She ripped the bed open, and threw the substance, which was tied up in a rag, out of the window. Edward O'Mallen, son of a tailor at 95 Douglass street, picked up the parcel, untied it, and found $200 in gold pieces. He took them to his father, who, like a good parent, put them in his pocket. When Mrs. McGreavy heard of the O'Mallen's good fortune she was wild, and demanded the money, but O'Mallen refused to give it up. Then she had him arrested for grand larceny, and the case was tried before Justice Walsh. The complaint was dismissed, but the Judge ordered O'Mallen to return the money.—New York World.

GOSSIP OF THE DAY.

THE daughter of Bismarck, the cable announces, has been betrothed to Count Wendlzuenlarberge. Heavens! What a name!

ONE of the witnesses in the investigation of the Indian contracts at Washington is a Mr. Brevier, and Prof. Marsh is desirous that he be interrogated.

EXTENSIVE preparations had been made for a burglarious raid on Windsor Castle while Queen Victoria was absent in Scotland. The opportune discovery and capture by the police of the burglars' tools, which had been secreted within a short distance of the Castle, prevented the attempt.

B. B. BOWERS, one of the members of the extensive and dangerous gang of counterfeiters recently broken up in the South, was a man of considerable influence in the section of Tennessee where he resided, was foreman of the last grand-jury of Green county, was deacon of a church and superintendent of a Sabbath school.

THERE are mutterings of a national convention of dry goods dealers, to protest against the present style of clinging dresses worn by women. The haberdashers sigh for the good old days of hoops, when fifty to sixty yards of cloth went into a skirt, and declare that these tight dresses are actually taking the bread out of their mouths.

THE recent sale of Lord Dunmore's herd of short-horns in Scotland shows that the days of fancy prices have not yet gone by. Thirty-nine head of cattle were sold at an average price per head of $3,361, the total amount realized being $131,115. One bull, the "Duke of Connaught," brought $25,000. An agent of the Viceroy of Egypt paid $15,000 for one animal.

ACCORDING to Frazer's Magazine the available force which Great Britain has to commence a campaign abroad or to defend the shores of England, Ireland, and Scotland consists of only 5,250 cavalry, 30,272 infantry, and 120 guns, an army just about equal in numbers to one of the sixteen army corps into which the land forces of Germany are at this moment divided.

THEY have a natural curiosity in Greenburg, Ind. It is a small maple tree luxuriating in the stone work near the top of the Court-House tower, which is 140 feet high. This verdant waif, doubtless sprang from a seed dropped by a passing bird. In spite of its precarious situation, the tree has reached a height of eight feet, and its trunk is two and a half inches in diameter.

THE extraordinary length to which a hobby will carry a rider, so soon as it reaches the proportions of a mania is illustrated in the case of a noted leader of woman's rights in Chicago. This woman writes a communication to the Tribune, of that city, seriously advocating a systematic slaughter of all children born out of wedlock. As the Tribune remarks, her proposition is one which, in the days of King Herod, m t have popularized female suffrage; but King Herod is not now regarded as a model sovereign. He died hard, too.

THOMAS JONES, alias John Wagster, a Tennessee white desperado, was to have been executed at New Madrid, Mo., last week, for the murder of an old colored man named Frank Shannon, but a stay of proceedings was granted until the Supreme Court can pass upon the case. While the scaffold was being erected Wagster got drunk and uttered the most vile and profane language imaginable, the workmen on the gallows coming in for a share of unseemly abuse. He is said to be a son of a once prominent Baptist preacher.

IT is now stated, on what seems to be good authority, that General Joseph E. Johnston has at last accepted the appointment of Commander-in-Chief of the Khedive's army—an office which the General is said to have heretofore declined. Probably this appointment is due to the suggestion of General Stone, who is in the Khedive's service, and other American officers in Egypt no doubt strongly recommended it. The bonus of $100,000 for "outfit" and an annual salary of $25,000 in gold are strong inducements for any General.

THE Postoffice Department at Washington has just received a copy of the report of the Chinese Postoffice for the year 1874. It is but seven years since the postal system was established in China, but the progress is very promising, and arrangements have been made for a large extension of this system during the coming year. The mail routes in operation at the close of the year aggregated 25,217 English miles, an increase during the year of 87 6-10 per cent.; number of Postoffices 3,244, of which 1,744 had been established during the year. There were also 476 street letter-boxes, of which all but 165 had been erected during the year.

ANOTHER shocking story of brutality in a lunatic asylum has been brought to light in New York. Nelson Magee, a commission merchant and a reputable citizen, was the other day released from the Kings County Asylum, upon the threat of legal proceedings by his wife. He was in just 50 days, having been thrown in under the temporary delirium of sun-stroke. To make a long story short, he was constantly reviled and abused, and saw other patients similarly treated. His wife was coupled with the most opprobrious epithets to his face, and, when he resented such treatment, he was put in a strait-jacket by brutal German keepers and pounded nearly to death, and threatened with death itself. All this might be the fiction of a lunatic, but the scars and welts upon Mr. Magee's body can hardly be a product of the imagination.

A CURIOUS dispute has arisen between the Indian Bureau and the Governor of Kansas, growing out of the killing of four Osage Indians by the Kansas militia during the summer of 1874. The Secretary of the Interior claims $50,000 as indemnity for the death of his copper-colored wards, and has made a formal demand upon Gov. Osborne for that amount. The latter fails to view the matter in that light, and refuses very pointedly to pay the sum asked, or any other sum. He says that no reparation is due from the State of Kansas, and none need be expected; that the Indians were in Kansas in violation of the positive orders of the government, and therefore their killing was justifiable and proper. He says it is the duty of the general government to keep the savages in their reservations, and that if it does not they must accept the consequences; that when they set their feet on the sacred soil of Kansas they will be treated as public enemies, and disposed of as rapidly and thoroughly as possible. "People living on the frontiers, and exposed to Indian depredations," says the Governor, "cannot always be relied upon to institute judicial examination respecting the status of Indians found roaming in their midst. The complete separation of the white settlers and the Indians is the only reasonable guaranty of safety to either."

CHARLES E. WALDRON, Secretary of the Chicago, Lafayette and Cincinnati railroad, of Lafayette, was accidentally shot and killed near St. Mary's, Ill., Saturday evening. The party, consisting of C. E. Waldroon, E. H. Waldron, Superintendent of the Chicago, Lafayette and Cincinnati railroad, their father, who was visiting them, C. E. Gore and D. N. Mitchell, were getting into the wagon to start for the station, when the team started suddenly. The driver, who had one of the guns in his hand dropped it to hold the team. The hammer striking some part of the wagon fired the gun, and the contents penetrated C. E. Waldron in the left side near the heart. He lived nearly two hours, but was perfectly conscious and able to converse most of the time.

THE heat on the Southern Pacific railroad grade, near the Colorado desert, is so intense that the thermometer often marks 120 degrees in the shade, when shade can be found. A considerable number of the laborers on the road have died of the heat. There is probably no other spot in the United States that can equal this.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Around the Farm.

WHITE lead ground in oil, mingled with Prussian blue similarly prepared, to give the proper shade, and finally mixed with a little carriage varnish, is an excellent and durable paint for farm machinery and agricultural tools.

A CORRESPONDENT of one of our exchanges says that when he was collecting his cows for the dairy an old dairyman said: "There is a great deal of money made in this country by dairying, but it is all made from the good cows."

PRESIDENT [illegible], of the Elmira, N. Y., Farmers' Club says by counting and measuring he calculated that four quarts of timothy seed to an acre would give one and a half seeds to every square inch. He believed six quarts enough seed for an acre. Other members of the club recommended twice as much as this.

EVERY succeeding generation of potatoes is likely to inherit all the diseases of the generations before it, back to the time the ancestral potato was raised from a seed. A tuber does not, like an animal production, receive an infusion of new blood. It is not like a grain of wheat or barley, a new and entire production. It is part of the stem of an old plant which is preserved and planted anew.

FALL SETTING OF STRAWBERRIES.—Nothing is gained by setting too early, especially if to be transported from one section to another before setting. The plants should remain where they are until full grown and the roots well matured. We would advise none of our readers to order plants from a distance before the middle of September, and two weeks later is much better. The roots are fully matured, and do not heat and spoil on the way, and as rains are frequent in October, they get well rooted before winter sets in.—Fruit Recorder.

WHEN TO BUY SHEEP.—As a rule the best time to buy is in the late summer—as flockmasters who have kept their sheep through the winter prefer to shear them before selling. After the first to the middle of August the lambs are ready for weaning, and the farmer knows pretty well what the increase of his flock is to be, and also what his crops of grain and grasses will allow him to winter properly. The season's yield at home also affords the buyer a better opportunity for gauging the number of stock to suit the probable contents of the barn and granery. Ordinarily, where one seller of stock sheep can be found in the spring, ten can be found in the summer or fall.—National Live Stock Journal.

HORSE TALK.—The following horse talk is, as least, rational and worthy of consideration: "Suppose you were in the harness, and I were in the wagon, I had the whip and you the traces, what an ardent advocate you would be for kindness to the irrational creation? Do not let the blacksmith drive the nail into the quick when he shoes me, or burn my fetlock with a hot file. Do not mistake the 'deal eye' that nature put on my foreleg for a wart to be exterminated. Do not cut off my tail short in fly time. Keep the north wind out of our stables. Care for us at some other time than during the episootics so that we may see your kindness is not selfish. My dear friends, our interests are mutual. I am a silent partner in your business. Under my sound hoof is the diamond of national prosperity. Beyond my nostrils the world's progress may not go. With thrift and wealth and comfort I daily race neck and neck. Be kind to me, if you want me to be useful to you."

A SET OF SCALES.—There is a vast deal of swindling practiced by produce dealers and stock buyers, and farmers are cheated of a fair profit on their sales because they trust to others to tell them how much they take to market. No class of men are so trusting. Last fall a neighbor weighed a load of wheat on my scales, and on weighing the same load at the railroad depot it fell short almost two bushels. I persuaded another neighbor to weigh his hogs on my scales. The difference shown in the weight between my scales and those of the buyer saved my neighbor $3. In these cases the scales were found to be "out of balance," and this is the way fraudulent buyers get out of their dishonest trickery. The first three grists I took to mill after procuring my scales were tolled one-eighth instead of one-tenth, as the law provides. My grain was very clean. I stated the case to the miller, that he had taken unlawful toll, and since that time I get all I am entitled to. It is no little satisfaction to know that you are getting what you are entitled to. The products of your farm cost too much money and hard labor to be guessed off and to be taken from you by fraudulent weights. A set of scales will save their cost in a short time.—Detroit Tribune.

About the House.

GLYCERINE and lemon juice will whiten and soften the skin, and help to remove freckles.

DANDRUFF.—Sulphur will remove dandruff—one ounce to a quart of water. Mix thoroughly and wash the head well. Two or three applications—two or three days apart—will probably answer.

HOW TO KEEP LEMONS.—A splendid way to keep lemons in hot weather is to cut them in slices and mix white sugar with them. Put in a glass jar, cover well with sugar, and paper securely.

A KNIFE SHARPENER.—It is a difficult matter to obtain a "steel" which retains its sharpening qualities for any length of time. A common round file answers the purpose admirably. Fasten it in an old knife-handle and it is ready for use.

A COCKROACH EXTERMINATOR.—Rhubarb leaves freshly gathered from the garden and placed near the crevices where cockroaches are found, are said to be invaluable for exterminating these troublesome insects.

DESTRUCTION OF MOTHS.—Take a coarse crash towel and wring it out of clean water. Spread it smoothly on the carpet, then iron it dry with a good hot iron, repeating the operation on all suspected places, and those least used. It does not injure the pile or the color of the carpet in the least, as it is not necessary to press hard, heat and steam being the agents, and doing the work effectually with worms and eggs.

GRAHAM COOKIES.—Two cups of sugar, cup and a half of sour cream, half a teaspoonful of soda dissolved in the cream; mix quickly, roll and bake. These require less heat and more time in baking, as Graham instead of fine flour is used.

CORN OMELET.—Take twelve ears of corn, boil twenty-five minutes, split the grains lengthwise; then with a sharp knife remove the pulp, leaving the husks on the cob. This is easily done by scraping the cob lenghwise. Add to this five eggs, well beaten, and season to taste. Fry to a nice brown. In the absence of corn a cup and a half of bread crumbs with the eggs will make a good omelet.

CHOW CHOW.—Take six cucumbers just before they ripen, peel them, cut in strips, and remove the seed; four white onions, six good sized green tomatoes, and half a head of cabbage. Chop all fine, let them stand in salt and water over night, then pour off the water and add vinegar and spices to suit the taste.

Wholesale Disfranchisement.

In a case which recently came before it the Supreme Court of Illinois has rendered a decision which disfranchises probably 25,000 persons who have heretofore exercised the right of suffrage, and whose right to do so previous to the adoption of the new Constitution in 1870 was unquestioned. The suffrage article of the Constitution of 1870 provides that "every person having resided in this State one year, in the county ninety days, and in the election district thirty days next preceding any election therein, who was an elector in this State on the first day of April, A. D. 1848, or obtained a certificate of naturalization before any court of record in this State prior to the first day of January, A. D. 1870, or who shall be a male citizen of the United States above the age of twenty-one years, shall be entitled to vote at such election." According to the Constitution of 1848, which was the organic law of the State until it was superseded by the instrument adopted in 1870, the right of suffrage was conferred upon every white male inhabitant of the age of twenty-one who was a resident of the State at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. By this provision, all foreigners who were inhabitants of the State and who were willing to accept citizenship, were naturalized. The Supreme Court, however, holds that the sons of these naturalized citizens, born before 1848, not having been electors in 1848, and not being citizens by birth or naturalization, are not now lawful electors. Whatever may be said of the reasoning by which the Supreme Court has arrived at this remarkable conclusion, it is certainly far from being in accordance with the plain intent of the provisions in the Constitution of 1870, and it works the rankest kind of injustice.

House Building Materials.

Bricks in Pharaoh's day were hardened in the sun, which might answer very well in a country where there was no rain and where there were no houses higher than one story. The inventor of the first brick kiln may never be known, but the hardening process of fire makes brick the best material for building purposes yet devised. Brick resists fire better than iron or solid granite, and has more strength to bear weight than many kinds of stone. A good American brick will bear a weight of 50,000 pounds before it cracks, or is crushed. Some English bricks have borne a pressure of 250,000 pounds without injury.

Iron is supposed to be very brittle in winter; it will suspend a weight as heavy in winter as in summer; it is only when it is jarred, by being struck with a hammer, or thrown down on any hard substance, that it is easily broken when intensely cold. It is broken only through shock, and not when exposed to steady strain. To persons building houses in which they expect to live the remainder of their days, a knowledge of the strength of brick and iron is important.

If a brick house is burned down, the loss is less than if built of iron or stone, because the stone chips off or crumbles, and the iron becomes so bent as to be entirely useless; brick can be built into the wall again, because just as good as they were before the fire.—Hall's Journal of Health.

How to Treat Tramps.

For years I have been almost daily besieged by able-bodied men asking for food, and not being able to discriminate between worthy persons and professional beggars, have invariably given to all, on the principle that it is better to feed some who are unworthy than that the innocent and honest should go hungry. Within a few months I became almost convinced that information was communicated from one tramp to another where to call for their meals, and I determined to try another method, which has worked admirably so far. I set every one to work now who calls for food, and when he has worked as long as I think is just, he gets his meal. No one has yet refused to work, but from present indications I need not flatter myself much on the amount of work I shall get done this way. They very seldom give me a call. I have work planned in advance for all comers, and they have probably heard of the new method.—Cor. New York Tribune.

A Singular River.

A New York Herald correspondent, writing from the Black Hills, says: "A most remarkable stream was discovered and appropriately named Amphibious creek. Its waters sink into and rise from the earth many times in their journey from their original spring to the south fork of the Cheyenne. A well-worn bed extends all the way, showing that in the wet season a torrent flows on the surface; but at the present time not a vestige of the current may be seen for miles after it disappears, until it suddenly bubbles up again from the rocks, and rolls onward to the next point of descent into its subterranean channel. Streams of this character are so common on the great plains that they are not thought remarkable, but they are rarely found among mountains, for the reason that the substrata is usually composed of solid rock lying not far below the surface, and affording no room for a subpassage through the sand, if that should happen to compose the soil."

An Obtuse Man.

She was a stylish young lady about 18 years old, and to accommodate a friend she took the baby out for an airing. She was wheeling it up and down the walk when an oldish man, very deaf, came along and inquired for a certain person supposed to live on that street. She nearly yelled her head off trying to answer him, and he looked around, caught sight of the baby and said:

"Nice child, that. I suppose you feel proud of him?"

"It isn't mine," she yelled at him.

"Boy, eh? Well, he looks just like you."

"It isn't mine!" she yelled again, but he nodded his head and continued:

"Twins, eh? Where's the other one?"

She started off with the cab, but he followed and asked:

"Did it die of colic?"

Despairing of making him understand by word of mouth she pointed to the baby, at herself, and then shook her head.

"Yes—yes, I see—'tother twin in the house. Their father is fond of them, of course?"

She turned the cab and hurried the other way, but he followed and asked:

"Do they kick around much nights?"

"I tell you 'taint mine," she shouted, very red in the face.

"I think you are wrong there!" he answered. "Children brought up on the bottle are apt to pine and die."

She started on a run for the gate, but before she had opened it he came up and asked:

"Have to spank 'em once in a while, I suppose?"

She made about twenty gestures in half a minute, and he helped the cab through the gate and said:

"Our children were all twins, and I'll send my wife down to give you some advice. You see—"

But she picked up a flower-pot and flung it at him. He jumped back, and as she entered the house he called out:

"Hope insanity won't break out on the twins!"—Detroit Free Press.

In the Detroit Police Court.

"Who's this?" asked the Court, as a man of forty stood before the bar—dirty, ragged and outlandish in look and dress.

"Martin Henry Jackson," was the answer.

"Well, you are the meanest looking old vagrant I ever saw. You look as if you had slept with the hogs."

"How can I help it?" asked the fellow.

"Hang it, man, if I had but one finger and one toe left I'd put in a better appearance than you do or blow my head off."

"I hain't any work and no money."

"There you are, fat and healthy as the head cook on a steamboat, and yet you loaf around the streets, chew apple cores, sleep in sheds and put up with anything rather than do a stroke of work. I wish I could send you up for a thousand years."

"What have I done?" asked the old vag.

"Nothing, nothing at all. That's what ails you. If you should get in the way of a Bogardus kicker you'd be too lazy to move. Oh! it makes me mad to see anybody moping around like a sore-heeled dog when he might be somebody. I'll chalk you for six months, and if you don't leave Detroit as soon as your time is out I'll buy a mule and turn him loose on you."

Picnic Observations.

Now that the picnic season is drawing to a close, we may give the result of some of our close observations, as follows:

Girls with holes in their stockings never get sprained ankles.

Girls with striped stockings are the fondest of round dances.

Girls with small feet are the most venturesome in climbing trees or wading swamps.

The girl who will fly in terror to the arms of her escort at sight of a toad will, if she happens upon a snake when by herself, deliberately catch it by the tail an jerk its head off.

One ordinary handkerchief is not large enough for two persons to sit upon at one and the same time.

The young man whose pants have been the most mercilessly torn by thorns, is the one who is the most urgently solicited to climb trees an fix swings.

Bugs have no sense of propriety.—Missouri Brunswicker.

Sand-Paper.

One of the old industries, the nature and extent of which are comparatively little known, is the manufacture of sand-paper, the amount of which article annually produced in the United States is estimated at not less than 200,000 reams, including the various grades and qualities. Formerly it was made of ordinary brown paper, glue and sand. At present, for the most part, the paper is made of old rope, the best quality of glue is used, and, instead of sand, pulverized quartz or flint. By this means a superior fabric is produced, of a constantly uniform grade, and at so low a price that the use of it has become greatly extended, large quantities being exported to Europe, South America, the Pacific islands and elsewhere. For emery paper and emery cloth a large demand has been created by the finished iron work in steam engine shops, the sewing machine factories and other similar industries which require them for polishing purposes.

Love Levels All.

This is a Louisville love story: Christopher Best began to love a girl when he was only 17 years old. This was in 1874. He was a barber, and although the girl loved him, his calling seemed to her a barrier to their union. Therefore he decided to die. After listening to her final refusal to wed, he sent an uncommonly large bullet into his brain. But he did not die. In great agony he survived, and endured many painful surgical operations. Recently, while the doctors were reaching in with probes through the opening in his skull, picking out pieces of bone and opening abscesses, they found the bullet and took it out. Thenceforward he improved in health, and the girl, melted by his suffering, is going to marry him, notwithstanding he will be a barber again when he gets well enough.

TEAS—Our Tea trade is the wonder of the country. No one ever dreamt such a trade could be built up. We sell more chests daily than some houses do pounds, and still our trade is increasing. It is an uncommon thing for us to purchase two hundred chests at a time, and here is the great element of our success. As by purchasing such larger quantities direct of the importers we save our consumer, at least the three extra profits of jobbers, speculator and wholesale grocer, who make 10 to 20 cents per pound. This our customers get the benefit of. No middle men with us. As with teas, so with sugar coffee, syrup and all other goods. No secret—it is simply in purchasing all our goods at first hands and re-selling direct to our customers at small margin, and save them at least 20 to 40 cents a pound on tea and 20 per cent on all other goods.

THE PHŒNIX TILE MACHINE.

It is well adapted to the wants of Tile Makers. It is usually driven by the power of two horses. It delivers tile at the two opposite ends of the machine. It may be converted into a single delivery machine. It has a simple and ready means of taking up the wear on the plunge head and sides of the chamber, thus preventing all leakage of mud, and adding years of service to the machine. It makes from 200 to 700 rods of tile per day. It is fully warranted. It may readily be adapted to Steam Power. The dies are finished with much care. Doors and Trucks at moderate prices.

Jones, who is a very small man, bet Smith, who is a ton man, that he could carry him twice around the hippodrome. A large number of ladies and gentleman attended to witness the proceeding.

"Now, Smith, I am ready. Take off your clothes."

"What! strip myself? You don't mean it?"

"I bet to carry you, but not a particle of your clothes. Come let's proceed. It won't do to disappoint these ladies and gentleman."

But Smith was inflexible. He blushed at the bare thought of showing himself in the thin costume of Venus emerging from the waves. So the reference decided that Jones—had won the bet.

The other day a Detroit husband went off on a fishing excursion with a small party of friends. Returning at midnight he pounded on the door and awoke his wife. As she let him into the hall she saw that something was wrong and she cried out:

"Why, Henry, your face is as red as paint."

'Guessern't,' he replied feeling his way down the hall.

"And I believe you've been drinking" she added.

"Whazzer mean by zhat?" he inquired trying to stand still.

"Oh! Henry, your face wouldn't look so if you hadn't been drinking."

"Mi to blame?" he asked, tears in his eyes. "Sposen big bass jump up'n hit me in th' face an' make it red—mi to blame?"

And he sat down on the floor and cried over her unjust suspicions.

Not Entirely Without Reason

Bundy has been married two weeks and has left his wife. Bundy is a little man, and his wife weighs two hundred and forty pounds and was the relict of the late Peter Potts. About ten days after marriage Bundy was surprised, on awakening in the morning, to find his better-half sitting up in bed crying as if her heart would break. Astonished, he asked the cause of her sorrow, but receiving no reply he began to surmise that there must be some secret on her mind that she withheld from him, that was the cause of her anguish, so he remarked to Mrs. B. that, as they were married she should tell him the cause of her grief, so if possible, he could avert it, and after considerable coaxing he elicted the following from her:

"Last night I dreamed I was single, and as I walked through a well-lighted street I came to a store where a sign in front advertised husbands for sale.—Thinking it curious, I entered, and ranged along the wall on either side were men with prices affied to them.—Such beautiful men; some for $1,000 some for $500, and so on to $150. And as I had not that amount I could not purchase."

Thinking to console her, Bundy placed his arms lovingly around her, and asked.

"And did you see any men like me there?"

"Oh, yes, lots like you; they were tied up in bunches, like asparagus, and sold for ten cents per bunch.

Bundy got up and went to see his lawyer as to whether he had sufficient grounds for divorce.

Pretty Tough Plug

One day last month when trade was dull, a Vicksburg grocery clerk procured a piece of sole-leather from a shoemaker, painted black, and laid aside for future use. Within a few days an old chap from back in the country came in and inquired for a plug of chewing tobacco. The piece of sole-leather was tied up, paid for, and the purchaser started for home. At the end of the sixty days he returned, looking downcast and dejected, and walking into the store, he inquired of the clerk:

"Member that terbacer I got here the other day?"

"Yes."

"Well, was that a new brand?"

"Regular plug terbacer, was it?"

"Yes."

"Well, then, it's me; it's right here in my jaws. I knowed I was gittin' purty old, but I was allus handy on bitin' plug I never seen a plug afore this one that I couldn't tear to pieces at one chaw. I sot my teeth on this one, and bit, and pulled, and twisted, like a dog at a root and I've kept bitting and pulling for six days, and thar she am now, the same as the day you sold her to me!"

"Seems to be a good plug," remarked the clerk, as he smiled off the counterfeit.

"She's all right, it's me that's failing" exclaimed the old man, [illegible] some fine-cut, and I'll go home and deed the farm to the boys, and git ready for the grave.

True Maxims

A man that don't know anything will tell it the first time he gets a chance.

A good life is valuable; but a bad life often costs more.

Life is a sum, and it becomes us to do it properly, as it can be done but once.

There are two reasons why some people don't mind their own business. One is that they haven't business, and the other is that they haven't any mind.

Let a person begin life by dodging, and he must run a gauntlet to the end as a rule. Let him face the world squarely, and if his success is slow it will be sure.

An Impertinent Son

"Father, what does a printer live on?"

"Live on? the same as other people, of course. Why do you ask, Johnny?"

"Because you said you hadn't paid anything for your paper, and the printer still sends it to you.

"Wife, spank that boy."

"I shan't do it."

"Why not?"

"Because there is no reason to do so."

"No reason? Yes there is, spank him I tell you, and put him to bed."

"I shan't do any such thing. What in the world do you want him spanked for?"

"He is too smart."

"Well that comes of your marrying me."

"What do you mean?"

"I mean just this, that the boy is smarter than his father, and you can't deny it. He knows enough to see that a man, printer or no printer, can't live on nothing, and I think you would be ashamed of yourself not to know that much.

An Obstinate Mother

From the Detroit Free Press.

Day before yesterday Mrs. Bliss, of Mullet street, found a euchre deck in her boy's pocket, and when she took him by the hair he camly said:

"Hold on mother—it isn't your play."

"I'll play you," she hissed tightening her grip. "How came you by these cards?"

"Mother you shouldn't trump me this way!"

"Trumps! trumps! What do you know about trumps?"

"Why, mother any fool knows that the right bower will take an ace every time."

"It will eh!" she hissed, as she walked him around.

"Of course it will. If diamonds are trumps, for instance, and I hold the ace and left bow—"

"Bowers! bowers! I'll bower you to death, young man!" she said as she walked him around the other way.

"Or, suppose spades were trumps, you hold the nine spot and king and turned up the ace, what would you do?" he inquired.

"Oh, I'll show you what I'd do!" she growled, as she got a left hander on his ear. "I'll teach you a lesson you'l never forget."

"That wouldn't be Hoyle, mother; you could pick up the ace and make a point every—"

But she threw him over her knee and played a lone hand.

Selected Thoughts.

No man can answer for his own valor or courage till he has been in danger.

The youth becomes a man the very day he begins to feel uneasy at the idea of being dependent on another.

Ridicule is a week weapon when leveled at a strong mind; but common men are cowards and dread an empty laugh.

Success is full of promise till men get in, and then it is last year's nest, from which the bird has flown.

Speech is as a pump, by which we raise and pour out the water from the great lake of thought, whither it flows back again.

Make yourself an honest man, and then you may be sure that there is one rascal less in the world.

He alone is the man who can resist the genius of the age, the tone of fashion, with vigorous simplicity and modest courage.

God takes some things from us lest we should spoil them, and we have more of them in missing them than we should have in keeping them.

It is a good and safe rule to sojourn in every place as if you meant to spend your life there, never omitting an opportunity of doing a kindness, or speaking a true word or making a friend.—Seeds thus sown by the wayside often bring forth an abundant harvest.

HEATHER BLOOM.

When autumn breezes crisply blow
And autumn suns are mellow;
When maple leaves begin to glow,
And all the woodland spaces show,
Their pomp of red and yellow,

I drop my knitting on my knees,
I fold my hands together,
And far beyond the maple trees,
And far across the rolling seas,
I smell the moorland heather.

The purple heather, blown about
By warm winds off the border—
Ah, me! what memories blossom out,
What ordered thoughts are put to rout
In tremulous disorder—

By just a color in the air,
An atmospheric glamor—
That, spite of wrinkles and gray hair,
Has thrilled old heart-beats unaware
With new and noisy clamor.

First love is sweet. It came to me
In breezy autumn weather;
Across the moor the wind swept free;
[illegible] the sun where I and he
Sat knee-deep in the heather.

A waving, fragrant sea, it spread
All round in purple splendor;
White clouds went sailing overhead,
A lark was soaring, when he said
"I love you," low and tender.

I wondered, dumb with glad surprise—
Could I have heard him clearly?
He saw the blissful color rise,
He drew me, kissing lips and eyes—
"You know I love you dearly!"

And earth and sky seemed echoing
Those words of sweetest meaning;
The blackcock trilled them on the wing,
The very blossoms seemed to ring,
While, on his bosom leaning,

I built the airy towers that youth
Can fashion so sublimely;
Nor dreamed how love would end in ruth,
For joy that had no root in truth,
And hope that died untimely.

His grave was made long years ago
Beneath his English willows;
For me the scarlet maples glow,
And evermore between us flow
The wide Atlantic billows.

My life has had its share of gain,
No less perhaps than losses;
Its pleasure has alloy of pain,
But haply I have learned to train
Some flowers around my crosses.

And still, when maple boughs are red
In breezy autumn weather,
Once more the moorland ways I tread;
Once more I hear the words he said
That day among the heather.

A CUT IN THE DARK.

"I've been about a bit in my time, sir, sure enough," says our second officer, as we look over the rail of the "look-out bridge" upon the floating masses of weed that dapple the smooth surface of the Sargasso Sea; "and I've had some queer adventures, too. If you care to hear one as a sample (as there's a quarter of an hour or so left of my watch on deck) I'll give it you.

"It's a good many years ago now since I was at Victoria (in Australia, you know), and, of course, like everybody else, I must try my luck at the diggings. You may think it a queer thing for a fellow to be digger and sailor turn about; but that happens oftener than you think, too. But in those days it was rough work, I can tell you. There were no railways or beaten roads then; just a cattle-track through the bush, and every thing to be carried by wagons, in some places through mud up to the very axle. We used to travel in great gangs then, just like a caravan going through the desert, so that if Jack got stuck fast, Tom and Jim and Sam would come up and lug him out; and if eight oxen couldn't drag a load through, they'd harness three eights to it but they'd do it somehow. In those days I've known transport to go as high as £120 a ton; and a ton was sometimes just about as much as two horses could manage, over such a mashed-potato kind of soil as they had of it up country.

"Then, you see, this traveling in gangs told in another way; it was a sort of security against being bailed up (robbed) by the bushrangers, who were aboutthen as thick as beetles in a sugar-cask. Now-a-days, of course, it's a different thing; but in my time, if a fellow went up the country by himself, or only two or three with him, he was pretty safe to have to say a word or two to Frank Gardiner on the road."

"Frank Gardiner! was he there then? I know his name well enough. A friend of mine got cleaned out by him two day's march from the nearest township, and he begged for just enough to keep him when he got in. So Gardiner handed him back three dollars, and filled his 'baccy pouch for him into the bargain."

"Ay, that's Frank all over; he was very fond of that style. I remember hearing of a lady that begged hard to be allowed to ransom her watch, because her husband's miniature was in the back of it, when what does Master Frank do but hand it back to her, free gratis for nothing, saying, 'it should never be said that Gardiner ever gave a lady any cause of distress.' And, d'ye see, that was a wide-awake game of his, too; for when he did get cotched (as he did at last, sure enough) then a lot of these folk that he'd been civil to spoke up for him, and said he warn't as black as he was painted.

"But, for all that, it wasn't bad fun in those days—for them at least as could rough it, and didn't want hot water and blacked boots every morning. You just brought a sack of flour with you, and a small cask of whisky, and mayhap a chest of tea (tea's a great stand-by in the bush), and then you were independent of both baker and bar-keeper, so long as your stock held out. As for meat, it wasn't so dear as you'd think; many's the time I've bought a pound for a sixpence. And after a hard day's work, when you'd got into dry things, and shoved a good allowance of damper and mutton down your throat, with a gl ss or two of grog to send it down, and you lay by the fire on your blanket, smoking your pipe, why, you wouldn't call the Emperor of Roosha your father.

"My mate was a young man from Trinity College, Dublin, and a right good fellow he was. I never knew how he came to that pass, for he was mighty close about his past life, as most of that sort are; but I suppose he'd just fooled away his money, like many another, and then had to shift for himself. But, for all that, he could do a day's work with any man out; and instead of being down in the mouth whenever anything went wrong, or grumbling and grunting because everything wasn't like a London hotel, he was always whistling and singing over his work, and laughing and cracking jokes, so that it was quite a treat to see him. It used to be great fun for me sometimes, when the day's work was done, and we were having our pipes by the fire, to make him chalk my name on a log in Greek, or spout me a bit of Homer, or some of those old chaps, for all the education I ever got was a very different sort, and I don't know a B from a bull's foot in either Greek or Latin.

"But what I liked best was hearing him sing, for he had a fine, clear pipe of his own; and he wrote his own songs, too, he did—words and music and all. There was one I liked specially, because it was just my own way of thinking put into words; and it went to the tune of 'I'll Hang My Harp on a Willow Tree.' I made him give me a copy, and here it is:

"'This world is a good one in its way,
If you will but take it fair;
Whenever the sun shines, make your hay,
And laugh at sorrow and care.
And what if at times the sky turns black,
And down comes pelting rain?
Just wait, and you'll see the sun come back,
And all will go rights again!

"'Wherever we go there is work to be done,
Then do it, and never say die;
There isn't a thing beneath the sun
That's worth a whine or a sigh.
So never you fret when things go wrong,
For it's useless to complain;
Just set your teeth and hammer along,
Till all comes right again'"

"Well, we worked together, him and me, for a spell of four months or so, and did pretty well, take one day with another—nothing very tremendous, but quite enough to keep our pipes alight. At last, one fine day, we happened on a fine rich pocket, and made a very tidy haul; and the news of it got about (rolling up as it went, as a story always does) till we got the name of being lucky uns. And that, mark ye, is just about the worst name you can get at the diggings; for if a fellow's overburdened with money there, there are always plenty of kind Christians to relieve him of it, and, if he don't see it in their way, to let light into his understanding with a big knife. But as the thing was done, why, it couldn't be helped, and the only thing then was to change the best part of our gold into notes of the Sydney Bank, and carry them always about us.

"Well, sir, just about this time I noticed three fellows loafing about, whom I hadn't seen before; for, you see, this gully of ours was a small place at best, with not many in it, so that you could spot a new face directly. They weren't quite the sort you'd have liked to meet out on the loose after dark, a good way from home, that's a fact. One was a long, skinny, black-haired fellow, with a complexion like a bad cucumber, whom I took to be a Greek; the second was a tall, bony, sly-looking Yankee, with a very vicious look in the corner of his eye; and the third was a great hulking, red-headed beast, with a broken nose and one eye, precious like a lag (convict)—which was just what he was, as I afterwards found out. They planted their tent not very far from ours, and tried to scrape acquaintance with us a bit; but I kept as clear of them as I could, and warned my mate to do the same; not that he needed much warning, for he liked the cut of their jibs as little as I did.

"However, it's not very easy to be stand-offish at the diggings, especially if you're naturally fond of company, like me; and by dint of doing us little turns every now and then, and always having plenty of liquor going, these three beauties managed to get pretty thick with us at last. The Yankee and the Englishman had a hail-fellow-well-met way with 'em that rather took my mate, and me too, after a bit, but I never could quite fancy the Greek. For, d'ye see, I'd had a taste of their quality up the Levant, and was quite of the same mind as the old saying, 'The Greek wines steal all heads, the Greek women steal all hearts, and the Greek men steal everything.'

"Well, it happened one day that I was left alone in the tent (my partner had gone to meet some stores that were coming up from the township for us) when up comes this big red-haired chap, and asks me to come over in the evening and have a glass of grog with him and his pals. It was a murdering hot day, and the very mention of grog made me lick my lips like a dog in front of a butcher's shop; besides, there was nothing in our tent worth taking, and even if there had been, I knew I should be back again long before dark; so, as you may suppose, the short and the long of it was—that I went!

"I found the three beauties sitting at their tent-door, seeming to have knocked off work pretty early. For at the diggings, you see, one don't find many watches about; a fellow just looks up at the sun, and says, 'Must be towards noon—I'll have a bite of summut!' or else, 'Sun's only a foot high now—time to knock off!' You never heard anything of half-hours or quarter-hours among us—not you!

"Well, they gave me a great welcome, and told me to sit down and make myself comfortable; and we had a regular jollification. The Yankee spun some queer yarns that made us all laugh, and I sang 'em one or two of my mate's songs; and, altogether, we were as thick as thieves. At last the sun began to go down; and then I thought it was about time for me to be stirring.

"'Gammon!' says the big sandy-haired chap. 'The bush ain't run dry yet; what the blazes are you in such a hurry for?'

"'You stop little bit yet, Johnny,' says the Greek (those heathens always call everybody Johnny, you know), 'by-by we hab supper, little game cards play—eh?'

"And with that he gave me a tap on the side with the back of his hand, as if in play. It was no more than any man might have done; but it struck me all at once that he did it to feel if I wore a belt; for, in that climate, men don't wear thick leathern belts under their clothes for the fun of it; and, if I had one, there was safe to be something in it.

"Well, this put me more and more on my guard, and I began to think I'd better not have come at all, as one always does when it's too late. However, to make the best of a bad job, I up and said I'd had a very jolly evening, and must have another soon; but that now I'd got to go and see if my partner had turned up yet; for I thought they wouldn't be so game to play any tricks if they fancied they'd got two men to deal with. So then Master Greek says to me:

"'Well, Johnny, you take parting glass before you go; that much proper.'

"And with that he opens a fresh bottle, turning his back while he did it. I guessed directly what he was up to, but I never let on that I'd spotted him; and I pretended to smack my lips over it and think it very good, but, in reality, I managed to spill most of it into my beard, which was a good thick 'un. But by the drop or two I did swallow, I tasted that it was drugged, just as I thought.

"So then I said good-night, and came away wishing very much that my partner would turn up, for I didn't much like the idea of having these three beauties on my hands all at once. However, when I got to the tent, there was no sign of him, so I lighted a candle (for it was pretty dark by this time) and sat down to tailor-up my clothes a bit, by way of passing the time.

"I'd been working about an hour, as near as I could guess, when I bethought myself that if I kept the light burning, they might pot me through the canvas; for, with a light behind you, your shadow shows through a tent just like through a blind; so I lay down on my blanket, took off my jacket and put it under my head, and then blew out the light, and waited.

"I don't know how long I lay there in the dark (it seemed long enough to me, I know that), when, all at once, I heard somebody breathing close by the tent. I had heard no footstep, nor anything of that sort; but my ears are pretty sharp (especially when my life depends on keeping 'em cocked), and I was sure I heard this breathing.

"'Here they come!' thought I, and fisted hold of my revolver, when—blest if I hadn't forgotten to load it!

"There was no time to think about it. The very next moment I heard the canvas quietly ripped, and a hand came sliding in, right toward the place where my head had been a minute before, and where my clothes (and the belt with 'em) ought to be.

"Now, there was a big log on that side of the tent, and I'd nailed the canvas to it to keep it firm, and over this log the hand came creeping. I watched till the wrist showed white in a stray gleam of moonlight that came through the hole, and then grabbed my hatchet and came down with one good blow that chopped the hand clean off!

"Then came a yell that I never heard the like of, and a sound of feet pattering away. I ran to the door and looked out; but the fellow's screech had roused the whole camp, and there was such a rush from all the tents—some in their shirt-sleeves, some in their stocking-feet, and many with nothing on at all—that I had no chance of seeing which way my man went. In the crowd I caught sight of a man I knew, and sang out to him:

"'Sam, my boy, come into my tent for the rest of the night, and I'll stand you a quart!'

"'Done with you,' says he, and in he came, and we kept watch till sunrise. But nothing came near us, and about daybreak my partner turned up. So then I took my revolver, and went to look after my three beauties; but, just as I expected, they and their tent were clean gone, and I never saw any more of 'em.

"Now, then, here comes my relief; so I'll just go down and turn in."

The Greek Husband.

Olive Harper writes to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat of life in Greece: Here is indeed, in one respect, the "promised land" for the women, for more devoted husbands women never had. A Greek man is only content when he can lavish upon his wife all the luxuries in the way of dress the female heart can desire. He is only happy when, in company with his wife in the house, in the street, or on the promenade, she is the best dressed of all the fair. With the Greek husband there is no grumbling consent to bestow upon you enough to buy a pair of boots, while he spends ten times that amount with his friends in champagne suppers; no long-drawn visage as he doles out a stingy sum while delivering a solemn lecture as to female extravagance. Not a bit of it. On the contrary, the Greek husband does not lead his wife through by-streets for fear of dry goods stores, when she wishes to go out for a little walk. He leads her, on the contrary, past the most fashionable stores, and observes with the eye of the critic all the new styles, and is really (ladies), really and truly willing to spend his money for his own wife. Even for fear she should not be considered as lovely as some one else, he goes to a perfumer's, he buys cold cream, rice powder, delicate pink for cheeks a little blanched by the stern realities of motherhood; he buys a little black for eye-lashes, to brighten eyes that have become somewhat dimmed by tears, perhaps, or vigils over sickly babies, and he not only gives his full and free consent to their use, but he himself will artistically apply them, and afterward compliment his wife upon her beauty till her heart swells with love that he knows so well how to retain, fresh as when the first vows were plighted. Yes, of a verity, the Greeks are bad men, but good husbands and tender fathers.

THE losses by the French inundations amounted to 24,000,000 francs, and 18,000,000 francs have already been collected by subscription. Of this sum about 1,500,000 francs go from abroad. England has furnished 700,000 francs; Switzerland, 300,000 francs; Alsace-Lorraine, 200,000 francs, and miscellaneous subscriptions in Europe, 300,000 francs. The largest contributors in France, proportionately, are the inhabitants of Cette, which city, containing 25,000 souls, has given 75,000 francs. Among departments, the Gironde stands foremost with 1,050,000 francs.

DELMONICO PUDDING.—One quart of milk; three even tablespoonfulls of corn flour, dissolved in cold milk; the yelks of five eggs; six tablespoonfuls of sugar. Boil three or four minutes; pour into a pudding-dish and bake about half an hour. Beat the whites of the eggs with six tablespoonfuls of sugar; put it over the top and return the pudding to the oven till it is a nice light brown. This is very good eaten cold.

A DOUBLE TRAGEDY.

Wife-Murder and Suicide Near New Brunswick, N. J.

Mention has already been made of the attempted wife-murder and suicide by Prof. Garland at New Brunswick, N. J. Late New York papers furnish us with additional particulars of this strange affair, and the following facts have been made public:

The Professor was verging on 50, his wife being only a few years his junior. Their married life extended over twenty years. For two years things have gone badly between Garland and his wife, arising from an insane and utterly groundless feeling of jealousy of his wife on the part of the Professor. He became jealous of her cousin, a boy still in his teens, who was taking musical lessons from the Professor himself. Within the last month his attitude toward his wife became positively brutal. He would come home drunk and abuse and beat her. Finally things came to such a pass that the wife took the necessary steps to procure a legal separation, which was granted her a short time since, and on the day of the occurrence Mrs. Garland was to have opened a music store with her son Alfred, and the breaking up of the family was to take place. What followed is taken from the New York Herald:

"On Sunday last the family met as usual at the table. The Professor attended the Second Reformed Church, where he played the organ. Mrs. Garland took her place as usual in the choir of St. James' Methodist Episcopal Church.

"Yesterday morning the entire family sat down to breakfast. Between 7 and 8 o'clock he left the store and proceeded to his store in Albany street, New Brunswick. Breakfast over, Mrs. Garland finished packing up the furniture she proposed removing with her. About 10 o'clock her husband returned to the house, but went away soon after, without saying or doing anything noticeable. He returned at a few minutes after 12 o'clock, and, after walking around the house abstractedly several times, entered the dwelling by the kitchen door. Mrs. Garland was there with her daughters packing up. The Professor wore a very strange look, and had something in his hand, which subsequently proved to be a Colt's seven-barreled revolver. Suddenly he leveled his weapon at Mrs. Garland's head and fired, the ball entering her mouth, crashing away her teeth, and passing out through the back of her neck. The horrified lady, almost paralyzed with dread, sank on her knees before her murderer.

"'Oh, James, James, for God's sake, don't kill me!' implored Mrs. Garland, but her husband shot her while on her knees, the ball entering her head. Then Miss Anna, a daughter of 14, courageously sprang forward and thrust aside her father's right hand in which he still grasped the revolver. Before he could fire at his wife a third time, she, with a desperate effort, sprang from the house into the yard, and there dropped apparently dead. The Professor darted from the kitchen, sprang up-stairs to his room, threw himself on the bed, leveled the revolver at his own head and fired. The ball lodged just over the right eye. Finding himself still alive, he took a pen knife from his pocket and slashed open his throat, inflicting a frightful wound, breaking the blade of the pen knife in his frenzy. This did not kill him, so he rushed into the hall, procured a hammer and then crushed in his skull, making a hole twice the size of a silver dollar. Soon after this his son Alfred, who was away from home arrived, and, with the assistance of a Mr. Short, broke in the door of the Professor's bedroom, and there witnessed a sight which made their blood run cold. Sitting on the edge of the bed, his head and face, and shirt-front covered and streaming with blood, was Garland, utterly unconscious. The floor at the bedside was covered with gore, and the walls, and even ceiling, were bespattered with blood. It was expected that every moment he would breathe his last. His powerful physique, however, held him up. At about 4 o'clock he became conscious.

"'Is wife dead?' he asked.

"'No, but she's——'

"'My God, I'm glad of that!' and he sank back."

Why She Stopped Her Paper.

She came bouncing through the sanctum door like a cannon-ball, and without pausing to say "How d'ye do?" she brought her umbrella down on the table with a mighty crash, and shouted:

"I want you to stop my paper."

"All right, madam."

"Stop it right off, too," she persisted, whacking the table again, "for I waited long enough for you to do the square thing."

She quieted down for a moment, as we run our finger down the list of names, and when we reached her's and scratched it out, she said:

"There, now mebbe you'll do as you'd ought to after this, and not make light of a woman jes cause she's poor. If some rich folks happen to have a little red-headed, bandy-legged, squint-eyed, wheezy squaller born to them, you puff it to the skies, and make it out an angel; but when poor people have a baby you don't say a word about it, even if it's the squarest-toed, blackest-haired, biggest-headed, nobbiest little kid that ever kept a woman awake nights. That's what's the matter, and that's why I stopped my paper."

And she dashed out as rapidly as she came.

How Not to Address Postal Cards.

A recent telegram contains the following, which will doubtless be of interest to our readers: The Postoffice Department received a letter to-day from a firm in Chicago, complaining that six cents additional postage was charged them on a postal card sent to their address, on the face of which, in the lower left hand corner, were written the words, "Sept. 13, 1875." As many complaints of this character are received at the Department, the following reply to the above letter is furnished for the information of the public:

GENTLEMEN: In answer to your letter of the 15th inst., I have to state that, by a ruling of this Department, anything whatever, except an address, written or printed upon the side of a postal card intended for the address, renders such card unmailable, and the same cannot be legally forwarded, unless prepaid at the letter rate—three cents. If, by inadvertence, it reaches its destination without such prepayment, it is chargeable with double the letter rates, under Section 152, Postal laws edition of 1873. In accordance with the said ruling, the card submitted was rendered subject to letter postage by the writing of the date on the side designed for the address, and having been forwarded without the prepayment of such postage, it became liable to double the letter rates—six cents. In collecting the above, however, the Postmaster at Chicago should have deducted the one cent originally paid for the card.

THE FASHIONS.

Fall Styles in Dresses, Hats, Etc.

The "Cardinal" costume, says a New York fashion writer, seems to be attracting considerable attention. I have not had an opportunity to examine it personally, but the modistes assure us that it is becoming to all figures, economical in goods, and worn in all materials. The Gabrielle dress will be worn here this fall. The French ladies have already adopted it. The perfect figure can never be displayed to a better advantage than when attired in this robe. The stout figure is not recognizable as the same which so lately appeared in the bunchy, unbecoming costume; and then, ladies, consider that you can get a stylish dress out of ten yards of twenty-seven inch material. I am sure that is something during these panicky times. I saw one trimmed all around the skirt, from the waist lengthwise, with broad velvet bands, finished at the ends with bows. The trimming on the waist and sleeves corresponded to that on the skirt.

A popular polonaise worn just now is made with plain fronts, and but slightly raised sides. The back presents a more dressy appearance. This has a basque finish, with a full back breadth, forming a puff between the crescent-shaped extensions of the fronts, falling below in a full drapery, which is increased in effect by the addition of an elaborate sash. An insertion of silk ornaments the back of this showy polonaise. The sleeves may be of a darker shade of material than the body and are trimmed with side plaiting, double ruffles and lace to correspond with other portions of the garment. This garment is exceedingly handsome in black cashmere combined with black silk. Long outside garments will be worn. These are circular, plain polonaise, and paletot shape. The prevailing colors of ladies' hose will be navy blue, seal brown, and cardinal red, worn in solid colors.

The bonnet, as every woman knows, the principal article of her out-door toilet, is not likely to change much before the month of October. Between this time and then the different flaring brims which distinguish both hats and bonnets will be retained as the most decided favorites, although such other shapes as the sailor hat, set far back upon the head, and the drooping brim, which is modest and stylish, are found among popular varieties. There is at present no perceptible difference between hats and bonnets, except that difference which may be suggested by different trimmings.

Elderly ladies wear ribbon-strings, and matrons in middle life add any drapery of lace which may pass from the back of the hat, fastening beneath the chin. This style is generally becoming, because it softens the expression of the lower part of the face. Often both ribbons and lace are omitted, and the masque veil, which still retains favor, is bordered with a scant ruffle of real lace. Low crowns are universally seen, and a shape which has recently made its appearance is called the "plate," from the fact that it has no crown whatever. Milliners add simulated crowns made of ribbon, or velvet, and flowers, with usually a single ostrich tip added. The newest Derby hats, chosen for traveling purposes, are dark brown, and dark gray, as well as black. They are intended to be trimmed with a color matching that of the traveling dress, to which leading milliners add either a brilliant wing, or a slide, or buckle of filagree silver. Bottle-green veils, of silk grenadine, are yet worn, either in masque form, or covering the hat.

A Victorious Sheep.

While several gentlemen of this neighborhood were out on a fox hunt one morning last week, one of the dogs saw a sheep a good way off and made for it as fast as he could. Instead of running off, as most sheep do when they see a dog coming, this one moved forward to meet his antagonist, with a determination to save his life if possible. Both advanced rapidly, and when within ten feet of each other the sheep sprung high into the air, and fell upon the dog with such force that he was knocked flat to ground. The dog succeeded in regaining his feet, however, before the blow could be repeated, and ran off very fast, followed by the victorious sheep, jumping gullies and fences with as much activity as the dog. The chase was nearly three miles in length, and would in all probability have terminated in the death of the dog had not some children interfered.—Hamilton (Ga.) Visitor.

A Broken Back Mended.

The Manchester (N. H.) Union and American relates this instance of natural surgery: "A singular case is reported from Brentwood. Two or three years ago Mr. James Hoyt sustained an injury to his back, which was called a partial dislocation of the spinal column. In consequence the young man was paralyzed in the lower extremities, being unable to walk or stand. His case was pronounced incurable by the doctors. A few weeks since he had a fall, which apparently came near proving fatal, but after recovering from the shock, it was ascertained that he could use his limbs, and can now walk a mile. He is now engaged at different kinds of work, and is gaining every day. Probably the fall replaced the dislodged fragment without injury to the spinal marrow."

THE abundance of the harvest has become a tame subject. Everything in that line is immense. Corn, broom-corn, sorghum, potatoes, melons, turnips, etc., are better than ever we knew them in Kansas. It is quite common to hear such remarks as "Garden-spot of the World," "Garden of the Nation," by men who were talking of leaving the State ninety days ago.—Leavenworth Commercial.

MOLLY MORIARTY.

Molly Moriarty,
Pink of propriety,
Molly Moriarty, Molly my own;
Sure 'tis your Tim is sad,
How could his heart be glad,
Since like an icicle Molly has grown?

Och, 'twas your eyes so blue,
Cut my poor heart in two,
Each took a half of it, carried it off;
Then when I spoke of love,
Swore by the stars above,
Sure, 'twas unkind of you, Molly, to scoff.

Oft at my cabin door,
When the dull day is o'er,
Sadly I sit and send sighs on the gale;
Rain from my weeping eyes
Fully a stream supplies,
Where drink the cows that are grazed in the vale

Pigs in a pratie patch,
Running a rootin' match,
Sow in the buttermilk drinking her fill;
Cow in the cabbages,
Making sad ravages—
Everything gone to destruction at will.

[illegible]
Tim's weary head shall sleep,
Suckers and shiners shall nibble my nose
Waves rolling o'er me,
Singing a lullab,
Or a sad requiem when the wind blows.

What's that you're sayin', joy?
"Tim, come and kiss me, boy!"
Here, hould my hat, while I skip on the flure;
Come to my arms, my love,
Molly, my turtle dove,
Whoop! what a jewel you are to be sure.

Elk-Shooting in Colorado.

Elk are found in almost every part of the Park, generally in the timbered country or on mountain slopes, singly, and in bands of 10 and 15, according to the season. With proper care they can be stalked as near as 150 yards, but a good hunter who "jumps" a herd at 500 yards will bag three-fourths of the number before they are out of range. When dressed they weigh 800 to 1,200 pounds; but as a dozen tall fellows, their shapely horns laid back, go crashing and thundering through the thick pine forest, leaving a storm of branches and dust in their wake, each elk may easily be estimated to weigh a ton. If wounded at close quarters in the timber, they are dangerous foes, and quick and accurate shooting is needed, unless the hunter prefers to climb a tree, which is an awkward predicament, detrimental to temper and garments, and provocative of unfeeling remarks from comrades when one returns late at night to camp. The beauty and majesty of the stately creature require no description, and often will the hunter grieve over his glory laid low; yet elk steaks and roasts are so nice, his hide makes such excellent buckskin, and his branching antlers form such an elegant trophy and memento, that tears are seldom shed at his demise.

Just Retribution.

A man with a red goatee ran up to a small crowd of men on Jefferson avenue yesterday and stated that a man had fallen from the roof of a three-story building near the market. A hundred persons hurried to the spot, but found no sign of an accident. The man with the red goatee came sauntering along, and when pitched into he replied:

"And so a man did fall. He was right up there on that roof."

"Where did he fall?" was angrily demanded.

"Down on the roof of that other building," was the reply.

It was a distance of twenty inches or so, and the joker was chased up an alley and driven over a board fence head first.—Detroit Free Press.

THE SUFFRAGE QUESTION.

Pure Elections and Household Suffrage—Ex-Senator Doolittle's Panacea for Ballot-Box Stuffing.

We reproduce below that portion of Hon. James R. Doolittle's recent address before the Winnebago County (Ill.) Agricultural Society relating to the suffrage question:

How shall we save the republic from the dangers of frauds at elections, as now conducted, especially in the large cities? Fraudulent voting, fraudulent counting and fraudulent stuffing of ballot-boxes in large cities from New Orleans to Chicago, have come to be practiced as one of the fine arts of legerdemain. How shall it be arrested? There must be a remedy for this growing evil; or republican institutions will prove to be a cheat and a sham. The essence of republicanism is that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed, and that rulers are chosen by the people. The people's voice is heard through the ballot-box. If a thousand votes, honestly given by a thousand freemen, are nullified and beaten by a thousand false votes the ballot-box is made to speak, not the truth, but a lie. It no longer speaks the will of the people, but the will of the few who usurp office by fraud. It ceases to be republican. It becomes an aristocracy of the meanest kind; an aristocracy of swindlers, of cheats, of liars, of traitors to republican ideas. Of two things, one is certain. Either these frauds at the ballot-box must come to an end, or the republic will perish. If these frauds are successful in large cities they will spread into all the larger towns. Is there no remedy? I answer: Yes, there is; there must be a remedy. Take a large city—Chicago, for example. Let the city be divided into precincts so small that all the voters, not exceeding say 750 in a precinct, can meet in one hall on election day. If there is no hall large enough to be obtained, put up a temporary shelter of boards, or pitch a tent. In addition to other provisions of law, make election days legal holidays, and require every voter, without valid excuse, to attend the elections and do his duty as a citizen, and thus aid in guarding the purity and sanctity of the ballot-box. I hold in my hand copies of the records of town meetings in Massachusetts; of Woburn in 1640, and of Reading in 1657. They imposed a fine on every voter who did not attend the town meeting by 9 o'clock in the morning, or who absented himself without leave until they adjourned. Do you think there was any false voting, or false counting, then? They made it their business to attend in person, and to discharge their whole duty. Why cannot we do ours? Are liberty and country less dear to us? Let the laws provide that the voters may themselves, at one election, choose three of the Judges and Clerks to receive the votes at the next; no voter being allowed to vote for more than one, so that the minority may select at least one of the Clerks and one of the Judges of Elections in every precinct. Let it be provided, also, that the Judges of Elections shall be upon a raised platform, that the ballot-boxes and the Judges shall be in full view of all the voters of the precinct during the elections. In all cities of more than 30,000 people, to guard against repeating, false counting and stuffing of false votes in ballot-boxes, let the law provide that the name and place of residence of each voter shall be written upon his ballot and publicly read in the assembly before being put into the box. And, if challenged, require his identity and place of residence to be proved by the affidavits of at least two electors then present, who, if either Judge demands it, shall, on oath, be further examined as to his identity and place of residence in presence of all the electors. This provision would require a change in the Constitutions of many of the States. These provisions once adopted, in addition to the present legal requirements, would secure the ballot-box against fraud in voting and fraud in counting. The Judges of Election, aided by the police and by the presence of the citizens, could preserve perfect order, and make the elections as quiet in the city as in a country town. It may be said that this last provision impairs the secrecy of the ballot in large towns. That is true to some extent. But the necessity of preserving the ballot-box against fraud in large cities overbalances all supposed advantages of the secret ballot. The argument for secrecy is this: that the laboring man may be intimidated by the capitalist if he knows how he votes. But the day for that reasoning is past in all large towns. The laborer no longer fears the capitalist. The greatest writer upon government we know, Baron Montesquieu, as well as Cicero, who spoke from actual observation, says that the laws which rendered the suffrages secret in Rome, toward the close of the republic, were the cause of its decline. I quote their very words: "By rendering the suffrages secret in the Roman Republic, all was lost." And why? Secrecy became the cover for fraud, bribery and false counting in that great city. Gibbon, also, the great historian and philosopher, dates the decline of the Roman Republic from the introduction of secret voting. Besides, the open ballot, publicly given, shows courage, manhood, freedom. It tends to make men worthy to be free. But, gentlemen, there is another great reform in suffrage, which, as I think, all thoughtful men should favor.

When fully considered in all its bearing it will, I believe, command the assent of the great majority of all political parties. It will do more than any other one thing to bring good government to our large cities, by placing it upon the true basis of human society. We have adopted in all the States universal manhood suffrage. The reform suggested accepts that, and does not propose to change it. It, however, recognizes the most essential element of modern Christian civilization—the family—its rights, its duties and its powers. It proposes to give to householders and heads of families who, for such time as shall be fixed by law—say one or two years—have lived with and supported their families in the district where they vote, two votes—one to represent their manhood in common with all other men, and one to represent the household, including women and children. The term householder, or head of family, in the great majority of cases will, of course, mean married man; but not in all cases. As, for instance, a man may be the head of a family and householder whose widowed mother or sister keeps house. The reasons why the head of a family should have a double vote when men without families have but one may be stated briefly as follows: 1. Because the man without family represents but one human being, while the head of a family represents always two, and generally more. 2. Because a man without family has not more than one-half as much at stake in good government as the head of a family. 3. Because, other things equal, the man without family is only half as well educated in all that concerns the good of society as the head of a family, living with them and supporting them by his own exertions. 4. Because the man without family has had little if any experience in governing in human society; whereas the head of a family, by the laws of God and of man, is trained to govern. In the family the man is king and the woman is queen. It is a little nation by itself. Within its government all human beings are reared, trained and governed for twenty-one years—half and more than half of the average years of human life—those years during which character is formed and children are molded into men and women. Is there a single man without family who hears me who does not feel the truth of all this? Is there one who will not frankly say so? Some persons favor property qualifications, especially in cities. But that will be found neither practical nor possible; nor does it agree with our theory "that government derives its just powers [not from property, but] from the consent of the governed;" whereas, the reform proposed agrees with that theory. The man without family, by his vote, gives the consent of one only—his own consent; whereas, the head of a family consents not only for himself, but for the household which he governs. Therefore, unless the head of the family have a greater voice than the man without family, the consent of the household—the consent of all the women and children of the country—goes for nothing at all in making up the consent of the governed. But the question arises, what effect would this reform have in great cities? Take Chicago again, for example. Suppose the provisions I have mentioned were adopted (or some better ones) to prevent fraud at the elections, how would this double vote by the heads of families operate in that great city? Can any man doubt it would tend to place control over the elections in the hands of those most deeply interested in the good government of the city? Any head of a family—I care not how humble he may be—desires such a police and such a government, that his wife and children may at any time, by day or by night, walk the streets with safety. It is with him a constant, ever-present anxiety and duty to do all he can to have it so; while the man without family thinks and cares little for police so long as he takes care of himself and has no one else to care for. It has been doubted by some whether, in a republic perfectly organized, any but heads of families should vote at all. They urge that, in the beginning, and in the very nature of things, the family is the political unit of human society. Within the family government is not political, it is purely domestic. The home is a castle, within which human laws do not enter. Within that the laws of God, as stamped upon the very constitution of man, govern. Man and woman together make up man. Each is the complement of the other—neither without the other complete. Man and woman, in the holy relation of marriage, are both required to make up the full idea of man—male and female, as God created them. From that relation and in that relation the coming generations are reared. Therefore it is that in the family, the home, under the roof which shelters the hours of sleep and of infancy, is found the true basis of human society. Into that little kingdom no one can enter except by permission; and if any enter, so long as they remain under that roof, however humble, they are subject, by the laws of God and man, to the head of the family. Heads of families, therefore, have natural rights, which, in the organization of government, should be respected and defended. In some of the New England colonies, where, under township governments, our republican system grew, it was provided, when fifty families formed a settlement in some new town, they could be organized. Fifty heads of families, assembled in town meeting, constituted a little republic with certain political powers. One hundred heads of families had still greater powers. But in these republics, growing up from nature, none but the heads of families had any voice in political affairs. England, in the great reform of 1868, in extending suffrage, stopped with householders, thus recognizing the household as the true basis of political society. Some may say the reform I propose would induce men to marry to become the heads of families. That is true; and because true, it is one of the strongest reasons in its favor. That such regulations as I have named in the early colonies tended to early and happy marriages there is no doubt; for in those days almost all young men and women were married before they were twenty-five. They became the heads of families; their happy homes were blessed and the country was blessed with what is worth more than gold and diamonds, more than houses and lands—many, many noble children, with strong minds and brave hearts in strong bodies, to become the men and the women who have made our country what it is—the light and glory of the world. Ladies and gentlemen, if the reform proposed does tend to build up families, and hold out a most powerful incentive to induce early marriage, that certainly is no reason against it. A republic does not consist of houses and furniture, porticos and public places; but of men and women in happy and independent homes. Let me call to mind that the ancient republics in their better days favored early marriage—giving it honor and power. They went so far as to punish celibacy. In the Roman republic, husbands and fathers had extensive privileges, "and married men who had the most children," says Montesquieu, "were always preferred, whether in the pursuit or in the exercise of honors." The Consul who had the most children was first to receive the badge of office, and had his choice of the armies and of the provinces of the republic. The Senator who had most children had his name written first upon the catalogue of Senators, and was the first in giving his opinion in the Senate of Rome, that greatest body of statesmen the world has ever seen. If a citizen of Rome had three children, he was exempted from all petty and troublesome offices. A married man could stand sooner for office, and every child gave a dispensation for another year. The object of all these laws was to induce men to marry; to marry young, and marry not to be heirs, but to have them. To this extent of giving a double voice to the head of families, let us follow the examples of the great republics in their better days. Let us build up, strengthen and honor the homes of our people. Let us give to the heads of households the power, dignity and honor, which of right, by the laws of God and man, belong to them. This measure appeals for support to all heads of families; to all wives who preside in their happy homes; to all mothers who have discharged their highest, noblest and most sacred of earthly duties, in bearing and rearing up children to be men and women, fit for the duties of earth, and when they are over, fit for the society of the blest in the eternal mansions, and to all young men and young women who desire to build up happy homes for themselves. The support of all these must and will be earnest, intense and nearly unanimous; while men yet without families, who cherish the memories of the homes of their childhood, and know the blessings of home government, will generally unite in favor of this great reform.

Offensive People.

If to be a good man and a successful man is offensive to the world at large, to be praised is exasperating. No greater unkindness can be done to any man than to praise him much. People generally will stand a moderate compliment paid to a neighbor, while they are left to qualify it, or to admit it as a matter of generosity or courtesy; but praise persisted in will ruin the reputation of anybody. There is nothing more offensive to the average human being than persistent laudation bestowed upon another. To hear a man warmly praised is sufficient usually to make us hate him; and it is only necessary to have the praise repeated often enough to make us desire to shoot him. Praise is one of the articles we would like to have distributed a little—not that we want it, but the object of it is not the best man—if we know ourselves. Virtue is a good thing, temperance is a good thing, genius is not a bad thing altogether; but no man is to be mentioned so many as ten times as having either of them in possession without making his name a stench and an offense to the nostrils of a sensitive world. The true way of getting along well in the world is not to make one's self offensive to one's friends by excellence of character and habits of life, by success, or by doing anything praiseworthy. Let us strike the average as nearly as possible. Let us be good fellows rather than good men, and choke the first man who dares to ascribe to us a single virtue. Let us all keep down and out of sight. All that we do for ourselves, and all that we do for mankind, only feeds hell with slanderers, and so betrays the baseness of human nature that we may well blush to think that we are members of the human race.—Dr. J. G. Holland, in Scribner for October.

John Randolph's Religious Views.

Mr. Randolph was a great Bible reader and was deeply concerned with religious subjects. He employed an excellent and eloquent man, Mr. Abner Clopton, to preach every Sunday to his negroes, in the large chapel he had erected on his plantation. When at home he invariably attended these services, taking his seat by the preacher on the open platform, from which the preacher conducted the services. On many occasions, while kneeling beside the preacher, who was prone to be carried away by the fervor of prayer, Randolph would slap him on the back and call out loudly, "Clopton, that won't do; that's not sound doctrine. Clopton, take that back," and if Clopton remonstrated, Randolph, though keeping himself on his knees, was ready at once for an argument to maintain his point. No one but Mr. Clopton, who knew the eccentricity and honest motives of the man, could have borne with these irreverent interruptions while in the midst of prayer; but Mr. Clopton, when he found Randolph determined to argue the point, either gracefully yielded or proposed to note the point and argue it at the dwelling-house. To visitors at the chapel, and these were many, these scenes were exceedingly curious and sometimes absurdly ludicrous. But that was Mr. Randolph's way.

It is said that on one cold Sunday, in this chapel on Mr. Randolph's plantation, while giving out the hymn in the old-fashioned way, two lines at a time, and it was being lustily sung by the negroes, Mr. Clopton, the preacher, observed a negro man put his foot, upon which was a new brogan, on the hot stove. Turning toward him, he said in his measured voice: "You rascal you, you'll burn your shoe." As this was a rhyme of the exact metre of the hymn, the negroes all sung it in their loudest tones. Smiling at the error, the preacher attempted mildly to explain by saying: "My colored friends, indeed you are wrong; I didn't intend that for the song;" but there it was again, another rhyme in good measure, so the negroes sung that too with pious fervor. Turning to his congregation, the preacher said somewhat sharply, "I hope you will not sing again, until I have had time to explain;" but this only aroused the negroes, who sang the last word, with increased vigor. Mr. Clopton, feeling that his tongue seemed to be tuned to the rhyme, abandoned all efforts at explanation, and went on with the services.

The Epizooty.

A dispatch from New York says: The disease among horses so prevalent in this section, is not so severe as the late epizootic. The horses first begin to sneeze and cough. Every horse in the stable of one of the street railroad companies was more or less affected with a cough, which in some cases was very severe and frequent. Mustard poultices were immediately applied to their heads and chests. This treatment proved so effective that the horses were enabled to resume their work without any injury. The attack was attributed to the sudden change in the weather. The animals ate their food the same as ever, and the manager had no doubt would be perfectly recovered as soon as the weather moderates. The complaint was merely a combination of cold and slight inflammation of the bronchial tubes. The proprietors of many of the private stables, who were called upon also, said that their horses have been more or less afflicted with cold and sore throat.

Why Franklin Used Simple Language.

Tradition has it that years ago, when Benjamin Franklin was a lad, he began to study philosophy, and soon became fond of applying technical names to common objects. One evening when he mentioned to his father that he had swallowed some acephalous mollusks, the old man was much alarmed, and suddenly seizing him, called loudly for help. Mrs. Franklin came with warm water, and the hired man rushed in with the garden pump. They forced half a gallon down Benjamin's throat, then held him by the heels over the edge of the porch and shook him, while the old man said: "If we don't get them things out of Benny he will be pizened, sure." When they were out, and Benjamin explained that the articles alluded to were oysters, his father fondled him for an hour with a trunk strap for scaring the family. Tradition adds that ever afterward Franklin's language was marvelously simple and explicit.

VEGETINE does not deceive invalids into false hopes by purging and creating a fictitious appetite, but assists nature in clearing and purifying the whole system, leading the patient gradually to perfect health.

MANY persons suffer with sick headache and nervous headache, usually induced by costiveness, indigestion, etc. Such persons will find relief if not cure, by keeping the bowels open with small doses of Parsons' Purgative Pills.

HAVE you inflammatory sore throat, stiff joints, or lameness from any cause whatever? Have you rheumatic or other pains in any part of the body? If so, use Johnson's Anodyne Liniment, internally and externally.

SCHENCK'S PULMONIC SYRUP, FOR THE CURE OF CONSUMPTION, COUGHS AND COLDS.

The great virtue of this medicine is that it ripens the matter and throws it out of the system, purifies the blood, and thus effects a cure.

SCHENCK'S SEA WEED TONIC, FOR THE CURE OF DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, ETC.

The Tonic produces a healthy action of the stomach, creating an appetite, forming chyle, and curing the most obstinate cases of indigestion.

SCHENCK'S MANDRAKE PILLS, FOR THE CURE OF LIVER COMPLAINT, ETC.

These Pills are alterative and produce a healthy action of the liver without the least danger, as they are free from calomel and yet more efficacious in restoring a healthy action of the liver.

These remedies are a certain cure for Consumption, as the Pulmonic Syrup ripens the matter and purifies the blood. The Mandrake Pills act upon the liver, create a healthy bile, and remove all diseases of the liver, often a cause of Consumption. The Sea Weed Tonic gives tone and strength to the stomach, makes a good digestion, and enables the organs to form good blood; and thus creates a healthy circulation of healthy blood. The combined action of these medicines, as thus explained, will cure every case of Consumption, if taken in time, and the use of the medicines persevered in. Dr. Schenck is professionally at his principal office, corner Sixth and Arch Streets, Philadelphia, every Monday, where all letters for advice must be addressed. Schenck's medicines for sale by all Druggists.

WILHOFT'S ANTI-PERIODIC OR FEVER AND AGUE TONIC.—This invaluable and standard family medicine is now a household word, and maintains its reputation unimpaired. It is indorsed by the medical profession, and prescribed daily in the Charity Hospital and other Hospitals in New Orleans. Wilhoft's Tonic is thus highly recommended by the leading medical men of the country, and is worthy of such indorsement. WHEELOCK, FINLAY & CO., Proprietors, New Orleans.

VEGETINE

PURIFIES THE BLOOD AND RESTORES THE HEALTH.

SEVENTY-ONE YEARS OF AGE.

EAST MARSHFIELD, Aug. 22, 1870.

Mr. H. R. STEVENS:

Dear Sir—I am seventy-one years of age; have suffered many years with Kidney Complaint, weakness in my back and stomach. I was induced by friends to try your VEGETINE, and I think it the best medicine for weakness of the Kidneys I ever used. I have tried many remedies for this complaint, and never found so much relief as from the VEGETINE. It strengthens and invigorates the whole system. Many of my acquaintances have taken it, and I believe it to be good for all the complaints for which it is recommended.

Yours truly,
JOSIAH H. SHERMAN.

EXPERIENCE OF YEARS.

CHARLESTOWN, Mass., March 19, 1869.

Mr. H. R. STEVENS:

This is to certify that I have used your "Blood Preparation" (VEGETINE) in my family for several years, and think that for Scrofula or Cankerous Humors, or Rheumatic affections, it cannot be excelled; and as a blood purifier and Spring medicine, it is the best thing I have ever used; and I have used almost everything. I can cheerfully recommend it to any in need of such a medicine. Yours respectfully,

MRS. A. A. DINSMORE,
19 Russell Street.

WHAT IS NEEDED.

BOSTON, Feb. 13, 1871.

Mr. H. R. STEVENS:

Dear Sir—About one year since I found myself in a feeble condition from general debility. VEGETINE was strongly recommended to me by a friend who had been much benefited by its use. I procured the article and, after using several bottles, was restored to health, and discontinued its use. I feel quite confident that there is no medicine superior to it for those complaints for which it is especially prepared, and would cheerfully recommend it to those who feel that they need something to restore them to perfect health.

Respectfully yours,
U. L. PETTINGILL,
Firm of S. M. Pettingill & Co., 10 State-st., Boston.

VEGETINE extends its influence into every part of the human organism, commencing with its foundation, correcting diseased action and restoring vital powers, creating a healthy formation and purification of the blood, driving out disease, and leaving Nature to perform its allotted task. AUBURN INDIANA, OCT., 7, 1875

Carl Schurz, made a speech against the Democracy of Ohio in Cincinnati the other day, and the Ligonier Banner is jubilent over it. Straws show which way the wind blows.

Senator Morton sounded the key note for the Pensylvania Republicans at Pittsburg the other day, and now the Democrats are confident of 20,000 majority.

A Chicago grand jury have indicted a conductor and an engineer simply for running over a man. The man was killed and the railroad men are held for trial. This is a new departure and smacks of the effete despotisms of the east, where the verdict "nobody to blame" has not become stereotyped.

The cowardly practice of ridiculing as honest and fair a Democrat as Gov. Allen, of Ohio, so readily indulged in by the so-called Democratic paper of Fort Wayne, may, from its standpoint be considered very smart. Its egotism is, however, too amusing to be offensive.

The Indianapolis News says, Senator Morton is to open the Pensylvania campaign at Pittsbug to-morrow. He ought to put up a sign; say about like this.

O. P. MORTON,

Designer and Manufacturer of Key Notes. Campaign Accurately Pitched at short Notice, Rallying Cries Constangly in Stock.

Stimulating Cordials and Soothing Syrups Accurately Compounded.

Refferences: (By permission) James G. Blaine, of Maine, William Allen, of Ohio.

Don't Forget the Place—Sign of the Bloody Shirt."

The State Sentinel say: For the purpose of bringing discredit upon the legal tender currency, the organs of the money power are in the habit of quoting it at a discount, instead of quoting gold at a premium. This might be correct in California, but in a country where gold does not circulate as money it is not right to rate it as the measure of values. All business here is done on a currency basis and it is both illogical and disingenuous to quote the article that forms this basis at a discount. The proper way to designate the difference between gold and legal tender notes is to quote the former at a premium and not the latter at a discount. This these organs know full well, but in order to serve party ends, they assume a false promise that they may draw a wrong conclusion.

The contractionists call our greenback currency, dirty irredeemable rags. They have been considered good enough in the past, to pay the soldiers with, the bond holder took his in gold. The unfortunate maimed soldier who draws a pitiful allowance quarterly from the government is paid in rags, while his opu'ent fellow-citizen who rolls by in a lordly equipage draws his quarterly interest in specie. The one risked his life; the other his money. Blood is paid in paper; the claim of money is liquidated in gold. The poor poverty-stricken wretch who begs for labor and is compelled by a life of enforced idleness to provide for the necessities of life by stealing a loaf of bread is denounced as a "thieving tramp," and laws of unusual severity are enacted for his punishment, while the influential politician who steals his thousands is courted as a hero, and given every opportunity to settle his "trifling irregularities." The demand of the people is for a reformation of these glaring evils. Too long have we had one law for the poor man and another for the rich; too long has the depreciated currency formed the circulating medium for the poor and gold the currency of the rich. The people demand a change, but not such a change as would sink the laboring classes deeper into the slough of despond and transform five-sevenths of the American people into paupers They demand that all classes shall be placed upon an equal footing and that the present volume shall not be interfered with, to the end that the money now lying idle in the banks may be induced to re-enter the channels of legitimate trade. Such a policy would benefit the laboring classes; but such is not the policy of the Republican party, and never will be while the organization remains in the gold-bought possession of the bond-holders and specie brokers.

Sammy Pommert, he who leads 'em all in the tensorial art, has just purchased new mirors, raisor keen, that will shave you clean, &c. Call and see him over Cool's grocery.

KAHN,

North of the Court House Ensly Block, Auburn, Ind

Bad, rainy weather has set in at this writing, and the outlook for the fair this week is very discouraging. Last week the weather was lovely, and it is unfortunate it did not come off then, but its hard to tell ahead how the weather will be.

A man by the name of Picksley, met with a sad death last Wednesday in Smithfield township. He was working in the well of Mr. Henry Clark, when the damps seized him and he was taken out a corpse. Another party came very near meeting with the same fate.

Trustee matters are in bad shape in Richland township. A suit has been commenced against the former by the present trustee for funds not yet turned over. There is need of a radical change in this trustee business, so that it will not be necessary to sue bondsmen to recover the proper funds of the township.

The Northern Indian Fair at Fort Wayne, organized last year is only $13,000 in debt. The managers of that instution had better come up in this county and learn how to run an agricultural society so as to strike a dividend of 25 per cent each year as the organization at Waterloo has done since it commenced.

Dave Williams is visiting his parents and friends. He went west several years ago to grow up with the country, and he succeeded in doing so. This trip to his birth-place, was used as a bridal tour. We wish Dave and his new wife a successful journey through life, and that the little fellows from his knee may sing, Happy is the miller that lives by the mill, &c.

The barn of C. O. A. McClellan, Esq., was entirely consumed by fire on last Thursday morning. A horse, carriage and sleigh were saved from the contents It is supposed to have been accidentally set on fire by some tramp, who had no doubt intended to spend the night there: The fire engin prevented the flames from communicating with the wood house and residence.

Fort Wayne was yesterday the scene of a murder which was the direct result of the assaults of the Romish priesthood upon the common school system of Indiana. A protestant boy was attacked by a mob of Catholic children, backed up by their parents and the priests, and beaten to death.

The above is from the "Inter-Ocean,' as everybody who reads that paper would readily imagine No other paper can imitate this one in that respect. If it can get up a bood and thunder story without any facts, all the better. It attempts to bring religion into politics, and attack the Catholics. The fact is, there was nobody killed at Fort Wayne as reported above. The whole thing is a fabrication, gotten up for political purposes.

Should we not have a fire engin? Our immunity from the ravages of fire has been so long and uninterrupted that we seem totally indifferent to our own protection: This cannot last always. A ruinous conflagration will learn us a very dear lesson. Auburn has never spent a cent for anything in the way of protecting ourselves from fire. Can we put this off much longer? Would it not be discreet to go to work at once to purchase an engine, and not trust any longer to the mercy of the fire demon? The fire at Waterloo last week, might have proved very disastrous had it not been for their engine. Let us not wait until some fire occurs that will destroy many times more than the cost of an engine, but make a move at once in this direction.

An old resident who has resided in the West for forty-one years, gives the following weather prognostications, and as the gentleman can't either read or write, it is naturally supposed that his prophesies are correct:

"After the next moon shows the last bit of its face, we shall have the pleasantest autumn we have had for many years. Early in November there will be some cold days, but it will be mild and pleasant during most of the month, and until the 20th of December when the streams will freeze, but only a thin sheet of ice will be formed. Between Christmas and New Years there will be heavy snows for a few days. In January we shall have the finest Indian summer we have had since 1856, and there will be only a few cold days. During the winter there will be more rain than snow, and little or no sleighing.

THE ladies department of shoes and gaiters just filled up with a fine new stock at Woodford's.

Now's Your Time.

People now-a-days are most too apt to put things off which they need very much on account of hard times, and instead of taking care of their health and feeling comfortable they will wear old ragged cloths, no underclothes, and even go without stockings. A great many do this simply because clothing has been so high priced and money so scarce. This high priced business has been knocked in the head by the Lauferty, clothing establishment. He has one of the best and cheapest stocks of clothing, gents' furnishing goods, ever brought to the county, within the reach of every body as to price. So remember, reader, if you need anything in this line, now is your time.

LOST.—A medium sized milch cow, main color white, with small red spots, about six years old. Strayed from my premises about a week ago. A liberal reward will be given for information or her return. F. PICKER.

The Ladies of the Presbyterian church having no social this week, on account of the fair, will give a mush and milk supper at Ensley Hall Tuesday evening Ice cream, lemonade &c. Admission to hall ten cents. Come one come all, a good time certain.

The ladies of the society will meet at the Presbyterain church Thursday, evening Oct., 7th, after prayer meeting to make arrangements for the same.

Cold weather will soon be upon us, and now is the time to provide those articles so much needed for our protection from the chilly blasts of winter. None of these are so important as boots and shoes. You want to get a good servicable article at a reasonable price. Woodford offers extra inducements to all callers at his store where he keeps a very fine stock of all kinds of goods. He has just received a new lot of boots for men's wear, and a large assortment of new fine styles for the ladies. Do not fail to call and see them, south of the jewelry store.

Base Ball—Two Games.

Last Friday we were visited by two nines—Albion Athletics and Columbia City Club. The fornoon was not very pleasant, being damp and cold; nevertheless a game was had between our club and Columbia City. The Columbia boys started out with the old rules of 1872, but after calling time for several innings and having the new rules explained, they managed to play the game as it should be. But few innings were had until Columbia begin to breath, Oh, when this cruel game is over, no others need apply. The score stood 12 to 30 but if the Umpir's eyes had'nt have been bias it would resulted, 8 and 30.

ALBION VS. COLUMBIA CITY.

In the afternoon the above clubs had a game which was played well by each nine and a great deal of interest manifested by the outsiders. At the begining of the game Columbia City was no where, and everyone expected a large score for the Albion nine. But at this point the Columbia boys "woke up" and brought sixteen tallies in one inning The scores for this game were 23 and 23 in favor of Albion.

THE DANCE.

In the evening they all tipped the fantastic toe to the fiddle and the bow, until train time, when the parties, with several of our boys in company, repaired to the depot, at the Junction, and boarded the train for Albion, "lovelist village of the plain."

TERRIBLE SLAUGHTER.

E, E. Williams at the Head of it

The above gentleman, known far and wide, has always carried with him a fine reputation, high-standing in society, and never done a wrong that he would have to flee to the "land of refuge" on account of it. He is acute in all business transaction, and aims to do justice to his fellow man. Here's where the slaughter comes in. Mr. Williams has purchased the Fruit House, and will slay high prices in every direction. He will sell goods at the same prices the Fort Wayne Fruit House does and keep all grades constantly on hand. George Miller, with ten years experience in the business, has been engaged as foreman, and with his long time spent at Wayne, in the same line of trade will certainly enable him to keep everything in good shape.

Mr. Williams would be pleased to see all his old customers, and give them the benefit of his low prices. Odd Fellows' building Auburn, Ind.

Court Items.

The case of Amanda Leonard against Dr J. S. Barnett, of Butler, for malpractice, was engaging attention of Court, Jury and several attorneys yesterday.

The array of legal talent on each side was good, and a desperate fight with the jury was a principal feature.

The following State cases have been disposed of:

The State against C. Fox, charged with violating liquor law, dismissed.

The same against Wm. Moore on same charge, fined $12.

The same against C. Fox for maintaining a nuisance. Verdict, not guilty.

The same against Wm. Moore for violation of liquor law, dismissed.

The same against R. Burniston for assault and battery. Jury disagreed.

The same against Johnson for grand larceny. Verdict, two years in the penitentiary and fined $50

The same against Broughton for assault and battery. Papers quashed and defendant discharged.

J. A. Woodhull, of Angola, was in attendance last Monday, but he made a short stay.

A. A. Chapin, of Kendallville, is in patient attendance at the shrine of justice.

Court will adjourn to-day until next Monday.

BUTLER ITEMS.

—The only bit of fashion news that I have been able to glean is this, Fans are decidedly old fashioned.

—Mr. Wm. H. Hubble, an old citizen, will start with his family for their new home in Terre Haute, next week.

—PERSONAL.— Messrs Peek and Swanton, young men who formerly resided here, are now making a short visit with the boys?

—PRODUCE.— The wheat in this vicinity is nearly all threshed. —Corn huskings, apple parings and nuttings are in order with the young folks.—Butler is getting better—Mammoth Radishes, Pumpkins, Turnips, Potatoes &c are on the way to the Fair at Waterloo, and that reminds me, "our folks" are getting ready to go too, not very many of them but the majority of those who do go will take something to exhibit.

A SHARP PROCEEDING.— While J. M. Johnson's little son, a boy probably eleven years old, was playing at a neighbor's house, he fell on a cap belonging to a playmate; the cap had a very large pin in it which entered his knee and when the cap had been pulled away the head of the pin was still imbedded in the flesh; a pair of pinchers were used to draw it out and it was found that the pin had struck the bone and turned aside. The boy said that while the pin was in he felt no pain, instead, a sensation of numbness, and he was unable to bend his knee. He is now lame but it is not thought to be serious.

LENA.

From Angola.

OCTOBER 4th, 1875.

—Potatoes, selling on the streets for the small sum of 16c per bushel.

Funeral services took place at the Christian church at 2 o'clock P. M. Rev. Wm. P. Aylesworth officiated.

—In Angola, Sept. 29th, 1875, Maggie only daughter of John Walker, died of diphtheria. Age 13 years 9 months and 8 days.

Funeral took place at the residence at 3 o'clock P. M. Rev. W. R. Kestler officiating.

—A portion of the lumber for the Round House on the S. R. R. at this place, has been delivered since last week.

—Notwithstanding the failure of our apple crop, there has already been bought 800 barrels for shipping, from here alone.

—Prof. R. V. Carlin, has set an example worthy of imitation by all, in the grading, flagging and paving in front of his residence. Let all those who can follow suit.

—G. R. Wickwire, has made valuable improvements east of the Methodist church, in shape of a fine large dwelling house.

—Our marshal has had several good crossings put down, and quite a large amount of grading done up in a scientific manner.

Our friend W. W. Squier, who has been sick long and dangerous, has so far recovered, that he is able to be about the house again.

—There has been 300,000 barrel hoops shipped from here since last winter.—We have three cooper shops. Mr. Welsh has manufactured, for to be used here, 200 flour barrels, 500 for eggs, 600 for apples, 600 tight barrels and 300 firkins and tubs, has cut 150,000 staves with his machine, which has been run but a few days. The other shops have done a trifle less.

Miss Egenia Poland, youngest daughter of G. W. Poland, of this place, died at the residence of her parents, September 28th, at the age of 18 years 1 month and 20 days. Miss Poland who has from childhood to the present time, been well known and beloved by our citizens, was stricken down by typhoid fever about a week before, and had also the fatal misfortune to have an attack of what is at present in this vicinity an epidemic diphtheria. She suffered much, but has speedily through it proved, at last ended her earthly sufferings. She was very highly esteemed for her quiet, unassuming lady like ways, and her memory will be cherished by many friends as that of one who has too soon bade adiew to the world, and joined the throng beyond the dark waters.

ANGOLA.

Spencerville Items.

OCTOBER 2d, 1875.

—Synod next week.

—Our stores are filled to overflowing.

—Ves. Zimmerman has moved to town.

—Money appears to be plenty and business is lively.

—The young folks had a social at Dan Overholtzer's the other evening and had a good time generally.

—We learn that there is considerable sickness in the county and doctors are kept busy.

—The wife of Robert Davis died last Wednesday, after an illness of two weeks.

—Some of our roosters are expecting to take a dose of Dr. Emanuel's conduct regulator, ere long.

—Spencerville is free from drunkards and drunken rows; the citizens support good schools, good churches and good Sunday schools.

—In Spencerville items of last week appeared this: Croquet games and swinging on the gate is postponed, should read, are postponed, etc.

—Dr. Hull has left Spencerville and gone to Ohio. He is a good genial fellow and understands his business. May success be his.

—Prof. McTorent, in his linen coat, has been with us. We learn that he had good success' (in getting away without paying his hall rent and board bill.) John Provines says the next Prof. that rents his hall will pay for it in advance. We do not hesitate to recommend McTorent as being a perfect humbug and swindler, who is running over the country palming himself off as a phrenologist, mesmerist, physiogomist and elocutionist, swindling the people out of his board. We think a pleasant ride on a rail would do him good.

—We recommend the correspondent of the "Republican" and author of the article headed, "The Fair," with the signature "Fairness," to read the article on the opposite side page of the same paper, headed, "That Unfair Fair Not Fair," and stop his blowing. He reminds us forcibly of the old Yankee who fired a dozen shots at a coon that he supposed he saw on a fence, and afterward found it to be a louse on his own eyebrow.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

A PRIZE-FIGHT was contested near New York, last week, by two brutes named Jack Townley and Patsy Gallagher, the latter winning in thirty-one rounds. Both were badly punished. ....Mr. Moody, the revivalist, has started up his forces for the fall and winter religious campaign at Northfield, Mass.

A HORRIBLE accident is reported from Haverstraw, N. Y. During the progress of a fire in a paint factory, one of the walls fell, burying beneath it a number of workmen who were endeavoring to extinguish the flames. Four men were killed outright, their bodies being shockingly burned and mangled, and several others were badly hurt, two mortally.

THE grand jury of Erie county, N. Y., has indicted the following State officials, and contractors and dealers with the State, for the crimes of bribery, larceny and conspiracy: Geo. D. Lord, canal contractor, and late member of Assembly; Alexander Barkley, Canal Commissioner in 1871-4; Thaddeus C. Davis, Canal Appraiser; Wm. H. Bowman, counsel for Geo. D. Lord; Lewis J. Bennett, canal contractor.

NED O'BALDWIN, the Irish giant and prize-fighter, was shot and fatally wounded in a saloon row with his partner, Mike Finnell, in New York, last week....The wife of Ebenezer Dunsmore, of Weathersfield, Vt., poisoned herself and her three children the other day. Cause, temporary insanity.... Serious labor troubles are reported from Fall River, Mass. The long strike of the mill operatives there, it was hoped, would be brought to a close on Monday, Sept. 27, the employers and employes having agreed upon a basis upon which work should be resumed. As the operatives presented themselves at their respective mills on that morning they were asked as an additional condition to sign an agreement that they would not enter into a strike against the mill-owners. Very few signed the paper, the majority being greatly incensed at the exaction of additional terms. For a time serious trouble was apprehended, but as a general thing the operatives were orderly and well behaved, and only a few breaches of the peace occurred.

REV. DR. GEORGE B. PORTEOUS and Lewis Benjamin were drowned in Long Island Sound, a few days ago, by the capsizing of a small boat in which they were rowing....Theodore Tilton delivered his first lecture of the season at Cooper Institute, New York, on the evening of the 29th ult. He received what would be ordinarily called an ovation, for there were nearly three thousand people present, and they were lavish in their demonstrations of admiration for the lecturer.

TWO MEN were killed and several others dangerously injured near Pottsville, Pa., last week, by the explosion of gas in a coal mine.

THE WEST.

THE Chicago papers announce the death of George W. Gage, an old, prominent and wealthy citizen, aged 63. He was for many years connected with the leading hotels of that city, latterly with the Grand Pacific.

THE Commissioners sent out to the Red Cloud Agency to treat with the Sioux for the cession of the Black Hills were recently treated to a genuine scare. While holding a council with the savages, a number of the dissatisfied braves mounted their ponies and commenced circling and yelling about the camp with their war-paint on, and giving every sign of hostility. For a time it looked as though there would be a fight between the Indians and the cavalry who were guarding the council, but luckily the bad warriors were pacified. The Commissioners were greatly frightened, remembering the fate of Gen. Canby, and at one time thought their hair would surely be lifted. Through the efforts of Young-Man-Afraid-of-His-Horses the fractious Indians were removed, and a large party of mounted friendly Indians stationed near the Commissioners.... The Fourth National Bank of Chicago has closed its doors and gone into liquidation. Depositors will lose nothing, as the assets of the bank largely exceed the liabilities....The Secretary of the Treasury has ordered work to be resumed on the Chicago Custom-House. The foundation of the structure will be strengthened and some portions of the walls taken down and rebuilt, in accordance with the recommendations of the last commission of architects.... In the telegraphic columns of the daily press of last Sunday was chronicled a shocking list of murders in the Far West. Tom Fortune, a watchman at Bismarck, was shot and killed by John McMahon, whom Fortune had arrested. Nine miles below Bismarck, in a whisky row, Jack Duffy shot and killed Nick Morgan, a hunter, and wounded in the leg a man named Snow. Dr. S. C. Cheney was basely murdered at Columbus, by a desperado, who fired sixteen buckshot into his body. John Wright, herding cattle four miles north of Bismarck, was killed by Indians, and 100 head of stock run off.

It is supposed to be a case of suicide.

AT the Red Cloud Council, the other day, Spotted Tail presented his ultimatum to the Commissioners, which is as follows: He wanted pay for the gold already taken out of the Black Hills, and only wanted to sell such portion of the Black Hills as gold is discovered in and for relinquishing the Indians' right therein, he wanted a light wagon, a pair of horses, six work cattle, a gun and ammunition for each head of an Indian family. He also insisted that in future, when annuity goods came, he wanted to be furnished a duplicate bill of them, so some of their own people could examine it. "When all those things are done," he said, "we will then think of what you have to say to us." For modesty, commend us always to the unsophisticated child of the forest.... Chicago elevators, as per official returns, contain 707,211 bushels of wheat, 902,272 bushels of corn, 347,824 bushels of oats, 100,824 bushels of rye, and 113,994 bushels of barley—making a grand total of 2,180,725 bushels, against 2,097,188 bushels at this period last year....The Sioux Indians on the Upper Missouri river are manifesting signs of uneasiness, and troops are to be sent to look after them.... The next reunion will be held at Philadelphia on the 21st and 22d of July.

THE horse distemper that broke out so violently in New York the other day has reached Washington on its way southward. The distemper does not threaten as serious results as the epizootic of a few years ago. Constant care and warm shelter from drafts are, however, necessary to insure a speedy recovery.

THE monthly report of the Agricultural Department for September shows the wool clip to be of full average weight, or a little above in nearly all the States. The tobacco crop shows a great falling off. The hop crop is reported in good condition, with a largely increased average.

THE full text of Secretary Delano's letter of resignation, dated July 5, together with the President's letter of acceptance, bearing date Sept. 22, has been published. It transpires from this correspondence that Mr. Delano wanted to retire from the Interior Department as far back as November, 1874, and that he expressed the same desire on several occasions during last spring, and only retained the office at the President's solicitation. The latter, in accepting the resignation, takes occasion to express the opinion that the late Secretary has been unjustly persecuted by the public press, and that he is entirely innocent of all the charges made against him. In closing his letter he says: "I now believe that you have filled every public trust confided to you with ability and integrity. I sincerely trust that the future will place you right in the estimation of the public, and that you will continue to enjoy its confidence, as you have done through so many years of public and official life. A Famous Female Swimmer.

During the last voyage of the steamship Royal Dane, from Copenhagen to Newcastle-on-Tyne, a serious accident occurred to Miss Fry, the stewardess. The sea was rough on Sunday, and, as she was going up some steps to the deck the boat took a lurch, and Miss Fry fell into the sea. The accident caused great commotion on board, and it was expected that she would be drowned before assistance reached her, the vessel being under full steam at the time. A boat was got out from the steamer as soon as it could be stopped, and was fully manned and pulled back to where Miss Fry was last seen. She was found comfortably floating on her back, when the boat reached her, and not much the worse for her immersion. She stated that after she was thrown into the water she pulled her boots off and swam for some time. She then waited quietly until the boat picked her up. Miss Fry belongs to a famous Tynemouth family of swimmers, and she is considered one of the best female swimmers on the northeast coast of England.—Liverpool Advertiser.

Jumping Off London Bridge for a Pot of Beer.

At about 1 o'clock yesterday a party of young men were in a tavern near London Bridge, discussing the merits of Capt. Webb. One of them took up a newspaper and read the account of a rescue from Battersea Bridge. One Rawlin then said he would bet a pot of beer that he would at once jump off London Bridge, and, the wager being accepted, they went to the bridge, where Rawlin promptly mounted the second arch and dived headforemost into the river. At the time the bridge was crowded by pedestrians, and much excitement prevailed. Rawlin immediately rose to the surface and swam to Old Swan steamboat pier. Meanwhile several watermen, who thought he had attempted suicide, rowed after the young man. A rope was thrown to him from a steamer, and the man, who was a first-class swimmer, got on to the vessel.—London Daily Telegraph.

THE BLACK HILLS.

Negotiations for their Acquisition—Independent Demands of the Sioux Orators—Terms of the Treaty Offered by the Commission.

An Associated Press telegram from Red Cloud Agency, dated Sept. 29, says: The Commissioners met the Indians in council on Tuesday. Three hundred chiefs were present. Red Cloud, chief of the Ogallalas, on behalf of the Indians, said he felt better than heretofore. He said he considered the Hills more valuable in the precious metals than the entire wealth of the United States. He proposed to ask a large sum for them, the principal to be put at interest, and from the latter to derive sufficient to keep the Sioux nation. In addition, he wanted Grant to furnish annually each head of an Indian family six yoke of oxen, a wagon, a span of horses, harness, a bull, cow, sow, boar, sheep, rams, chickens, and other domestic fowls, coffee, tea, sugar, side meat, rice, cracked corn, beans, dried apples, and a host of other articles. He enumerated also houses and furniture, the same as white men. He said the government was trying to make a white man out of him, and he wanted to indulge the white man. He wanted a saw-mill for every tribe of the Sioux nation; the removal of troops from posts adjacent to agencies; and the right of appointing Indian agents, employes and traders. He was emphatic in his demand for Catholic clergy for special instructors. He said God had given his people the Black Hills, so they might all subsist from their wealth. He was opposed to any roads to the Black Hills except the one made by Custer from Bismarck, which he designated as the thief's road. He wanted all half-breeds and white men married to squaws treated the same as Indians. He described the limits of the Black Hills, which he wished to sell, and was emphatically opposed to disposing of the Big Horn and Powder River country.

He was followed by Lone Horn, Chief of the Arapahoes, in a speech similar in tone to Red Cloud's. He insisted on the removal of agents and employes, and putting in men acceptable to the Indians. He said all the Indians had put their heads together in opinion. He wanted Catholic missionaries as instructors. He demanded that the boundary line of the reservation be extended to the Middle Platte river, in Nebraska. He wanted the survey stopped.

Other chiefs followed, all in the same strain. The result of Wednesday's proceedings consisted in a recapitulation of Tuesday's exorbitant demands for additional possessions and ammunition. One of the chiefs asked $70,000,000 for the Black Hills, part payment in cash, the remainder at interest, the proceeds from the latter to purchase such articles as the Indians require.

Each of the speakers to-day demanded Catholic instructors.

Red Cloud, in his speech, said six generations of Indians had passed away. The only conditions on which the Sioux Nation will sell the Hills, would be a guarantee that Grant would provide for the Indians for six succeeding generations. An Indian generation is 100 years.

The Commissioners to-day met the Indians again, and submitted a treaty. They offered to lease the country for a term of years, agreeing to pay therefor the sum of $400,000 per annum, the United States reserving the right to terminate the license at any time by giving two years' notice. Or, if the Sioux prefer it, the Commissioners proposed that the United States purchase the Hills outright, paying therefor $6,000,000 in fifteen annual installments.

Spotted Tail and Red Cloud expressed much surprise at the small amount offered for the Black Hills, and said they would have to call a council of the Indians, and could give no answer for two days.

The Commissioners have come to the conclusion that it is impossible to make a treaty in the present temper of the Indians.

How the "Raven" Was Written.

In a discussion of the mental condition of Edgar A. Poe, in Scribner for October, under the title of "A Mad Man of Letters," Mr. F. G. Fairfield gives the following conflicting accounts of the composition of "The Raven:"

"Another fact that seems to witness to his epileptic condition is constituted by the habitual lying that marked the later and best-known part of his career. One instance must illustrate the many. I shall take it for granted that the general reader is familiar with the remarkable analytic paper in which he describes the composition of 'The Raven,' and the plan upon which it was constructed. American literature contains nothing cleverer in its way, and its cleverness is manifold enhanced when it is understood that it is simply and unequivocally fiction, as the actual circumstances under which the poem was written conclusively show.

"Poe then occupied a cottage at Fordham—a kind of poet's nook just out of hearing of the busy hum of the city. He had walked all the way from New York that afternoon, and, having taken a cup of tea, went out in the evening and wandered about for an hour or more. His beloved Virginia was sick almost unto death; he was without money to procure the necessary medicines. He was out until about ten o'clock. When he went in he sat down at his writing table and dashed off 'The Raven.' He submitted it to Mrs. Clemm for her consideration on the same night, and it was printed substantially as it was written.

"This account of the origin of the poem was communicated to me in the fall of 1865 by a gentleman who professed to be indebted to Mrs. Clemm for the facts as he stated them; and in the course of a saunter in the South in the summer of 1867, I took occasion to verify his story by an interview with that aged lady. Let me now drop Mrs. Clemm's version for a paragraph to consider another, resting upon the testimony of Col. Du Solle, who was intimate with Poe at this period, and concurred in by other literary contemporaries who used to meet him of a midday for a budget of gossip and a glass of ale at Sandy Welsh's cellar in Ann street.

"Du Solle says that the poem was produced stanza by stanza at small intervals, and submitted by Poe piecemeal to the criticism and condemnation of his intimates, who suggested various alterations and substitutions. Poe adopted many of them. Du Solle quotes particular instances of phrase that were incorporated at his suggestion, and thus 'The Raven' was a kind of joint stock affair in which many minds held small shares of intellectual capital. At length, when the last stone had been placed in position and passed upon, the structure was voted complete.

"The reconciliation of these conflicting versions lies, possibly, in the hypothesis that he wrote the poem substantially, as stated by Mrs. Clemm, and afterward, with the shrewd idea of stimulating expectation a little, or by way of subtle and delicate flattery, submitted it to his friends stanza by stanza, adopting such emendations and substitutions of phrase as tickled his ear or suited his fancy. Such alterations would scarcely affect the general tenor of the text, as Mrs. Clemm first heard it, and, considering the length of the poem, appear to have been very few and of small importance, granting all that Col. Du Solle claims. Besides, it was like him to amuse himself in this way, hoaxing his friends, and then laughing in his sleeve at them."

A COOL PROCEEDING.

Robbing of a West Virginia Bank—One of the Most Audacious Crimes on Record.

A letter from Huntington, W. Va., says: Will you and your readers believe that I write truth or fiction when I tell the plain facts of the remarkable bank robbery here, an affair in all its details almost incredible in this country or in this century? Four men have been stopping in this neighborhood for two or three weeks, one of them at a hotel here, making a considerable bank deposit and frequently calling at the bank on business, registering as J. C. Johnson, of Tennessee; the other boarded at a farmer's, dealt a little in stock and purchased four fine horses. Without creating suspicion they rode to a farmer's on Saturday, with their horses in splendid condition, and remained till Monday. While there they were grooming their horses almost constantly, frequently bathed their backs with arnica, had them carefully shod and made ready for the fearful race before them. At 2 o'clock, Monday, they rode quietly into town, tied their horses, and two of them crossed the street to the Bank of Huntington. One stood near the horses, another entered a store opposite the bank, called for a cigar, asked the three men inside if they had any "shooting irons," then coolly drew his own and frankly told them his friends were having a little trouble making change over the way and didn't wish to be disturbed.

In the bank the two sprang over the counter, seized the Cashier, Mr. Oney, and demanded money. He gave the $1,500 lying on the counter, and, after some delay, opened the safe and took out about $9,000 more. They asked him if this was all, threatened him if he answered falsely, carefully examined the vault, and then, in the quietest manner, opened his books, saw the balances of Saturday, and then the leader said: "I believe you are right, but this is a mighty poor bank, Mr. Oney, and it is too bad to tempt honest men with false appearances." As if this was not audacious enough, he turned again to the Cashier, and said: "I knew you in Mosby's command, and don't want you to suffer. How much stock have you here?" He answered politely, "About seven dollars and a half," when our Dick Turpin coolly unrolled his money, made exact change, and laid it on the counter. He then said: "You see I am not after your money, Mr. Oney, and it would be very dangerous to leave this bank alone, but I must trouble you to cross the street with me, as I may need help in mounting." They then marched Oney and the colored porter across the street, mounted coolly, called in the sentinel, when the leader made another speech: "We are obliged to part with you, and, as you seem to have something to say, you may now say it; in fact, you may yell." And the Cashier did yell, and Jim yelled, and the President, who was quietly walking up the street with a friend, and had just wondered what his Cashier was out there trading horses for, yelled, and the two hundred people who were on the street yelled. The robbers rode quietly out of town, walked their horses up a long hill overlooking it, and saw a wild community running for shot-guns, mounting dray horses, and in a very few minutes in hot pursuit. And the pursuit was hot. Most of the horses, ridden at a furious pace, were "stove" or "blown" before they reached the summit, while the robbers waved their hats and loosed their reins.

A Suicidal Editor.

It is seldom that we hear of the suicide of an editor. Enjoying, as editors invariably do, the most princely salaries, or receiving vast revenues from establishments which they own—living, in fact, upon the fat of the land, they are seldom tempted to violate the canon which the Everlasting has fixed against self-slaughter. It is with surprise, therefore, that we read of the dark attempt of Charles Bowen, editor of the Mohawk Valley Register, at the village of Fort Plain, New York. Bowen mailed a letter the other day to his mother, informing her where his stark remains might be found. Then he went down to the murmuring Mohawk, and, suspending his garments upon the limb of a hickory tree, plunged into the stream. The letter to his mother having been delivered within a few moments after it had been mailed, the good lady assembled a posse and went to find her son. At the precise spot indicated the young journalists clothes were found, and there, too, in the middle of the stream was the editor, with his face upturned to the skies. He had waded out until he had reached a depth of five feet, and, standing there, he was apparently waiting for the tide to come up and drown him; an event for which he must have waited long and wearily, as there are no tides in the Mohawk. With difficulty the young man was persuaded to come out of the water and rehabilitate himself in the garments of earth. The only excuse which he could give for thus seeking to abandon the brilliant career of a country editor was that his friends had "all gone back on him." The Mohawk Valley Register will be published as usual hereafter.

New York City is taxed by the State on $881,000,000 of real estate, assessed at from sixty-eight to seventy per cent. of its market value. All the cities, towns, and counties of the rest of the State are taxed on $1,079,000,000 of real estate, assessed at from thirty to forty-five per cent. of its actual value.

Colorado can now, if her people choose enter the great Union of States. The population in 1873 was 104,860; now it is nearly 150,000. There is no public debt; taxes are low; schools are first-class; there are 27 banks, 1,018 miles of telegraph, and about 650 miles of railroad in operation. The people are energetic, hopeful and contented.

The census-taker of Winchendon, Mass., has encountered a woman 25 years of age. who was married at 12 years of age, has ten living children, the eldest of whom is 13 years old. If woman has not the nerve to steal more than $2, as Gen. Spinner says, she can lie with an audacity and serenity which must ever remain to excite the envy of the other sex.

The first and only experiment in daily religious journalism ever attempted in this country has proved a failure. The New York Daily Witness was started some months ago by a party of enthusiastic Christians who believed that the venture could be made to pay. Faith, in this instance, proved of little avail, and the enterprise has succumbed to the need of money, after having sunk several thousands of the "filthy lucre."

The New Orleans Picayune proposes that the South partly begin a resumption of specie payments by selling the incoming crop of cotton exclusively for specie, saying: "New Orleans in olden times gave the example of specie resumption before the New York banks; let it now set a like precedent, in following the Texas line, by inaugurating or completing the transaction of cotton sales against specie funds, in the Gulf-coast States."

There is nothing new under the sun. Mention is made of a simple check for valuable packages at a Saratoga hotel. The name of the owner is written on a square of paper, which is then torn in two, one part attached to the package and the other given to the owner. It is impossible to tear apart paper so that two pieces of ragged edges will be exactly alike. This is only a clumsy imitation of the old way of indenting legal documents of two parts.

A wonderful escape was that which a little three-year-old boy had at Paterson, N. J., the other day. As the little chap was walking with his mother and grandfather near the precipice at the Passaic Falls, he fell into a crevice in the rock, varying from 10 to 18 inches in width. He caught about 12 feet down, and his mother told him to keep perfectly quiet till they could get a rope, but he kept scrambling and gradually slipping down the crevice until he had reached the bottom, 80 feet below, where he was found with a good many cuts and bruises, but no serious injuries.

Richard M. Blatchford, of New York, whose death was announced a few days ago, stopped one day in the winter of 1873 at a fruit stand on Nassau street, in that city, to buy a banana. He laid a package down by his right side while he selected the fruit, and fumbled in his pocket for the pennies needed, and, feeling a tap on the shoulder, turned to see who thus attracted his attention. As he turned to the left, a skillful thief grabbed the package without being discovered, and made his escape. The package contained $55,000 in government bonds, and no trace of them has ever been obtained.

Not long since a Chicago lawyer brought suit in a Justice's Court on a clear and honest claim for $60. The defendant's attorney trumped up a false counter-claim, and the conscientious jury brought in a verdict of $150 against the plaintiff. The latter's lawyer remonstrated with the constable who had selected the jurors, and more than hinted at foul play. The constable stated the case with refreshing frankness, in these words: "I told Mr. So-and-So (the plaintiff) that he could have a jury to suit him for $5; he wouldn't give me a cent, and I got up a jury for the other side."

It is said that Isaac M. Singer, the sewing machine man, has left a fortune of nineteen millions of dollars—fifteen millions in the United States, and four millions in Europe. During the last twenty-five years of his life he spent a great deal of money, but he made a great deal more. The magnificence of his estate forms a striking contrast with the poverty and privation in which he began. At one time he was a strolling actor in the West, and after he had left that profession and invented his sewing machine he was in such a state of destitution that he had only a sixpence left in the world. After much deliberation he bought himself a dinner of pork and beans at a New York restaurant with this money, and with the vigor derived from this nourishing repast he went on to accumulate the nineteen millions he has left to his heirs.

Gov. Kellogg, of Louisiana, gives a rose-colored view of the outlook in that State. In a conversation with a correspondent at Washington, the other day, he said the State had not had such a crop of rice and sugar in twenty years as it had this year. Then, too, for the first time, the State has raised a crop of corn that will more than supply the local demand. For the first time in its history Louisiana will have corn to sell. The Governor believes that the political turmoils are at an end, and that a bright future is in store for the State. The commercial prosperity of New Orleans is on the increase. Mr. Phelps, the President of the Cotton Exchange of that city, has just returned from an extensive trip through the North, and he informs the Governor that the trade and business of New Orleans will compare favorably with that of any city of the North that he visited. Happy Louisiana.

The following application will prevent mice from eating the bark of apple trees in winter, or at any other season: Take of fish oil and pine tar equal parts; mix together by warming over a slow fire; stir thoroughly, and then apply with a brush; coat the trees from the ground up about a foot. No tree thus protected will be touched by mice. The application should be made before cold weather sets in.

Smut in wheat is one of our fungi, and when the wheat is threshed, the skin, which holds it in a compact form, is broken, and the cells are scattered as black dust, each particle being a cell or combination of cells, capable of producing a whole. These cells, or dust, often fasten upon the grain, and the wheat sown, unless some means are used to destroy the smut-cells before sowing, will produce another crop of smutty wheat.

Lawes and Gilbert, the notable English experimenters, have found from a long and carefully recorded experience that a crop of beans can be raised in the place of summer-fallow, and the ground kept thoroughly stirred up with full as good a yield of wheat following the summer crop as when the field is cultivated during the season with no object in view except the fitting for wheat. This fact cannot be too strongly emphasised, for there is wonderful waste of time and energy over summer-fallows in our country, when intermediate crops might receive the benefit with no detriment to the next crop in rotation.

To Cure a Horse of Bridle-Breaking.—Get a piece of bed-cord four times the length of the horse and double it in the middle, and at the doubled end make a loop, through which pass the animal's tail. Then cross the cord over his back, and pass both ends through the halter-ring under his chin and tie both ends of the cord to the trough-ring, through which the halter-strap plays, the end of the halter being attached to a billet of wood. Should the horse attempt to pull back the strain will all be on the root of his tail before the halter-strap will become tightened, and he will at once step forward to avoid it. After so fixing him a few times in the stable he will abandon any such propensity.

Far too little attention is given to the manurial product of the hen-house. Every farmer has need of all the fertilizing material he can lay hold of, and hen manure, properly applied, forms a No. 1 fertilizer on farm and garden. I have of late been visiting some of the farm henneries and do not admire the style of things. A majority of them had a roof as broad as the heavens, and the roosting poles are the branches of trees in the vicinity of the barns. Not a few are filthy places, unfit to enter, and but one showed any signs of having been cleansed in years. A little lime and a barrel of dry earth will keep a hen-house neat and without disagreeable odors. The lime should be applied in the form of whitewash, and the earth should be thrown under the roost from time to time to act as an absorbent. By this arrangement it is not a disagreeable job to clean out the house, and the manure is in prime condition to use upon farm or garden.

A correspondent of the Cincinnati Enquirer says what should be read by every farmer who raises hogs: "Nothing can be more penny-wise than the practice of many of our farmers of breeding from scrub or grade boars. To the farmer who breeds ten or more sows, a thoroughbred boar is cheaper at $50 than a grade boar at nothing, even if the hogs are to be fattened. A single dollar on each pig would make up the money, and I am confident that in many cases I have seen a difference of five dollars each with the same care between thoroughbred hogs and those that have been bred haphazard. On hundreds of farms to-day can be found stock hogs a year old that will not weigh over eighty pounds each, and that are not ten pounds heavier than they were in December, and if offered for sale now would not bring over 5¼ cents per pound; and they have probably consumed as much grain as the breed of hogs that at the same age weigh two hundred pounds and are worth seven cents per pound."

Toothache may be prevented, a correspondent asserts, by using flour of sulphur as a tooth-powder. "Rub the teeth," he says, "with a rather hard tooth brush, using the sulphur every night. Economical Fritters.—Save all your bits of bread, and soak them in cold water and mash fine; add a little nutmeg, three or four large spoonfuls of sugar, part of a teaspoonful of saleratus dissolved in two large spoonfuls of milk, a little salt, and stir into this flour enough to hold up a spoon. Drop a little from the end of a spoon into hot fat, and fry. After one trial no bits of bread will be wasted.

Cooking Celery.—A correspondent of the American Farmer says that celery is an every-day dish on his table in the winter and sometimes late into spring. He gives the process as follows: "Cut off the unbleached part; cut the bleached up in pieces about two inches long; parboil until tender, then stir in milk and butter, with salt and pepper to taste."

How the Girls at Vassar College Play Sweet Over Each Other.

A Vassar College (Poughkeepsie) girl writes regarding a certain process called "smashing." She says: "When a young woman at Vassar sees another whose appearance, general style, talents, especially the latter, she admires, instead of seeking her acquaintance in an orthodox manner, straightway she announces to her friends and cronies, with the most mysterious and confidential air, that she is hopelessly, completely, entirely, utterly 'smashed'—in fact, 'dead gone.' Then follows a series of the most idiotic performances. 'Smash' notes are written, elegant flowers, boxes of candy, costly books, etc., are sent by the 'mashee' to the 'smasher;' appointments are made in the corridor to kiss each other good night; smirking and ogling are in vogue in the dining-room and in the chapel. This state of affairs is kept up for sometime—length of time depends upon the violence of the attack. Then the 'smash' developes into an astonishing friendship, or the parties drop one another by mutual consent. It is not uncommon to hear some bright girl say, 'O, I am so smashed on Miss So-and-so. I just adore the ground she walks on.' I have known girls whose great power of intellect could not be denied, who stood at the head of their classes, to make absolute fools of themselves over other girls. I have seen girls cry themselves sick because their loved one smiled more favorably on some rival than on them. I have known of six-dollar boxes of confectionery and fifteen-dollar bouquets being sent through some zealous friend by the victim of the victor. And speaking of these tokens of pure, unadulterated affection, reminds me of something quite funny. These offerings are often more practical than poetical. Dishes of pine-apple, hot lemonade, fried oysters, etc., are common, and one young lady of an intensely practical turn of mind sent to her adored one a hot boiled sweet potato. It is quite the thing at Vassar to have the reputation of being a successful 'smasher.' One enterprising young woman boasted of her 350 victims. She was a Maine girl, and was a notable exception. Very few reach the zenith of two dozen."

How the Franco-Prussian War Was Declared.

In his letter from Paris, Arsene Houssaye relates a legend which is said to have been told among the most exclusive diplomatic circles in France, regarding the part the Empress Eugenie took in starting the Franco-Prussian war. After the more or less pacific explanations of the last interview at Ems with Count Benedetti, there was a council at night at the Tuileries, at which peace was peremptorily decided upon by the Emperor, who was the most prudent of the party, because he hated bloodshed, and who did not think a gory baptism was necessary to the consecration of the Prince Imperial. But there were two sovereigns at that time on the throne. Beside the Emperor reigned the Empress. When everything was peacefully decided, the Emperor, who was then ill, went to bed like Titus, content with his day's work. But the Empress was more wakeful. In her turn she held a council with the Duke de Gramont, and through pure gallantry he left too much of the talking to the Empress, who thought that war was the only salvation of France, and who when she said France always meant her son. She took possession of every one. She was really eloquent in talking of the national dignity; she said that the Emperor's good heart would gain both France and the dynasty. Beside, all the newspapers and all the Deputies were for war. It would not do to swim against the current. They would gain the Rhine with one battle; they would chastise Germany and return triumphantly with the peace of Europe secured for a century. Everybody was convinced, the Duke de Gramont alone, perhaps, having doubts of all these fine things. But as it was a woman who was speaking he had the gallantry not to oppose her. They waked up the Emperor and extorted from him the declaration of war. And thus did France lose two provinces and five milliards.

Beefsteaks.

A gourmet, writing of the art of cooking a beefsteak, says: All hammering of steaks with cleavers or cutlet bats should be avoided, and the use of hideous contrivances resembling gigantic "back-scratchers," for punching and clapper-clawing the meat to make it tender, should be eschewed. Turned only once and broiled for about ten minutes over a clear fire the steak is cooked, and should then be sprinkled with salt and served on a tremendously hot dish garnished with horseradish. Confirmed steak-eaters insist that nothing beyond pepper, salt, mustard, and horseradish is needed with a steak, except a mealy potato and a slice of stale bread; but the dicta of these rigid purists are often set aside in these degenerate days, and oyster sauce, fried onions, or sauce bearnaise are often served as accompaniments. Many gastronomes like their plates rubbed with a shallot, but more thoroughpaced admirers of this odoriferous bulb maintain that they had as lief "be hanged for a sheep as a lamb," and cover their steak with actual shallot finely minced. Hot horseradish sauce is also frequently eaten with a steak, and is an excellent companion to it. Mushroom catsup is also liked by many, but should always be made hot. The sight of a human being deluging a prime hot steak with cold catsup arouses stormy emotions in the bosom of a true steak-eater. Inferior in texture to the steak, but juicy and tender withal, is the beef skirt, an article seldom heard of. When intended for boiling, the skirt should only be skinned on one side, and by those whose molars are not of the best will be appreciated as a singularly succulent morsel.

DRINKING BLOOD.

Reasons for Imbibing It—Its Taste.

It may not be generally known, says the Cincinnati Commercial, that Cincinnati has its blood drinkers—consumptives and others who daily visit the slaughter houses to obtain the vigorous draught of ruddy life-elixir fresh from the veins of beeves. Lawrence's slaughter house, opposite the Oliver street police station, has its daily visitants who drink blood, and the slaughter houses of the Loewensteins, on John street, a few squares away, has perhaps half a dozen daily visitants of the same class. The latter places, indeed, have the principal custom of this kind (if custom it may be termed where the recipient is charged nothing), for the reason that all beeves are slaughtered there by a Shochet. Many who can drink the blood of animals slaughtered according to the Hebrew fashion cannot stomach that of bullocks felled with the ax. The blood of the latter is black and thick and lifeless; that of the former brightly ruddy and clear as new wine.

"We have two ladies and one young man coming here every day to drink blood," observed a slaughter-house proprietor yesterday. "We used to have a great many more, but they got well and strong and stopped coming. One woman came here for a year, and got wonderfully healthy and fat. She used to be a skeleton—a consumptive skeleton. We always slaughter in the Hebrew way, and the blood of cattle so killed is more healthy. It tastes like the new milk from a cow."

"Why, did you ever drink it?"

"No, no!—what should I drink it for? I am too fat as it is. And you know"—with a pleasant laugh—"Moses forbid the Hebrews to use blood as a diet."

The Shochet passed by with his long knife. "I am going to cut a bullock now," he observed, "if you want a glass of blood."

It at once occurred to the writer to try the experiment for curiosity's sake, and give the public the benefit of his experience. A large tumbler was rinsed and brought forward, the throat of the bullock severed, and the glass held to the severed veins. It was filled in an instant and handed to us, brimming over with the clear, ruddy life-stream, which warmed the vessel through and through. There was no odor, no thickening, no consequent feeling of nausea, and the first mouthful swallowed, the glass was easily drained.

And how did it taste? Fancy the richest cream, warm, with a tart sweetness, and the healthy strength of the pure wine, "that gladdeneth the heart of man!" It was a draught simply delicious, sweeter than any concoction of the chemist, the confectioner, the wine-maker—it was the very elixir of life itself. The popular idea that blood is difficult to drink is an utter fallacy; and the most timid with glass in his hand must be reassured by one glance at its clear contents. He will forget all the familiar feelings of sickness conjured up by that one word "blood;" it is not "blood" any longer in his eyes, but rosy life, warm and palpitating with the impulse of the warm heart's last palpitation; it is ruddy, vigorous, healthful life—not the essence, but the protoplasmic fluid itself—turned in an instant from its natural channel. No other earthly draught can rival such crimson cream, and its strength spreads through the veins with the very rapidity of wine. Perhaps the knowledge of its invigorating properties originated that terrible expression, "drunk with blood." That the first draught will create a desire for a second; that a second may create an actual bloodthirstiness in the literal sense of the word; that such a thirst might lead to the worst consequences in a coarse and brutal nature, we are rather inclined to believe is not only possible, but probable. The healthy and vigorous should respect the law of Moses in this regard. Perhaps it was through occasional indulgence in a draught of human blood (before men's veins were poisoned with tobacco and bad liquor) that provoked the monstrous cruelties of certain Augustine Emperors. Perhaps it was such a passion that, as De Quincey has it, left Caligula, while toying with the polished throat of his wife, Cæsonia, half distracted between the pleasure of caressing it, which he might do frequently, and of cutting it, which could be enjoyed but once.

Sad Result of Religious Excitement.

One of the sad results of excessive religious excitement was witnessed last evening on the North Side. A young girl, living on East Indiana street, near Clark, had devoted herself to religious exercises and reading until she had become partially demented, and, in a fervor of what she deemed pious zeal, she concluded that to the pure in heart all things were pure, and that therefore clothes were only a hindrance and entirely superfluous to the righteous. Thus believing, she removed every article of raiment from her person and ran out on the street. Before her absence from the house had been noticed, she had made her way to Clark street and passed rapidly along that thoroughfare for two or three blocks before anybody could muster up courage enough to stop her. It is hardly necessary to say that she was the observed of all whom she met. At length a man with more moral stamina than the rest stopped her and wanted her to go home. She refused to do this, however, and also declined to put on a shawl offered her by a lady, saying to the latter that she would not be defiled by the touch of garments, and that only the sinful needed covering—for herself she was clothed with righteousness, and needed no other habiliments than those of the Word. A policeman came up and took her in charge and returned her to her home.—Chicago Tribune.

A German statistician who has collected facts in relation to the production of the precious metals, shows that the United States has become the greatest silver producing country of the world, taking the precedence even of Mexico, which has hitherto been supposed to yield nearly two-thirds of the world's supply. In 1873, the silver production of this country was estimated at $35,750,000, while that of all other countries was estimated at $51,750,000, and the amount mined in this country has been constantly increasing.

TEAS—Our Tea trade is the wonder of the country. No one ever dreamt such a trade could be built up. We sell more chests daily than some houses do pounds, and still our trade is increasing. It is no uncommon thing for us to purchase two hundred chests at a time, and here is the great element of our success. As by purchasing such larger quantities direct of the Importers we save our consumer, at least the three extra profits of jobbers, speculator and wholesale grocer, who make 10 to 20 cents per pound. This our customers get the benefit of. No middle men with us. As with teas, so with sugar coffee, syrup and all other goods. No secret—it is simply in purchasing all our goods at first hands and re-selling direct to our customers at small margin, and save them at least 20 to 40 cents a pound on tea and 20 per cent on all other goods.

JOHN L. DAVIS,

The Curse of the Hour.

There is too much lying. On every hand we meet with exaggeration, equivocation deception. We call it all lying, and every one who intentionally varies one iota from the scrictest fact and truth is indeed a liar.

The expressman agrees to deliver a trunk for you at a certain place by a certain hour. He delivers it the day after, and thus lies. The grocer promises to send you the best tea in the market. He takes the first he lays his hands upon without any care for the quality, and dispatches it to you without a twinge. He is a liar. The printer promises to do your work cheaper than it can be done elsewhere in town. He forgets his promise—charges what he pleases—and lies. The tailor agrees to deliver a suit of clothes without fail by six in the evening. You get them in the morning, and the tailor is a liar. The dentist pledges his word that your teeth as filled by him will be all right for a dozen years. The fillings come out in six months, and the dentist lies. The man over the way is in need of a temporary loan. You lend him a small sum, which he promises by everything to return at a given time. He keeps it a month over the time, and is a liar. An auctioneer tells you that a certain picture is by a master artist. He lies and is not worthy of trust. A salesman lies about his goods. The boot maker lies about your boots. The jeweler lies about your watch. The gossiper at the dinner table tells exagerated stories to astonish the ladies, and is nothing else than a liar. The florist assures you that his flowers were picked in the morning, when they are two days old. He lies, and will lie about anything. The book publisher advertises that his book is selling by the tens of thousands, when he has not sold a thousand. He is a liar and one door from the murderer.

Everywhere we hear lying, lying, lying. Men and women, who would knock you down if you called them liars. Deception is the rule rather than exception. Canvassers lie about companies. Brokers about stock. Editors lie about politics. Exageration and misrepresentation rule the hour, and are its curse.

Gentlemen—ladies—why can not the truth be told always and ever? Why all this deception and lying? Why so much falsifying and cheating? In the name of all that is true and good, we beg of you to do as you agree!

A Woman's Righter,

"Pullman car, Madam?" politely inquired the gate-man in the long depot at the head of La Salle street, the other day, addressing a self-reliant looking woman of uncertain age.

She only gave him a withering glance and marched on.

"Pullman car—right this way," said a brakeman with a label on his cap band, as she came up to him.

Her face only grew harder, and she muttered something about these "brutes of men" between her teeth.

"Pullman cah, missus—right in heah," obsequiously intimated the colored porter from the platform as she reached the rear coach.

Then that female was enraged. She gave the astonished Ethiopian one killing frown. She righted about face. She started back to the ticket office, satchel, umbrella, bundles and all. She caught the ticket agent's eye through the window and as she came up she exclaimed:

"Give me back my money, sir?"

"Why-why, good lady," said the agent, "what's the trouble?"

"Trouble enough," she replied. "I was goin' to Oskaloosa to the Woman's Sufferage meetin', but I ain't going on no Pull-man car; no sir. If ye haint got any pull-woman cars on your old road, I won't pat'nize ye; that's all!"

And the agent explained to her. He pacified her feelings, and, taking her by the arm, got her aboard the train just as it was starting for Iowa.—"Chicago Journal."

Pretty Good Reply.

An eminent lawyer of Boston tells the following joke: A flashily dressed young sprig entered Ben. Butler's office and was requested by Benjamin to be seated. The request was complied with and the young man requested to state his business. "Well, Mr. B. what would be the first thing for me to do to learn the profession?" Benjamin fixed his weather beaten eye upon the nobby dressed young man and surveyed him from his flashy neck-tie to his highly polished boots and exclaimed! "The first thing you had better do would be to go and roll in the barnyard." An answer came as quick as the suggestion in the following terse language: "If I should come and study two years in your office wouldn't it do just as well?"

The Temperance Cause.

He stood on a chair on the Campus Martius in the dusk of evening, and as a crowd gathered he began:

"Wine is a mocker—strong drink is raging. The Lord made cold water—Satan made whisky!"

(Pause.)

"Let me tell you what I saw." Last night I saw a white-headed old man at a bar. I pleaded with him to come away, but he was deaf to my words. He filled a glass with deadly liquor, and as it went down his throat I said to him: "Old man, thou art doomed!" He laughed a cynical laugh, and he cursed me—aye, cursed the old man who sought to save him!"

(Commotion in the crowd.)

"This morning," continued the old man, "I was in the morgue, where the unknown dead rest on the cold marble slabs. I did not think that my words of the night before would come back to me with such awful significance."

(Crowd drew closer.)

"I looked through the glass door, and, my hearers, what do you think I saw on one of the cold slabs before me?"

"The old man!" shooted twenty voices in chorus.

"No, my friends," continued the man, as he stepped down, I didn't see a blasted thing!"

Several men chastised him, but he made his escape.

A Discouraged Editor.

Fairplay Sentinel.

He was a sad eyed, meek-faced man, and we suppose he merely wished to give us a news item; but when he commenced telling us about building a barn on his ranch 100x280 feet, seven stories high, and ornamented with bay windows, we thought it was time to check him, and so we commenced:

"Well, we must admit that is a pretty large barn for this country, but back in the States of our father built a barn 325x500 feet, nine stories high, and furnished with steam elevators; the——"

"Back in the States," interrupted our listener,. "Why, that wasn't much of a barn for the States. I remember, now, that when I was quite young my father built a chicken coop 500x[illegible] and I don't recollect how many stories high it was, but I know there was a cupola on it for the roosters."

"About how high was that cupola?" we asked.

"I don't remember the exact height now, mister," was the reply, "but I know it was so high that the fourteen upper tiers of roosters died from the effects of the light atmosphere the first night."

Then he looked up towards the ceiling and commenced humming "Jesus loves me," and we went out and sat down on the woodpile and wondered why somebody was always outstripping us in the race of life.

The Baltimore "Sun" says: "Montgomery, Alabama, was the first capitol of the Confederate States. There the Confederate Government first establish-ed itself, and the first Confederate Congress assembled. It is extremely notable that the Alabama constitutional convention, which is now in session in Montgomery, and is Democratic by a large majority, has unanimously adopted the following as a section of the bill of rights of the new constitution which the convention is framing for Alabama: 'The people of this State accept as a final the established fact that from the Federal union there can be no secession of any State.' And yet there are Republicans, like Senator Boutwell, who talk about a 'new rebellion.'"

An Innocent Question.

"Father," asked a Vicksburg boy at the dinner table the other day, "are you a big man?" "Well, I dunno," musingly answered the parent. "Why?" "Cause I heard some men talking over at the hotel, and they said you were one of the biggest men in town." "Well, I suppose I do stand pretty high," looking pleased and consequential. There was half a minute of silence and then the boy added: "They said it was a wonder how you carried your feet around!" The boy can't understand yet why he should have received a box on the ear which made his head roar for two long hours.

Circumstances Alter Cases.

Yesterday when a boy stole a big apple from a farmer's wagon and run away the farmer ran after him, saying:

"It isn't the apple I care for—it's the principle of the thing."

A policeman joined in the race saying: "I isn't the principle I care for—it's the catching of the boy."

The boy put in his best licks, saying: "I don't care for either apple or principle but to get out o' this like a streak of lightning!"

A responsible party of Columbia City, in answer to a communication published in the COURIER Sept. 30th, and signed "Fairplay," says that it is manifestly so unjust in its reflection upon parties connected with the building of our jail that I ask you to make a correction of the same. "Fairplay" has evidently a desire to injure Mr. J. C. Johnson, Architect, but is venting his spleen he drags in our Board of Commissioners and Mr. Bratton, contractor.

Now as to the facts, for I have taken the trouble to investigate: Mr. J. C. Johnson, architect, never said or did not know until Monday, the 4th of Oct., that Philadelphia brick were being used by Mr. Bratton, on the new jail. Our plans and specifications called for Ft. Wayne pressed brick, but when they were delivered were so badly washed that the Board refused to accept them. Then it was that Mr. Bratton suggested that there were some Philadelphia brick stored in the Pittsburgh & Fort Wayne yards at Wayne, and that he thought enough good brick could be got out of the lot to keep the building going, and that as they were in litigation could be bought cheap. The Board investigated the matter and ordered Mr. Bratton to make the purchase, without ever consulting Mr. Johnson. The brick used are open for inspection. The statement that Mr. Johnson condemned the brick is also untrué, as they never left the depot at Fort Wayne, for Decatur being refused by the contractor, because the R. R. Co. had shipped them in open cars, and had got them dirty with coal dust. In the whole matter our Board acted in good faith and are the responsible parties.

As we published the communication of "Fairplay," we cheerfully give the above a place. Correspondents ought to be very careful in making public charges, and only when they have positive proof.

A Horse Trainer's Nerve,

On Monday forenoon last a number of trotters were being exercised at the driving park, among them Effie Dean, driven by the well-known horse racer, Alden Goldsmith. The horses were trotting at a lively pace, and were all bunched in a heap, when one of Effie's reins broke, and Goldsmith toppled over backward, and every spectator expected to see him drop from the sulky and be mangled by the feet of the horses behind. This tragedy was prevented, however, for Goldsmith, whose feet caught in the front rests of the thills, recovered himself and then gave an exhibition of nerve that was most thrilling. The mare, released from the restraint of the taunt reins, broke into a run and flew ahead like the wind, leaving all the others behind. While she was going at this rate Goldsmith crawled over her back until, by reaching forward, he could get hold of the snaffle of the bit, and then lying on her neck he brought her up with a sudden pull that carried her almost perpendicularly in the air. He was heartily applauded by all who witnessed the daring deed.

Swimming is as popular in England as croquet is in this country. And the sport is not enjoyed by the stern sex alone. When Webb swam across the channel from England to France he was only setting the fashion. But English girls swim amazingly. They begin to practice at that age which among the fair creatures in this country is sacred to chewing gum and cheap novels. A short time ago an English girl swam five miles in a straight line, and thought she had done very well. But she was outdone by a rival, who succeeded in making seven miles. And this feat, astonishing as it may seem to the delicate women of America, was entirely thrown in the shade by a girl of fourteen years, who actually swam ten miles without stopping, consuming two hours and twenty-seven minutes in the test. Daughters of Columbia, learn to swim.

The world learns as it grows older. Europe has lately received some new things from this side of the Atlantic, prominent among which is fresh fruit packed in refrigerating boxes. America furnishes Europe and the rest of the world with ice, it has introduced mixed drinks into the effete capitals of the east, it has taught the oldest civilization the advantage of a palace car, and a thousand and one other convenient and costly luxuries. England, though possessing the largest commerce in the world, and an empire which comprises every climate, has not yet been able to enjoy at home the fruits of the tropics. That long felt need will now be supplied by American enterprise.

LEONA.

BY JAMES G. CLARK.

[Competent literary critics have pronounced the following poem unsurpassed by any other production of its class in our language. It is perfect in rhyme, beautiful in figure and expression:]

Leona, the hour draws nigh,
The hour we've waited so long,
For the angel to open a door through the sky,
That my spirit may break from its prison and try
Its voice in an infinite song.

Just now, as the slumbers of night
Came o'er me with peace-giving breath,
The curtain, half-lifted, revealed to my sight
Those windows which look on the kingdom of light
That borders the river of death.

And a vision fell solemn and sweet,
Bringing gleams of a morning-lit land;
I saw the white shore which the pale waters beat,
And I heard the low lull as they broke at their feet
Who walked on the beautiful strand.

And I wondered why spirits could cling
To their clay with a struggle and sigh,
When life's purple autumn is better than spring,
And the soul flies away, like a sparrow, to sing,
In a climate where leaves never die.

Leona, come close to my bed,
And lay your dear hand on my brow;
The same touch that thrilled me in days that are fled,
And raised the lost roses of youth from the dead,
Can brighten the brief moments now.

We have lived from the cold world apart,
And your trust was too generous and true
For their hate to o'erthrow; when the slanderer's dart
Was rankling deep in my desolate heart,
I was dearer than ever to you.

I thank the Great Father for this,
That our love is not lavished in vain;
Each germ in the future will blossom to bliss,
And the forms that we love, and the lips that we kiss
Never shrink at the shadow of pain.

By the light of this faith am I taught
That my labor is only begun;
In the strength of this hope have I struggled and fought
With the legions of wrong, till my armor has caught
The gleam of Eternity's sun.

Leona, look forth and behold,
From headland, from hillside and deep,
The day-king surrenders his banners of gold,
The twilight advances through woodland and wold,
And the dews are beginning to weep.

The moon's silver hair lies uncurled
Down the broad-breasted mountains away;
The sunset's red glory again shall be furled
On the walls of the West, o'er the plains of the world,
And shall rise in a limitless way.

Oh! come not in tears to my tomb,
Nor plant with frail flowers the sod;
There is rest among roses too sweet for its gloom,
And life where the lilies eternally bloom,
In the balm-breathing gardens of God.

Yet deeply those memories burn
Which bind me to you and to earth,
And I sometimes have thought that my being would yearn
In the bowers of the beautiful home, to return
And visit the home of its birth.

'Twould even be pleasant to stay
And walk by your side to the last;
But the land-breeze of heaven is beginning to play—
Life-shadows are meeting Eternity's day,
And its tumult is hushed in the past.

Leona, good-bye; should the grief
That is gathering now, ever be
Too dark for your faith, you will long for relief,
And remember, the journey, though lonesome, is brief,
O'er lowland and river to me.

THE PRESCRIPTION.

"I wish you would tell James, when he comes in, to turn the cows in the lower lot. And if Turpin calls, tell him I have concluded to take those sheep. I want the Merinoes. And while I am getting ready, please take my memorandum book and note down four harness straps, five pounds of nails and a gimlet, half a jockey strap, and—and, yes, I believe that is all. I forgot them when I made out the items of this morning."

Mrs. Streeter rose wearily, laid her sleeping babe quietly in its crib, and proceeded to record the articles named. She was young—not over twenty-five, but the blonde complexion was sadly faded, the brown hair thin and lusterless, and faint lines were already marking the white forehead, while the tired eyes told of care, and hinted strongly of an unsatisfied heart.

And this thin-cheeked, pink-lipped woman had been called a beauty only seven years before? She had been admired and petted, but not spoiled. And when she gave her hand to Newton Streeter, she could say what so few girls of eighteen can, "I married by first love."

Judge Streeter, the father, was supposed to be wealthy. But soon after his son's marriage a financial crash came, and his thousands dwindled into hundreds.

It was false pride, perhaps, but the young man shrank from a position under those who had once looked up to him. And his thoughts turned wistfully toward the Western prairies, where the sum he could now call his own would render him independent of others at least. He expected objections from his young and accomplished wife. But she saw with his eyes, and was not only willing, but eager to go and help him make a home that should be all their own. The purchasing of a prairie team, some farming implements, and the expense of building a small house, exhausted his entire capital; and the young couple began their married life as many others had done who had not been blessed with their advantages. A hired man seemed necessary on the farm, but a girl could be dispensed with. Indeed, the small dwelling contained but three small sleeping apartments, and this fact, added to their uncertain income, induced Mrs. Streeter to take upon herself the entire care of the household.

She was a systematic housekeeper; abhorred dirt in all its phases; and the rich, alluvial soil seemed ever haunting her, like a taunting spirit that could not be appeased. In dry weather it was a fine, black dust that found its way everywhere; and in wet it became a smutch that was hardly less aggravating.

Two children had come in the seven years, to nestle to her bosom. But one, a fairy child of three summers, had slid away from them, and was now sleeping beneath the flower of the prairie. And the tired wife had sighed as she looked on the cold, folded hands.

"She will never toil as I have done, but, oh, I wanted her so much!" the lonely mother sobbed forth.

Mr. Streeter was now considered a wealthy farmer. His acres had broadened and his stock increased; the little village, a mile away, had put on city airs, and the steam horse waited respectfully at its depot.

Still the thrifty farmer confined himself closely to labor, hardly taking time for needful rest. The love of getting had increased with his gains, and he was constantly scheming and planning to add to his already many acres. Physically and mentally strong, he grappled with toil, and it hardly left a mark on his splendid physique—bronzed a little, and with a gentle, loving wife ever studying his tastes and wishes, why should he wear out fast?

But of her? Naturally frail, she had been like a willow bending beneath a burden voluntarily taken up. With the exception of an efficient girl for a few weeks when little Mary died, she had performed all the labor required in the house since she became its mistress.

As a girl, she was a great reader and extravagantly fond of music. But there was no room in the small dwelling for a piano, and books only added to her labor by accumulating dust, for where was the time?

I know this is a dreary picture for a farmer's wife, but perhaps there is another side. Newton Streeter took the memorandum, glanced hastily at the neatly written items, and then said:

"One thing more, Mary, and then I'm off. Please sew this button a little closer."

The loose button was confined to its place, and then Mary Streeter watched her husband as he stepped into the light buggy and drove away.

But not longer might she linger, for the sponge was waiting in the kitchen to be kneaded and the baby's naps were like angels' visits. And before her task was well over his bugle note sounded to arms, and the fretful child was taken up and caressed and soothed to quietness. But he would not go down again, and back and forth from the hot kitchen she carried him, as she watched the loaves browning in the oven.

She was conscious of a strange dizziness when she arose from a stooping position; her head was aching miserably and her eyes seemed burning. What was coming over her? She must be ill! Oh, no!—she had no time for that! And then her thoughts drifted away to the dear old home of her childhood. And she asked herself for the first time if she had done wisely in leaving it for this life of toil and care.

It was a dangerous position for a wife and mother, and she clasped her child more closely to suppress in her heart the disloyal answer.

She heard James, the hired man, come in, and recollecting the message for him, arose, and that unaccountable giddiness seized her and she sank back utterly powerless.

When Mr. Streeter returned, exultant over the thousand dollars he had deposited in the bank—and with which he hoped to purchase another parcel of land—he found no supper prepared, and his wife helpless upon the bed, with cheeks flushed with fever, and the wailing child distracting her with demand for care.

A physician and nurse were soon summoned from the city, and the weary wife enjoyed the luxury of being ill.

But convalescence soon followed, and before leaving his patient the old doctor, a close observer and a deep thinker, took the husband aside and asked:

"Do you know what brought this fever on your wife, Mr. Streeter?"

"No!" in a surprised tone.

"Shall I tell you?"

"Certainly. I am anxious to know."

"You have worked her nearly to death."

"You are speaking of my wife, not of my horse."

"Granted, and I say again, you are working her to death."

"Really, doctor, such language is unpardonable."

"And yet you will pardon it. And furthermore, by your great love for the self-sacrificing woman we have just left, I shall perform an operation on your eyes that you may see even as I see."

And then, in his own peculiar, abrupt manner, he placed the cold, hard facts before him, from the time she came a bride, beautiful and accomplished, to the village, up to the date of her present illness, in which domestic cares only had haunted her feverish dreams. In concluding he added: "I truly believe it she takes up her old burden at once that before a year has passed the grave or insane asylum will receive her."

The strong man shuddered. "As heaven is my witness, sir, I have only permitted, not exacted this sacrifice. She voluntarily took her place by my side and has uncomplainingly kept step with me."

"No, she has not kept step, to follow your own figure. Unable to keep up with your long, rapid strides, she has fallen, faint and footsore by the way. And now you have got to go back and take her in your strong arms and carry her awhile. I tell you she must have rest for both body and mind, or I will not answer for the result. And it would be better if found away from here."

"Yes, I begin to comprehend; and it can be found away. And," offering his hand, "I will take care, doctor, that you do not get a chance to administer another such dose to me."

"Then see that you do not need it," said he dryly, as he mounted his horse and rode away.

Mr. Streeter went back to the room where his wife was sitting, propped up by pillows, and a gush of unutterable tenderness swelled in his heart as he glance at her pale face and almost transparent hands. He sat down beside her and said softly: "You don't know how glad I am that you are better."

"Thank you. Yes, I am almost well now—shall soon be able to be in the kitchen. I am sure I must be sadly needed there by this time."

"No, you are needed here. By the way, would you like to have me put the farm to rent this summer, and you take the boy and go back to the old granite hills?"

"Oh, could you? May I go?" and the voice quivered with excitement; then, wistfully, "But the expense, Newton. It would put us back so much."

"Yes, there it is; the old doctor was right!" he thought. And then aloud: "Do you know what I went to the city for the day you were ill?"

"To deposit some money for more land, I think you said," she replied wearily.

"Yes. I do not need that land. I have far more than I can cultivate now. And you shall have that money—or, at least, all that you want of it—and go home and stay this summer, and try to get some of your bloom back?"

"And you?"

"Never fear for me. Only hurry and get well enough to travel, and I will either go with you, or place you in the hands of kind friends, and you shall be sheltered in the old home-nest this summer. I shall write to-day that you are coming."

Mrs. Streeter could hardly believe it was not one of her feverish dreams.

But it all came about in good time, and she arrived safely at home, where she was petted, caressed and cared for to her heart's content.

"You are all trying to spoil me," she would expostulate; "I shall never be fit for a farmer's wife any more."

"And why not, pray?" asked a younger sister, as she tangled a spray of apple blooms among her curls.

"There, if you ever put your hair up in that ugly knot you wore when you came home, farmer's wife, or President's wife, I'll—I'll—"

"Pinch the baby," suggested Fred.

"No, he shall never suffer for the sins of his parents," and she ran off with the household pet, as was her wont, to relieve the mother of all care.

And thus among loving friends, riding, walking, and, when at home, reading, music and writing long letters to her husband, the summer passed swiftly away.

And now he had written that he was coming, and she was counting the days that must elapse ere she could look upon his face and be clasped to his heart. She was eager to go now. Her holiday was over. Health had returned, and not for an instant did she shrink from the old life.

And when the husband came and saw the wonder one summer had wrought, he again told himself that the good old doctor was right.

A few days were given to the old friends; Judge Streeter had recovered his equipoise in the financial world—and then they turned their faces toward their Western home.

It was evening when they arrived, and the wife looked with woeful bewilderment on the change. It was not her home, and yet it should be. A handsome front had been added to the old building; and before she had time to question she was ushered into a parlor—a parlor newly furnished and already lighted. An elegant piano stood in a recess evidently constructed for its reception, and on it lay a card with the initials of Judge Streeter, and the words, "To my daughter."

She turned toward her husband to assure herself that he, too, had not changed into something or somebody else. But the merry twinkling in his eye told her that he was enjoying her surprise, and slowly she began to realize the whole situation. Yes, now she understood his strange reluctance to mention what he was doing, and his willingness to have her remain, even after she expressed her anxiety to return.

"Come, I have more to show you," and he showed her into a large commodious room, furnished for her own sleeping apartment, even to her baby's crib.

"This is for you. And now lay aside your dusty garments and prepare for tea. It must have been ready an hour ago. I will go and see."

When he returned he found his wife sitting in her little rocker and weeping silently.

"Have I wounded where I wished to heal?" he asked reproachfully.

"Forgive me," she said, smiling; "I am a goose, but a tired-winged one, you know. And I am so happy to be at home, and in such a home, that I have no words in which to tell my happiness."

He stooped to kiss the proffered lips, and then went out, leaving her to prepare for the evening meal.

At the table she found a neat, tidy girl, who took charge of the child. And thus the new life began. And what a different life it was—busy, not burdened. Time for the wants of the mind as well as the body. Good help in the kitchen all the time; a sewing-machine in the sitting-room, a piano in the parlor, and choice reading for any leisure hours.

The farm was an unfailing source of income, fully defraying all expenses each year and showing a balance in favor.

"Been improving, I see," said Dr. Meeker, as he reined his light carriage up to the neat fence behind which Mr. Streeter was preparing a bed of turnips.

"Yes, doctor. Come in."

"Professionally or socially?"

"Socially. I want to show you all the improvements. Here, Mary, the doctor wants to see you."

As she came to greet him, rosy with health and happiness, he nodded his head at her husband. "Yes, that will do;" and then glancing at the open piano, "I am going to stay just long enough to hear one tune played. Will you favor me?" And with the old school gallantry, fitted so awkwardly to his brusque manners, he led her to the instrument; and stood, hat in hand, while she played. "There, thank you, I have cut off my own supplies. No more fees for me here, I see. Just my luck. I never did know enough to secure my own bread and butter. Good-by, Mrs. Streeter;" and again nodding to the husband, he trotted out to his vehicle, and went on his way, his cheery voice humming to his horse, perhaps, the tune he had just heard.

"Vot You Lives On, Anyways."

A citizen of Toledo, in the ordinary current of business, became possessor of the note of a German saloon-keeper. The note becoming due, he took it to the party and presented it for payment. The man was not prepared to liquidate his obligation, and asked for an extension of time. This being granted, and the conditions settled properly, he was turning to leave when the German said:

"Shoost vait you leedle whiles, unt I gifs you ein glass goot peers."

"No, I thank you, I don't drink beer," was the reply.

"Vell den, I gifs you veeskees thot is petter as so mooch."

"No, thank you, I don't drink whisky."

"Sho! den, I knew how I fix you; I haf goot vines"—jerking down a bottle with a flourish.

Again the quiet "No, thank you, I don't drink wine."

"Vot! you don trinks noddings; vell, gifs you ein good shegar."

Once more, "No, thank you, I don't smoke."

"Mein Gott," exclaimed the Dutchman, throwing up both hands, "no peers, no veeskees, no vines, no dobacco, no noddings—vot you live on, anyways—botatoes, eh?"—Toledo Blade.

SCHROEDER'S BALLOON.

The Baltimorean Air-Ship—Progress of the Work—Description of the Machine.

[From the Baltimore Gazette.]

Frederick F. Schroeder, who is constructing a steerable air-ship, as previously announced, in which he designs crossing the Atlantic, is making rapid progress with the work. The balloon part will have a capacity for 185,000 cubic feet of gas, and a lifting power of 12,000 lbs, inclusive of its own weight. It will have one pulling and one pushing propeller, front and rear, making, according to the current that the ship is in, 600 to 1,200 revolutions a minute. The higher the current the greater the revolutions, and vice versa.

The propellers work independently, so that the aeronaut can turn the boat around upon its own pivot, and setting the ship against the current of the air by just giving the propeller so much of a revolution as to overcome the power of the current, which it is expected will cause the ship to remain still in air over any given point. Mr. Schroeder stated yesterday that with photographic instruments he can take views of any portion of the country or coast.

He believed that from a certain height he can see the bottom of every river, lake and ocean through his instruments, and be able to take photographic views of them. David Bachrach, photographer of this city, will assist Schroeder in these scientific observations and will travel with him.

Mr. Schroeder, continuing, said: The way I intend to prepare my balloon it will be perfectly air-tight, and will, therefore, remain in the air any length of time. I can make the longest of trips assisted by my motive power, and the gas apparatus will add a supply of gas to the balloon, as requires. Moving in the higher currents toward the north, the upper atmosphere becomes warmer and the lower atmosphere colder, so that there is nothing to prevent me from crossing the North Pole in a higher atmosphere, where it is quite warm, to find out or solve a scientific problem for which millions have been expended.

Mr. Schroeder showed, by the large drawing of different sections of the balloon, a mast, which would be placed in it from the boat to the center, braced with steel shafts, which will be attached to the center of the balloon by wire cams. The outside of the central portion of the balloon will also be secured by a hempen belt, 3 inches thick and 248 feet in circumference.

By this arrangement, should the balloon collapse, the aeronaut would still be protected below, and by the aid of his steering apparatus, slowly descend in safety. In three weeks from yesterday (Thursday) the contract for work upon the several sections of the balloon expires, and when completed the first exhibition will be given upon the hippodrome lot, corner of Boundary and Madison avenues. The Schroeder Air-Ship Company was incorporated upon the 8th of the present month. The officers are: President, Bernard Stolte; Vice-President, P. L. Ramsel; Treasurer, Gustav Stoppelhaar; Secretary, E. Lohmeyer; Directors, Dr. Callenious, R. Diebitch, John Stalfort, Julius Rupp, John M. Link, A. Scharon, Francis Althoff and H. Manner.

The company have a cash capital of $3,000, and have issued 600 shares at $5 each, 500 of which have already been taken.

The first trip of the air-ship will be from Baltimore to New York, and not to Washington, as previously intended. The balloon will be exhibited in New York and other cities of the Union, and the trip across the Atlantic will not be undertaken until the spring of 1876. Much interest is manifested in Europe at the result of the experiment.

Rules for Spelling.

[From the Journal of Education.]

The following rules should be carefully committed to memory, as the knowledge of them will prevent that hesitation about the spelling of common words which is frequently experienced even by the well educated:

All monosyllables ending in l, with a single vowel before it, have double l at the close; mill, sell.

All monosyllables ending in l, with a double vowel before it, have one l at the close; wail, sail.

Monosyllables ending in l, when compounded, retain but one l each, as fulfill, skillful.

All words of more than one syllable ending in l have the l only at the close, as faithful, delightful; except recall, befall, unwell, etc.

All derivations from words ending in l have one l only; as equality from equal; except they end in er, or ll, as mill, miller; full, fuller.

All participles in ing from verbs ending in e, lose the final; as have, having; amuse, amusing; except they come from verbs ending in double e, and then they retain both; as see, seeing; agree, agreeing.

All verbs in ly, and nouns in ment, retain the final of their primitives; as brave, bravery; refine, refinement; except judgment, acknowledgment.

All derivatives from words ending in er retain the e before the r; as refer, reference; except hindrance from hinder; remembrance from remember; disastrous from disaster; monstrous from monster; wondrous from wonder; cumbrous from cumber, etc.

All compound words, if both end not in l, retain their primitive parts entire; as millstones, chargeable, graceless, except always, also, deplorable, although, almost, admirable, etc.

All monosyllables ending in a consonant, with a single consonant before it, double that consonant in derivatives, as sin, sinner; ship, shipping; big, bigger; glad, gladder.

Monosyllables ending in a consonant, with a double vowel before it, do not double the consonant in derivatives, as sleep, sleeper; troop, trooper.

All words of more than one syllable, ending in a single consonant, preceded by a single vowel, and accented on the last syllable, double that consonant in derivatives, as commit, committee; compel, compelled; appal, appalling; distil, distiller.

Nouns of one syllable ending in y, change y into ies in the plural, and verbs ending in y, preceded by a consonant, change y into ies in the third person singular of the present tense, and ies in the past tense and past participle; as fly, flies; I apply, he applies; I reply, or have replied, or he replied. If the y be preceded by a vowel, this rule is not applicable; as key, keys; I play, he plays; we have enjoyed ourselves.

Compound words, whose primitives end in y, change y into i; as beauty, beautiful, lovely, loveliness.

TREACHEROUS SAVAGES.

The Projected Massacre of the Black Hills Commissioners by Malcontent Indians.

A correspondent with the Black Hills Council at Red Cloud Agency furnishes the Chicago Tribune with a graphic and intensely interesting account of the critical episode, briefly mentioned by telegraph, when the Commission and the troops in attendance narrowly escaped a general and complete massacre by the wild and bloodthirsty Sioux of the Northern country. It is plainly evident that a plan had been formed for the slaughter of the civilians and soldiers, and that nothing but the prompt and intrepid action of Young-Man-Afraid-of-his-Horses and his band prevented this terrible termination of the Black Hills negotiations. At 2 o'clock, says the account, Bull Eagle, a Minneconjou, took up the remarks of American Horse, who had called attention to the fact that the whites were not accustomed to being surrounded by men with arms in their hands, and that it would look better if they were left outside of the circle. Bull Eagle called out loudly that the whites had been the first to bring soldiers on the field, and that they must abide by the result. American Horse, who is an Ogalalla, retorted that Bull Eagle was a fool, and must shut up or he would make him.

The irate Minneconjou then withdrew, and was now seen conversing with Little Big Man, one of the wild Waziaas of the North—the owner of one of the most fiendish faces in the whole gathering, and whose record is one of blood and brutality. Not long after, these nobles of the plains were found sneaking among the young men, being generally and unnecessarily very active. It should be remembered that many of the young men of all the bands, save some of the river tribes, are bitterly opposed to making any disposal whatever of the Black Hills, and, in the slang of the street, may be set down as very much "on their ear" about the steps proposed by their chiefs and headmen. Having threatened mischief, they were ready to fall in at the first opportunity, which they did to the number of over 200. All save the right flank of the cavalry force in attendance—Capt. Egan's and Capt. Mills' companies of the 2d, under the command of the latter—were covered by Indians, and the number increased every moment, so that, in a few minutes, more than half the force was heavily covered by Winchester, Sharp's, and Remington rifles, at not more than ten to fifteen paces. Mills' company was on the right, and completely double-covered. They were becoming altogether too thick for Egan, when he complained, and an interpreter was sent out to order them back. They only doubled up on Mills. Things were becoming "scary" at this time. The cavalry boys "stood to horse" with carbines in hand, while the Commission held its seats as though nothing was occurring, yet showing a proper degree of uneasy interest in the matter.

Meanwhile, the young chief, Young-Man-Afraid-of-His-Horses, had observed the movements of the discontented reprobates, and, calling his Lieutenant, he gave the order that his band should at once move on the Indians in the rear; and, as he is very popular with the people, his men were at hand, and, in a minute, were dashing their horses in among the hostiles, and crowded them out into the field to the extreme right, and then formed on the flank, and held the ground until the council closed. Meanwhile Young-Man was smoking his pipe as contentedly as though in his own tepee, and after the Council closed, acted as rear-guard with his men to the Commission to the Agency. Previous to the move of Young-Man, nearly all the half-breeds near the tent, and some of the interpreters, had received warning from friends and relatives to clear away from the tent, as there was great danger. They did so, and left the whites unwarned. After the matter was over, those of Young-Man's men who turned out to "save the right" were most bitterly abused by those who had lain the plan for a general massacre. All the cavalry men were to be shot down at the first fire, the horses stampeded, and then the Commission were to get particular Jerusalem from that vacant space in front, which was held by Little Big Man and his crowd. To the promptness of Young-Man and his men can be attributed the prevention of a massacre that would have been as complete as would have been treacherous. In addition to the warning, proof is found in the fact that an unusually large number of shells for breach-loaders were sold yesterday by the traders; that the bands who had camped near the road leading to the council-ground moved two miles away in the morning; and, also, that a further band of 300 warriors, armed cap-a-pie, were discovered in a canon near by, who were supposed to be there to make an attack on the agency, and to prevent the troops from Camp Robinson from going out to the council-camp, eight miles below, after the fight should have commenced. A thousand facts known here all point to a corroboration of a plan for a massacre of the whole outfit by the young men under the lead of the wild devils of the north. The threat was made by them that they would kill the first man who spoke for the treaty; and no man was brave enough, save White Bull, of the Sans-Arcs, and he only incidentally, to say a word in favor of the sale of the country. The only Commissioners proper to treat with such a gang are Gatling guns, with a Crook to manage them.

HIS Excellency Iwakura Tomomie, when he visited England a few years ago as Chief of the Japanese Embassy, made a promise which he has just fulfilled, by presenting to the library of the Indian office in London a set of the Chinese version of the Buddhist Scriptures. The work is a fair sized library in itself, in weight at least, weighing about three and a half tons, and will require a room alone.

To bed, and rise early and advertise;
For though when an "ad." is seen the first time
One doesn't "quite see it"—in Irish sublime;
And next when under our notice it comes
We greet it with "pish!" sundry "bahs!" and

And even the third time call it a "bore;"
Next grimly fancy we've seen it before,
And the fifth half read, and cry out, "What stuff!"
The sixth go through it and [illegible] quite enough;
And the seventh greet it with yawns and "pshaws!"
and on the eighth are near flinging it out of doors;
Yet on the ninth we wonder if 'tis true or not,
And on the tenth imagine it not all "rot!"
On the eleventh we think we'll ask and know,
And next we murmur, "It may be so!"
And thirteen comes with, "It's really the case,"
And fourteen says it "must be in our [illegible]."
The fifteenth, "We'll buy it as [illegible]."
On the sixteenth we take the address of the man;
And so go on till we buy, at time the "score,"
And use that advertised article "evermore."

Human Saliva Produces Deadly Effects on Poisonous Reptiles.

The Marietta (Georgia) Journal was told by a gentleman the other day that human spittle was as deadly to poisonous snakes as their bites were deadly to man. He says that while picking up a bundle of straw and trash under his arm, while cleaning a field, a ground rattlesnake, four feet long, crawled out from it and fell to the ground at his feet. He at once placed his heel upon the head of the snake and spit in its mouth. Shortly afterward the snake showed symptoms of inactivity and sickened, and he picked it up by its tail and carried it to the house and showed it to his wife, telling her he had spit in its mouth and that it was poisoned. At the expiration of fifteen minutes the snake was dead. To further experiment, he came across a blowing adder snake, which ejected from its mouth a yellowish liquid. He caught it and spit in its mouth, and it died. He caught another blowing, and it refused to open its mouth. He spit upon a stick and rubbed the spittle upon the adder's nose, and it died. Afterward he came across a black snake, regarded as not poisonous, and he caught it and spit in its mouth. Instead, of the spittle killing the black snake as it did the poisonous reptiles, it only made it stupidly sick, from which it recovered. This conclusively shows that poisonous snakes have as much to fear from the spittle of man as man has to fear from their bites.

Plain Max.

Archduke Maximilian, of Bavaria, went recently to Vienna to visit his daughter, the Empress of Austria. He always travels quietly, and was mistaken for a business man by a talkative Austrian tradesman, who occupied the same compartment with him in the train, and who, after telling all about his own affairs, asked the Archduke where he was going. "Going to Vienna." "On business?" "No; to visit my daughter, who married an Austrian." "Is your son-in-law in good business?" "Well, tolerably good, but troublesome at times." "What is he?" "The Emperor." The tradesman was covered with confusion, and, notwithstanding the laughing protestations of the Archduke, he darted from the carriage at the very first stopping place.

MORMONISM.

In the Mormon Tabernacle—Marriage Discussed by the Ablest Exponent of the Theories of the Latter-Day Saints—Brigham Young's Dupes' Place in Heaven.

[Salt Lake Cor. Cincinnati Commercial.]

You find the Tabernacle to be a large oblong, 250 feet long by 150 wide, with a single, self-sustaining arch roof 65 feet high, supported around the sides by 46 sand-stone columns. It is capable of seating 8,000 persons, but having no heating apparatus, is used only in summer. In one end is the organ, second in size only to the Boston organ. It is an instrument of rare sweetness and power, built by a Salt Lake saint. The large choir, of perhaps sixty voices, is placed immediately around the organ, and in front are tiers of seats with chairs and desks in the center for the superior officers of the congregation, from the President down. In front of all is a long table on which are placed the bread and water of the Communion service, which is administered every Sunday, water taking the place of wine.

On the morning of our attendance, a children's gathering was held, preparatory to the observance of the great Mormon anniversary, July 24, commemorating the "Landing of the Pilgrims" on the sand-bound shores of Salt Lake, twenty-eight years ago. Some 3,000 children, or more, were present, belonging to the various ward Sunday schools, for the purpose of rehearsing their songs and declamations. The delivery of the latter indicated the influence of the theater rather than of the school, the articulation being generally far from perfect, and the pronunciation faulty. The children kept excellent time and tune. The music and poetry were up to the machine average of Sunday school verse and song. The latter-day element, of course, was prominent, as in the following:

Bless Brigham Young, we children pray,
Thy chosen Twelve, in what they say;
Thy elders, priests, and teachers, too,
Their labors bless in all they do.

We are the children of the saints,
Of these, the latter days,
When God again has caused to shine
Truth's bright effulgent rays.
His kingdom he is building up,
To bear unbounded sway,
That Zion may appear in all its glory.

CHORUS.
Hurrah! hurrah! we'll help the work along;
'Tis expected that the children will perform a noble part
In rolling on the kingdom in its glory.

How bright have been parental hopes
About what we shall do
In rolling on Jehovah's work,
And helping put it through.
We'll stem the tide of wickedness,
That deluges the world,
That Zion may appear in all its glory.
CHORUS—Hurrah, etc.

We're heirs unto the priesthood,
For in it we were born;
By naught but vilest actions
Can we be of it shorn.
We're of the fold of Jesus,
His precious lambs are we,
And, if we are pure-hearted,
His face we soon shall see.

Another hymn, entitled "The Standard of Zion," was an adaption of the "Star-Spangled Banner."

During the singing our eyes ranged over the mottoes painted on the panels in front of the gallery. One of these read—and it found a striking exemplification in the scene before us—"Utah's best crop—children." Other mottoes are: "Our own mountain home;" "United we stand, divided we fall;" "Heirs of the priesthood;" "Brigham our leader and friend;" "The Kingdom is ours;" "We thank Thee, O God, for a prophet;" "Our martyred prophet." After the service some of our party had a brief interview with Brigham Young, who is said to show signs of advancing age and debility, as might be expected of one 74 years old.

In the afternoon the regular public service was held in the Tabernacle. In Mormondom no one preaches except as he is moved by the Holy Ghost. It would seem, however, that the Holy Ghost generally points out Orson Pratt as the "Defender of the Faith" on special occasion. This is not strange. He is undoubtedly the ablest living exponent of the theology and morals of the saints. He is of medium stature, sturdily and somewhat heavily built, with a large head, broad face, ruddy complexion, long white beard; on the whole, a fair American representative of the old time patriarch. He stands, speaking with a sidelong inclination of the head and an upward cast of the eye, as though taking aim at a squirrel with a shotgun. His voice is strong, manner ponderous, language plain and homely, style forcible rather than elegant, direct rather than correct. His address was preceded by singing and a prayer from another brother, who prayed for the strangers present, that they might be led to see things as they are, and to report ac-cord-ing-ly, with a highly expressive syllabification and penultimate accentuation of the last word.

Brother Orson took for his text Matt. xix., 3-9; and after a preliminary statement that he had no knowledge of what he was about to say, but that he should speak as he was directed to speak, announced his theme to be marriage. He then proceeded to unfold the Mormon theory of this institution. It would be neither practicable nor profitable to give anything like a complete synopsis of this singular discourse. Suffice it to say, it was an elaborate exposition and defense of spiritual marriage and polygamy. Since the apostolic age there has been no true religion in the world, until on April 6, 1830, the church was organized anew by special revelation, with its apostles, revelators, and prophets, just as the Christian Church was organized at the beginning. There can be no valid marriage unless celebrated by one specially authorized by God. All marriages before the divine revelation (to Joseph Smith) are invalid. True marriage is for eternity. Those not properly married can only be angels, i. e., ministering servants hereafter. Those truly, i. e., Mormonically, married shall inherit thrones and be rulers of celestial kingdoms. Polygamy enlarges these kingdoms, and so gives man a higher position in Heaven. Polygamy, moreover, makes provision for the souls of the departed, who are as yet imprisoned in Paradise. The men and women of to-day can become baptized and married for the dead, and so secure their release from Paradise, and their establishment as gods, or rulers of celestial kingdoms.

And so on for quantity, and for quality a strange medley, by turns forcible and feeble, shrewd and silly, biblical and blasphemous, amusing perhaps, but disgusting beyond a doubt. And this, I felt, is Mormonism—fanaticism putrified into a fraud; religion reduced to the propagation of the race; solitary Bible texts exaggerated and perverted into a revelation of absurdities and abominations; salvation by marriage; a Christianity, the corner stone of which is the sexual relation; a Mohammedan heaven, seen through a New Testament perspective with an Old Testament background.

The large congregation, which must have numbered nearly 4,000, the men occupying one half of the house, the women the other, listened attentively, many of them admiringly. They seemed to believe this strange gospel—although how many of them, or how much of it, it would be hard to say; time will show.

WALKING.

Pedestrianism as an Exercise—The Most Favorable Time for Walking.

Dr. H. I. Bowditch has been writing a series of articles for the London Sanitary Record, on "Health, and the Means of Preserving It." In his third paper, which is devoted to "exercise," after enumerating the principal kinds, as walking, running, dancing, horseback-riding, driving, gymnastics, boxing, bowling, rowing, and swimming, he goes on as follows:

"Of these the most universally applicable, and usually the best form of exercise, is walking. Unfortunately our climate, with its snow and intense cold in winter, and equally intense and depressing heat in summer, prevents all of us from walking as much as would be useful, or as much as can be done in some other countries throughout the year. Whenever it is feasible it probably exercises the body better than any other method. It becomes, however, very uninteresting, even in a large city, if made simply for health's sake.

"Therefore it is always well to combine with it another object, either of business or of pleasure. Hence a profession that will compel out-of-door exercise is the best prescription one can give. I have in recollection now a case of a naturally feeble man who had very decided signs of pulmonary disease, with bleeding from the lungs. He was a a newspaper carrier when he called to see me after one of his bleed-ings. I feared, at that time, that exposure during the winter would be very pernicious, and perhaps fatal to him. Under this exercise, however, taken daily in rain and storms of all weather, and by the use of cod liver oil, he wholly recovered.

Those of my patients who have most frequently recovered are those who, by advice, commenced years since, and still continue several times daily, their "constitutional" walks around the Common in Boston (about a mile). They will continue to do so while they live because they know from experience now that not only their health, but their real comfort depends upon a strict attention to that course. Omission of that exercise for a single day perceptibly affects them unfavorably. Two more obvious advantages arise from this course.

1. Every muscle in the body is gently and uniformly brought into action by the swing of the legs and the arms, and consequently of the trunk in a vertical direction. The undulations made by the head, chest and abdomen, in a vertical plane are thus not only according to "Hogarth's line of beauty," but also in the tendering to perfect health. Every internal organ is gently stimulated to more robust action. The circulation goes more freely and uniformly.

2. Never, in a common walk, does a person breathe twice the same air because he is constantly changing his position. This fact alone is of incalculable advantage. Some writers contend that the rebreathing of air once partially used is one of the most fertile causes of consumption.

The most favorable time for walking is undoubtedly about midday in winter, and in the morning and toward evening in the summer. Late in the evening is less useful, because of the liability to dampness and coolness, and absence of the sun's rays, which of themselves seem sometimes to put vigor into the animal frame, and their absence is correspondingly felt in a depression of the powers.

Nevertheless, one cannot deny that there is a great energy sometimes given by a brisk walk in a cold, dry, starlight or moonlight night, when the atmosphere seems not only free from all chilling moisture but absolutely pure and infinitely exhilarating.

An Encounter with a Wildcat.

A Nevada paper relates the following: "William Lyell, a rancher living near Huffaker's in Washoe county, had considerable of a tussle with a wildcat Saturday morning. He was out hunting with a couple of dogs, when near the lower end of his ranche the dogs scared up a cat, which, being pressed hard, turned and stood sullenly at bay. One of the dogs, a shepherd, bounced into it at once, which action the 'varmint' was waiting for, as she soon had him down and was biting him savagely. The other dog, attacking it from the rear, managed to put the cat on the defensive. At this juncture the cat managed to disengage herself, and made a rush for Mr. Lyell, who had been unable to get a shot in for fear of killing his dogs. He received her with the butt end of his gun, breaking it over her; but she, nothing daunted, evinced such a strong determination to force the battle that he was glad to leave the gun-barrels in her possession. Rallying his dogs for another onset, and grasping the stock of his gun, his sole weapon, he boldly advanced to where stood the cat with gleaming eyes, seemingly emitting flashes of fire, her tail waving impatiently in the air, as if in defiance to him. Quick as a flash the feline sprang at our hero, who with intrepid courage calmly awaited the coming event, and met her with a well-directed blow from his gun-barrel, which he had managed to regain, leaving her dead at his feet. The cat on being taken to the ranche was found to weigh thirty-three pounds, and measured three feet four inches from tip to tip."

Mr. William M. Hunt, was recently in the vicinity of Newbouryport, Mass., in company with a fellow artist, when a curious Irishman approached and inquired, "Woo are yez, anyhow?" He was told that they were painters. "Painters, is it? Maybe thin ye are the fellers that painted 'Ward's Ink' on the side of me cart, bad cess to ye!"

The geological surveyors of Tennessee have turned up a choice collection of Indian curiosities in the mounds of Lewis and Maury counties.

A Twisted Cow.

Mr. Hardy, of Portlandville, who was in the Quartermaster's department at Sioux City in 1862, tells a story of wonderful endurance of a cow belonging to Mr. Hagy. The cow had been missing for eight days when found at the bottom of a well forty feet deep. When discovered she was standing on her feet, with head bent around to her rump, and evidently had been in that position for eight days, without food or water. The funny part of the story is, that when drawn out she continued for several days to walk in a circle and could not be made to walk in a straight line, and it was only by letting her move off in a constantly enlarging circle, until it took in the farm-yard of the owner, that she could be driven to her home from the place where she became so set in her way.—Sioux City (Iowa) Journal.

A Secret of Fine Linen.

"Jake, whar you git sich fine 'broidered shirts as dat you had on at de meetin' las' night?" asked Pete, as Jake stood at the postoffice door, trying to stick a bent brass pin into the back of his paper collar and anchor that article in position.

"You doesn't 'pear to 'preshiate my circumstances, Pete!"

"I no's dat you ain't yearned nuff money to buy de buttons on dat shirt sence I ho'd ye—I 'preshiates dat!" rejoined Pete.

"You's off de track, Pete, and dar you'll stay till your mudder gits ter be a washerwoman! You hear dat?"

Pete signified that h'd heard enough.—Atlanta Constitution.

Shocking Incident.

A horrible incident occurred recently near Falmouth, Jamaica. A white man and his wife having had differences, resolved to separate, and a judicial order to that effect was obtained. A dispute arose as to the custody of their youngest child, and this one day was followed by a scuffle. Each seized the infant and attempted to drag it from the other, and in the struggle they actually tore the child in pieces, killing it. They were seized by their neighbors, and would have been hanged to the nearest tree had not the authorities overpowered the mob and taken the wretched couple to Falmouth, where they were committed for trial by the magistrates.

CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED.

Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup,
Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic,
Schenck's Mandrake Pills,

Are the only medicines that will cure Pulmonary Consumption.

Frequently medicines that will stop a cough will occasion the death of the patient; they lock up the liver, stop the circulation of the blood, hemorrhage follows, and, in fact, they clog the action of the very organs that caused the cough.

Liver Complaint and Dyspepsia are the causes of two thirds of the cases of Consumption. Many persons complain of a dull pain in the side, constipation, coated tongue, pain in the shoulder-blade, feelings of drowsiness and restlessness, the food lying heavily on the stomach, accompanied with acidity and belching up of wind.

These symptoms usually originate from a disordered condition of the stomach or a torpid liver.

Persons so affected, if they take one or two heavy colds, and if the cough in these cases be suddenly checked, will find the stomach and liver clogged, remaining torpid and inactive, and almost before they are aware the lungs are a mass of sores and ulcerated, the result of which is death.

Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup is an expectorant which does not contain opium or anything calculated to check a cough suddenly.

Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic dissolves the food, mixes with the gastric juices of the stomach, aids digestion, and creates a ravenous appetite.

When the bowels are costive, skin sallow, or the symptoms otherwise of a bilious tendency, Schenck's Mandrake Pills are required.

These medicines are prepared only by
J. H. SCHENCK & SON,
N. E. corner Sixth and Arch Streets, Phila.
And are for sale by all druggists and dealers.

All these distressing symptoms gradually and surely disappear.

7. As day after day the SARSAPARILLIAN is taken, new signs of returning health will appear; as the blood improves in strength and purity, disease will diminish, and all foreign and impure deposits, nodes, tumors, cancers, hard lumps, etc., be resolved away and the unsound made sound and healthy; ulcers, fever sores, syphilitic sores, chronic skin diseases gradually disappear.

8. In cases where the system has been salivated, and Mercury, Quicksilver, Corrosive Sublimate (the principal constituent in the advertised Sarsaparillas, associated in some cases with Hyd. of Potassa) have accumulated and become deposited in the bones, joints, etc., causing caries of the bones, rickets, spinal curvatures, contortions, white swellings, varicose veins, etc., the SARSAPARILLIAN will resolve away these deposits and exterminate the virus of the disease from the system.

9. If those who are taking these medicines for the cure of Chronic, Scrofulous or Syphilitic diseases, however slow may be the cure "feel better," and find their general health improving, their flesh and weight increasing or even keeping its own, it is a sure sign that the cure is progressing. In these diseases the patient either gets better or worse—the virus of the disease is not inactive; if not arrested and driven from the blood, it will spread and continue to undermine the constitution. As soon as the SARSAPARILLIAN makes the patient "feel better," every hour you will grow better and increase in health, strength and flesh.

The great power of this remedy is in diseases that threaten death—as in Consumption of the Lungs and Tuberculous Phthisis, Scrofula, Syphiloid Diseases, Wasting, Degeneration, and Ulceration of the Kidneys, Diabetes, Stoppage of Water (instantaneous relief afforded where catheters have to be used, thus doing away with the painful operation of using these instruments), dissolving stone in the bladder, and in all cases of Inflammation of the Bladder and Kidneys, in Chronic cases of Leucorrhea and Uterine diseases.

In tumors, nodes, hard lumps and syphiloid ulcers; in dropsy and venereal sore throat, ulcers and in tubercles of the lungs; in gout, dyspepsia, rheumatism, rickets; in mercurial deposits—it is in these terrible forms of disease, where the human body has become a complete wreck, and where every hour of existence is torture, wherein this great remedy challenges the astonishment and admiration of the sick. It is in such cases, where all the pleasures of existence appear cut off from the unfortunate, and by its wonderful, almost supernatural agency, it restores the hopeless to a new life and new existence where this great remedy stands alone in its might and power.

In the ordinary skin diseases that every one is more or less troubled with, a few doses will in most cases, and a few bottles in the more aggravated forms, work a permanent cure.

Those afflicted with chronic diseases should purchase a package containing one dozen bottles. Price $10 per dozen, or $5 per half dozen bottles, or $1 per bottle. Sold by druggists.

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN INDIANA, OCT., 14, 1875

The probabilities are at this writing that The Republicans have gained Ohio, by a small majority. Cincinnati and Cleveland have been carried by the bond-holders.

The famous trotting mare, "American Girl," fell dead while trotting in a race at the New York State Fair, at Elmira, a few days ago. She was valued at about $30,000.

Grant is evidently a man who has no 'nonsensical' sentiment about him He sold off an old horse, which carried him at Vicksburg, for $56, and the trusty steed is now very likely dragging a huckster's cart at St. Louis But has the old horse fallen much lower that its rider, after all?

Hon. D. W. Voorhees, very effectively punctured the false sophistry of Carl Schurz the other day at Chillicothe. Mr. Voorhees said that Mr. Schurz appeard very well in the U. S. Senate. At the close of the Senatorial career, however, no political party had for him the slightest confidence. Both parties in his own State and every-where repudiated him.

The Ligonier Banner, gave Carl Schurz speech in suppliment last week This speech was made against the election of the Democratic ticket in Ohio. The Banner claims to be a Democratic paper. We can't understand it, unless it be the primary step from one party to another, a kind of breaking the ice, as it were preparatory to the grand political leap into the waters of Grantism.

Grant made a speech at Des Moines the other day, the only speech he ever made of any length. Why he should have departed from his usual custom has so far been a mystery to everybody, but a lady correspondent who was present, lifts the veil. She says, the banquet lasted until 2 a. m., next morning, after which she retired from the scene, leaving the president and his comrads still rallying round the flagon, boys. Under such inspiration it is not improbable that the spirit of speech-making came and alighted upon the heart of our beloved president.

The opening of the Bank of Nevada in San Francisco with a gold capitol of $5,000,000. which took place on Oct., 4, attracted a great crowd, mainly drawn by curiosity to see the new building and piles of glittering coin which were displayed to the best advantage in open safes, in trays, and on the floor. This bank is owned by six men, the most prominent of whom are Flood & O'Brien, who a few years ago the proprietors of a small drinking saloon, are now regarded as the two wealthiest men on the Pacific coast. They made their money by lucky mining speculations, and are the principal owners of the "big bonanza" of the Comstock lode.

A remarkable discovery a few days ago was made by a farmer living eighteen miles northwest of Dallas, Texas, in quarrying a stone for a wall. In removing a layer from the quarry a stone about ten ounces in weight rolled out, and its perfect roundness so pleased the eye of a little boy who was standing by that he at once picked it up and carried it home. What was the surprise of the household of which the boy was a member to find, when night came, that his marble, as he called it, sparkled like a diamond. Daylight destroys its prilliancy, and it has already become the wonder of the country round about. The owner thinks it valuable, and will have it examined by a competent expert.

No Connection.

We are authorized to state that the popular clothing man of Waterloo Jacob Kahn, has just returned from the east with an immense stock of clothing, dry goods, Boots & Shoes, and has now the entire stock opened out for the inspection of the public. He also wishes us to say that he is not connected with any other firm in the county in the clothing line, put that he will sell at figures that cannot be duplicated in the county. He is still buying all kinds of produce for cash. Call and see him. 4w

LOST.—A medium sized milch cow, about six years old, main color white, with small red spots. Strayed from my premises about a week ago. A liberal reward will be given for imformation or her return. F. PICKER.

From Angola.

ANGOLA, Oct., 11, 1875.

—Winter is coming.

—Husk your corn.

—Dig your potatoes.

—And fatten your hogs.

—Hala Day, has gone to California to stay.

—H. T. Austin, keeps all kinds of lumber, lath, shingles, &c.

—Jonny Young, is slowly recovering from a long and severe attack of typhoid fever.

—A. W. Hendry has just finished his brick dwelling houses, and has them already rented.

—The brick school house in Lavitts addition, will be in readiness for the winter school.

—Angola Lodge 180, I. O. O. F. meets every Saturday evening, and is in a flourishing condition.

—The lots in H. F. Lavitt's addition are nearly all sold. The fact is Hank knows how to suit all kinds of customers.

—Lewis Hendry is shipping a nice lot of fat hogs. Lew deals largely in all kinds of stock, and is one of our heaviest shippers.

—If you want an easy ride buy one of Anderson & Bews' buggies, or carriages They make all kinds of vehicles from a lumber wagon down to a velocipede.

—The diphtheria has not disappeared from this place as reported in the "Republican' There are several cases in and around Angola yet, though seemingly not so malignant as at first.

—See that you have shelter for all your stock, if not, sell off the surplus, as it does not pay to winter them without good shelter. Next, get wood enough to last 12 months.

—From the appearance of our brickyard, one would think that there was a fair prospect for a large amount of building next spring. Our masons I understand have orded a large amount of pressed brick made this fall.

—G. W. Poland, builder and contractor, can supply all with doors, blinds and sash. Office at Scoville & Latson's store. Also gets up excursions for churches without prejudice or impartiality. Give him a call if you want anything in that line.

—Another new store coming to town. Look out for a tremendous slaughter in the ready made clothing business. Uhl & McDowell, from Millersburg, Ohio, are opening out a heavy stock of clothing and Gents' furnishing goods, in the old Hendry building, North-east corner of Public square.

—Our [illegible] is in a flourishing condition under the supervision of Prof. Williams, as principal, and Albert Long, as assistant. They are turning out a goodly number of school teachers, (I mean preparing them to teach school] besides the doctors and lawyers, the two former are highly necessary to have but of the latter, there are too many now for the good of our country.

—There has been an unusual amount of wheat sold in this market for several days past. The freight house is full, and they have been filling all the cars that could be procured, all full, from 50 to 60 loads a day. If the market would open up for potatoes, we could make it lively for the railroads for a while at least.

CATARRH.—If you would avoid being rendered deaf, or unfit to mingle in society, on account of foul and nauseating discharges from gangrenous ulcers in the head, use Dr. Detchon's celebrated Catarrh Remedy. It is the greatest cure and control for the hideous destroyer, the world ever saw. It will save every life threatened by it. It immediately arrests its progress, and if persevercingly used, will never disappoint in a cure. Go to Davenport's Drug Store, and get a sample bottle free. Sept. 30 y

Go North, South, East or West, and you will find coughs and colds at this season of the year. A remedy which never fails to give satisfaction is Dr. Hull's Cough Syrup. Price, 25c.

We are requested to announce that the Episcopal Church in Hicksville will be consecrated on next Sabbath, Oct. 17 Services by the Rt. Rev. J. C. Talbot, Bishop of Indiana.

We are advised by postal card that a paper will be established in Garret, the first number to appear about Oct. 20th. Messrs C. W. Wing and Thos. Malony are at the head of the enterprise and are now constructing a building to be used as an office.

Grangers Stop,

Don't buy those old style hats & caps, ragged ends of some old stock. But go direct to T. B. Totten's Hat & Cap store and buy the latest and best styles, lower than ever was handled by any other in town.

The new fall style of hats have showed up. They are quite early this season perhaps on account of them being so homely—It'll take twice as long as usual to get them "going the rounds." Knock kneed gals should wrinkle up their nose at the present fashion.

The Teachers' Institute will be held in Waterloo, begining on Monday, Nov., 1st, 1875. Accommodations will be provided at reduced rates, for all who may attend. We have this year added to our list of assistants, a competent instructor of vocal music. Let us have our usual good turn out.

W. H. Dills, Esq., will deliver his address on the subject of Temperance at Waterloo, at the Presbyterian church next Sabbath. He gave the address at Newville last Sabbath to a large audience who seemed well pleased.

We extend most profound thanks to our accomplished and handsome lady friend, Mrs. Dr. Allen, for a most beautiful bouquet, presented on Tuesday evening at the festival. Also the same to that little bunch of roses, Miss Hattie Griswold for the same favor.

Ezra McIntyre and two Willard boys are charged with burglarizing Husselman and Danks' grocery and boot and shoe store at Waterloo last Monday morning. The grand jury was called together yesterday, in order to have the case tried at this term. The parties are now in jail.

The Champion lather, Prof. Minor, is among us showing his skill in this art. He's a rattler, and there no getting around it. Without any slight turn of of the wrist he drives sixty nails a minute, and the beauty of it is, he keeps it up the entire day. Anyone anxious for match will please show up.

We had the pleasure of hearing Geo. Kilpatrick, at Waterloo last week, in his lecture on "Sherman's March to the Sea." He is a splendid speaker, with fine descriptive powers, and gives one of the best lectures we ever heard. We hope he will favor an Auburn audience during the winter.

The mush and milk supper by the ladies of the Presbyterian church last Tuesday evening was not generally patronized, but between bouquets and a silver card receiver, voted to the handsomest lady, who proved to be Miss Mahuron, a very nice sum was realized.

A farmer in Richland-tp was swindled out of $250, a few days ago, by a patent right man. He had a new churn dasher for which he wanted $300 for county rigets. Mr. Ober gave him $250, and was to pay the balance next morning. During the night the man lit out, and our farmer did not even get a deed.

Everybody still continues to go to the old reliable Photograph & Gem Gallery south of railroad and over Johnson's store, when they want first premium, India Ink Crayon, Oil water-colored paintings, Berlin Photographs, Ambrotypes or Gems.

JOHNSON BROS., Artists.
Oct 14, 3t. Waterloo, Ind

We have a shoemaker in town who never disappoints a man on an order for the needful brogans. If, when a customer calls, his boots are not finished, the proprietor dishes him up the only pair in the house, and customers goe off with a feeling akin to veneration for that leather butcher. His patrons happen to be about the same size.

The fair at Waterloo last week was well patronized, though the weather was bad. The exhibition was very good except in the speed department. There were but few fast horses in attendance and 2:42 was the best time made. Very few people attending fairs but what like to see good races, as was attested by the large number surrounding the track each afternoon.

An act of the last legislature requires that a "township trustee shall designate certain days in each week or month, as may be required, in which he will attend to the business of his township, and cause notice thereof to be given to the inhabitants of such township; and all contracts, auditing and payment of claims, shall be made only on such designated days."

"In the order of the Daughters of Rebecca," says Hon. Schuyler Colfax "are 60,000 American women, and yet no one outside knows anything about the society. Who says a woman can't keep a secret?"

We don't like to injure the tone of a good thing by suggesting anything practical, but the Daughters of Rebecca, is not a secret order, except as to the pass word, and that is changed faster than a woman can tell it.—[South Bend Union.

And we don't like to spoil a good thing even when perpetrated by an editor, but the Daughters of Rebecca is a secret order, so much so as the Odd Fellows.

Go to the Millinery store of Mrs Little & Fair, for your winter hats, bonets &c.

That Cow Ordinance,

MR. EDITOR:—I see that there are a few citizens in town who pay no attention to the ordinance passed by the Town Board, relative to keeping up their stock at night. You expressed a hope last week that all would comply with the ordinance without any recourse to force matters, but there a few mean people everywhere, and we trust the town officials will make an effort to have this ordinance enforced by every one. All good citizens are now living up to it and I hope the Marshal will insist upon the others doing the same. First pass good wholesome laws, and then see them enforced. This thing of having cow yards on our public streets ought to be played out. I ask for the enforcement of the ordinance, for I think it a good one.

JUSTICE.

Found at Last

—Is the universal cry of countless sufferers who have been fortunate enough to give the world's great cough remedy "Dr Kings New discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds," a trial. The American people have been humbugged long enough with quack nostrums and worthless preparations that are daily flooding the country and they now demand a change. In Dr. King's new discovery, the true remedy is found at last. No one need suffer longer with coughs, colds, Asthma and Bronchitis, as a single trial will convince him. For sale by F. E. Davenport, Druggist, Auburn, Ind. Trial bottle free.

Miss Laura Ream, reported Morton's speech at Bryan a few days ago. In her report we find the following local allusion to Miss Ida Blair of Waterloo, and we cheerfully give room for its first appearance in the local papers of the county.

"Here a pleasant surprise awaited him. Two ladies from Kendallville, Mrs. Myers and Mrs. Iddings, and Miss Blair, the postmistress of Waterloo, had come over to hear him speak. The two former ladies have been active in the Centennial work, and will attend the entertainment this week. The pretty postmistress would like to come, but can't leave her duties. She is both young and pretty, with a cheek like the rose, fair complexion and teeth of pearl, and the words which dropped from her tempting lips were freighted with a good deal more wisdom than usually falls to the lot of youth and beauty. There is a touching story of filial devotion behind her appointment which is of more account than the youth and beauty, and may she find favor in the eyes of President Grant's successor, whoever that may be.

That Game Supper.

The ladies of the M. E. church will give a game supper, one week from next Friday evening, Oct., 22, at which all the delicacies of the season in the way of game will be served, such as wild turkey, pheasant, quail, prairie chickens rabbit, squirrel &c. It will be the most elaborate affair of the season, and no pains will be spared to make it pleasant and enjoyable. The object of this will be to raise funds to pay for the splendid new organ which has just been purchased for this church. BUTLER ITEMS.

BUTLER, Oct., 12th, 1875.

—Although the weather was not very fair, many attended the Fair, and had a good time.

—Snow on Monday. Hardly enough for sleighing or even sliding down hill, but the heavy frosts we now have, make good sliding on the sidewalks.

—One person of this place entered a pair of socks on Tuesday and then come home and knit them, taking them up Wednesday morning. Our town took a good share of First Premiums. Among others, Dr. Geo. E. Vesey, took First Premium on his Cabinet of Curiosities, which, by-the-way, is well worth looking at.

—Our people have been startled 3 times during the past week by the tolling of the bell. First on friday. Mr. J. Ferrier of Milford, Kosciusko county, Ind., lost a little daughter, Gertie. Mr. Ferrier with his wife and children had been visiting in the east, and stopped here to visit with J. D. Price and family. While here two children, a boy and girl were taken sick, but the former recovered. The little girl was buried at Metz.

On Saturday morning the bell tolled forty-six for Wm. Young. He had long been a resident of this place but was preparing to move to Beaver Dam. O.

His death was very sudden for on Saturday he was up town. He leaves a wife and child to mourn him.

Again the bell tolled. This morning Mr. McNabb, died at the residence of his son D. McNabb of this place.

What a chill it strikes to the hearts of the stoutest to hear a knell tolled dolefully out: The woman busy with household cares, the child at play, the man figuring the next speculation,—such will pause for a moment as the bell tolls solemnly, one—two—three—.

NEW SONG OF THE SHIRT.

With fingers nimble and fair
With eyes that with luster beam,
Sits a woman clad in becoming attire,
Busy at her sewing machine;
While it runs with wonderful ease,
With her music the cottage rings,
With voice pitched to a melodious key,
This "Song of Shirt" she sings.

Oh wonderful, beautiful plan,
By which dullness is driven from work;
For never before since creation of man
Was there pleasure in making a shirt.
But this new American Machine,
Which is threaded and run with ease,
'Tis nice to watch as it speedily flies
Over band, and gusset, and seams.

The self-setting needle swiftly is sped
The self-threading shuttle, O'tis nice!
No trouble at all with needle or thread
'Tis all fixed and a rranged in a trice.
And who could consider this work?
The pleasure and delight, O'tis real,
As needle and thread runs swiftly along
By slight pressure of toe and heel.

Oh ye men with your sisters dear,
Oh ye men with mothers and wives,
Are they stitching along in the old way
Wearing out both beauty and lives?
Then listen now to a friend who speaks
And call and examine this new machine
At Totten's Hat Store on Main street.
A full assortment may be seen.

Waterloo Items.

One of the busiest weeks know in the history of Waterloo has just closed.— The fair "came and is gone."

Although Tuesday, the first day of the fair, was very rainy, yet a fair number of people were on the ground and a reasonable number of entries made.

The second day was occupied chiefly in finishing up entries and the arrangement of articles for exhibition.

The third day came and with it came fine weather and a tremendous concourse of people. Nearly 5000 tickets were sold on that day.

The fourth day was a duplicate of the third. Upon entering the grounds the visitor was at once struck with the scene of activity and life. The ear was greeted with the whistle of engines, the hum of cylinders, the rattle of reapers and other machinery; and last, though not least (in variety) the spouting of the respective exhibitors.

Agricultural Hall presented a scene of astonishment to all. Samples of agricultural productions of monstrous size superior quality filled the hall to its utmost capacity. It would be vain to attempt a minute description of articles on exhibition. We noticed, however, beets two feet long and five inches in diameter, others nine inches in diameter, though not as long. Raddishes 20 inches in length and seven in diameter Carrots twenty inches long and four in diameter. Cabbage forty-five inches in circumference. Pumpkins two feet long weighing over seventy pounds.— Onions four inches in diameter. Rutta Baga Turnips one foot in diameter. Potatoes were exhibited in great profusion of magnificent size and of the finest quality.

Floral Hall was but moderately filled although many fine articles were shown There were some splendid organs exhibited by Casebeer & Long, of Auburn, which contributed to the noise making element generally prevailing. The clarion voice of one deluded, or delighted, —the reader can have a choice of terms —genius was heard day after day, almost continually. He put in his time faithfully singing his tune, which he sang over and over so often that he has probably got it learned to perfection.— Indeed he sang beautifully—figuratively speaking.

The live stock department was one of rare interest. A finer lot of cattle, sheep and hogs it has never been our privilege to see.

The racing, we suppose, was good.— Indeed the writer hereof takes so little interest in that direction that we did not give them sufficient notice to form much of an opinion. There was probably some financial benefit to the association attending them; but we have serious doubts as to any moral good resulting from them.

Taken all in all the fair was a success During the few years of the existence of the association it has enjoyed a degree of success and prosperity not generally realized by agricultural societies. It embraces among its managers a large number of the best financiers and business men in Northern Indiana, to which fact its success is largely due. It is [illegible] to be hoped that its prosperity [illegible] the spirit and enterprise of its managers.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1875.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

LEE & SHEPARD, the book-publishing firm of Boston and New York, who recently suspended, have offered to pay their creditors twenty cents on the dollar and call it square....Shephard, Hall & Co., extensive lumber dealers of Boston, have suspended, with liabilities of $1,500,000. ....New York religionists are making preparations for a revival on a grand scale. It is announced that Moody and Sankey, Bliss and Whipple, Mrs. Van Cott and Hammond, Earle, and half a dozen others, have engaged to make a simultaneous descent upon the sink holes of iniquity with which the metropolis is crowded. They will divide into pairs, and begin the work in a half dozen different places.

GEORGE MILLER and William Smith, two of the Jefferson Borden mutineers, have been sentenced to death at Boston....A horrible murder was enacted at Suncook, N. H., last week. Miss Susie Longmade, aged 17, while going from her home to school, was outraged and murdered by some unknown fiend, who completely severed her head from her body.

SOME person set fire to the breaker at Graneber & Kompel's colliery, near Pottsville, Pa., one night last week, and before assistance could arrive the breaker was totally destroyed. Loss, $100,000....The bobbin factory of the Van Riper Manufacturing Company, Paskack, N. J., the largest in the country, was recently burned. Loss, $75,000....The most notable matrimonial event of the season came off at Hartford, Ct., last week, the high contracting parties being Arthur Murray Dodge, of New York, and Miss Josephine Jewell, eldest daughter of the Postmaster-General. GEORGE J. ALLEN, of Fall River, Mass., has been sentenced to four years in the Penitentiary for eloping with a girl and making a false affidavit as to her age....John Gorham, President of the Gorham Silver Manufacturing Company, of New York, has failed. Speculation in real estate did it. His embarrassment does not affect the credit of the company.

THE WEST.

THE Bank of California has resumed business, with $3,000,000 of coin in its vaults.

THE Commission sent out to the Red Cloud Agency to negotiate with the Sioux Indians for the purchase or lease of the Black Hills Country has returned home, their efforts to bring about a treaty having proved abortive. They are represented as being greatly rejoiced at getting out of the Indian country, where their position was anything but pleasant. The imperious and sometimes hostile attitude of the savages inspired them with the greatest fears for their own safety, and it is safe to say that but few of them slept securely during their month's stay at the council grounds....President Grant and party arrived at Salt Lake, Utah, Oct. 3. A number of the Mormon Council and others met the party at Echo and were introduced to the President. Just as the train was starting Brigham Young stepped into the President's coach and was introduced by Congressional Delegate Cannon. A little deaf, Brigham did not at first catch the name, and touched his hat and shook hands with the President coldly. He then began to get the fact that he was addressing the President into his head, while Grant was standing with his hat off. He then removed his hat and said, "Oh, this is President Grant. You are the first President of my country I have ever seen." The meeting was very cordial. Then Brigham was conducted into the ladies' car by Gen. Babcock and introduced to the ladies, Mrs. U. S. Grant and others.

SNOW in Dakota and Northern Minnesota on the 4th of October. Winter is coming....The new Bank of Nevada, which is intended to be a rival of the Bank of California, has commenced business in San Francisco.

A HORRIBLE triple tragedy was enacted a few days since at Carlinville, Ill. A young man named Charles Brink murdered his mother-in-law, Mrs. Oliver W. Hall, and his wife, and then committed suicide. Brink had been married several months, and was of rather a quarrelsome disposition. Last week his wife was sick, and he failed to give her that attention which she needed. Her mother induced her to return home, where she could have care and attention. This seemed to have so incensed Brink as to render him insane. Two or three days after his wife had left his home he borrowed a pistol and repaired to his mother-in-law's house. What took place there will never be known, as all the parties are dead. The first that was known of any difficulty was the two women running into the street and screaming, and Brink after them. They fled to a neighboring house, where he overtook them and committed the triple murder. He first shot his mother-in-law, who ran a short distance and fell dead. He then shot his wife, killing her instantly. Then he put the revolver to his own head and blew out his brains....Thousands of horses in Cincinnati are sick with the epizootic.

A PARTY of Black Hillers, who were arrested some time ago by United States cavalry, while en route to the gold fields, have just been released at Yankton, and it is announced that they will proceed against the government for false imprisonment....The American Board of Foreign Missions held its annual session in Chicago, last week, and was largely attended....Many horses in Chicago and elsewhere throughout the West are afflicted with the epizootic. The disease seems to be spreading all over the country, but happily is not so fatal as it was three years ago.

PRESIDENT GRANT, on his recent visit to Denver, presented ex-Gov. Hunt with a $5,000 stallion for his stud farm near that place.... The hog cholera is playing sad havoc in some parts of Ohio. In Franklin county alone it is estimated that over 6,000 have died.

THE SOUTH.

AN old negro man, 111 years of age, was burned to death at Little Rock, Ark., the other day, by the burning of his house.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., was in mourning on the 2d inst., for Andrew Johnson. A grand memorial service was held, and many distinguished persons from different States were present.

THE Vanderbilt University, at Nashville, Tenn., has been formally dedicated, and is now open for the reception of pupils.

MORE race troubles are reported from Mississippi. The scene of the disturbances is located at Friar's Point, the home of ex-Senator James L. Alcorn. So far as we are able to judge from the meager accounts, the trouble was the outgrowth of a personal and political feud between Alcorn and the negro Sheriff of the county, John Brown. The Associated Press dispatches state that the blacks, to the number of 300, armed and equipped, were marching upon the town, when the whites went out and attacked them, and a running fight was kept up for three or four miles. Several negroes and one white man were wounded. At last accounts both parties were arming and organizing, and it is feared there will be more bloodshed.

SOME weeks ago Joseph Crews, a prominent Republican politician, and an opponent of Gov. Chamberlain, was killed by unknown assassins in South Carolina. Several colored men now come forward with affidavits implicating Gov. Chamberlain and State Treasurer Cardozo in the murder. The friends of the latter repel the charge, and denounce the affiants as perjurers and conspirators....Dr. Sears, the general agent of the Peabody educational fund, reports that the public schools of the South are constantly improving in character and improving in number.

The meeting was largely attended and the proceedings interesting. Some interesting statistics of missionary work were read....A cargo of peaches has been successfully exported from New York to London, where they arrived in good order.

THE air-ship of Schroeder, the Baltimore balloonist, in which he proposes to cross the Atlantic, is nearly completed, and he will shortly start on his voyage. It is constructed of pine, three-eighths of an inch in thickness, and has a gas capacity of 135,000 feet. The ship will have a carrying capacity of nine men. Schroeder calculates to reach Washington, a distance of 35 miles, in 18 or 20 minutes; New York, a distance of 200 miles, in 1 hour and 40 minutes, and to sail from New York to Liverpool, a distance of 3,300 miles, in 40 hours.

The war has been almost suspended for some time, but as soon as the men are raised (80,000 of them) the bloody business will be resumed. The Spanish war-vessel Tornado has chased the Uruguay, which was formerly the Octavia, into Port Royal, Jamaica, where her cargo was embargoed. The Tornado is the steamer which ran down and captured the Virginius about a year and a half ago.

ADVICES from Liverpool report a firmer feeling and marked rise in the price of breadstuffs and provisions. A London dispatch also states that the English hop crop is short, and an advance in price is quoted.

A CABLE dispatch states that war has commenced at Cape Palmas between Liberia and the aborigines. The Liberian government had dispatched troops from Monrovia to the scene of action, and a great battle was daily expected....Owing to the popular outcry, the British admiralty have suspended the circular of July 31, ordering the surrender of fugitive slaves found on board British vessels.

FINANCE AND TRADE.

Weekly Review of the Chicago Market.

FINANCIAL.

There is a fair demand for currency from country banks for moving crops, and a fair local movement. Interest rates quotable at 6@10 per cent., according to time and security. Government bonds firm, and a moderate trade was reported.

BREADSTUFFS.

The grain market attracted a large degree of attention from speculators during the past week, and liberal trading was reported. The markets, however, have been more or less unsettled, and fluctuations were quite frequent and at a rather wide range. Spring wheat was firmer, and the closing quotations show an average advance of about 8c per bu. The corn market was lower for immediate delivery, but the longer futures —November and seller the year—were strong and higher. Cash oats sold up to 38½@40c on Thursday, the market for September being fairly "cornered." Subsequently a decline of 7c was sustained and closed easy. Rye and barley were dull and lower all round.

The following table shows the prices current at the opening and at the close of the past week:

GRANT'S ORATION.

The Longest Speech of his Life.

We print below the full text of the speech delivered, or rather read from manuscript, by President Grant, at the late Army of the Tennessee reunion at Des Moines, Iowa:

COMRADES: It always affords me much gratification to meet my comrades in arms, ten and fourteen years ago, and to tell over again in memory the trials and hardships of those days —hardships endured for the preservation and perpetuation of our free institutions. We believed then, and believe now, that we have a government worth fighting for, and, if need be, dying for. How many of our comrades paid the latter price for our preserved Union! Let their heroism and sacrifice be ever green in our memory. Let not the results of their sacrifice be destroyed. The Union and the free institutions for which they fell should be held more dear for their sacrifices. We will not deny to any of those who fought against us any privileges under the government which we claim for ourselves. On the contrary, we welcome all such who come forward in good faith to help build up the waste places, and to perpetuate our institutions against all enemies, as brothers in full interest with us in a common heritage; but we are not prepared to apologize for the part we took in the war. It is to be hoped that like trials will never again befall our country. In their settlement no class of people can more heartily join than the soldiers who submitted to the dangers, trials, and hardships of the camp and the battle-fields. On whichever side he may have fought, no class of people are more interested in guarding against a recurrence of those days. Let us, then, begin by guarding against every enemy preventing the prosperity of free Republican institutions. I do not bring into this assemblage politics, certainly not partisan politics, but it is a fair subject for the soldiers in their deliberation to consider what may be necessary to secure the prize for which they battled. In a republic like ours, where the citizen is the sovereign, and the official the servant, where no power is exercised by the will of the people, it is important that the sovereign, the people, should foster intelligence, the promotion of that intelligence which is to preserve us as a free nation. If we are to have another contest in the near future of our national existence, I predict that the dividing line will not be Mason and Dixon's, but between patriotism and intelligence on the one side, and superstition, ambition, and ignorance on the other. Now in the centennial year of our national existence, I believe it a good time to begin the work of strengthening the foundation of the structure commenced by our patriotic forefathers 100 years ago at Lexington. Let us all labor to add all needful guarantees for the greater security of free thought, free speech, a free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and of equal rights and privileges to all men, irrespective of nationality, color or religion; encourage free schools, and resolve that not one dollar of our money appropriated to their support shall be appropriated to the support of any sectarian school; resolve that neither the State nor nation, nor both combined, shall support institutions of learning other than those sufficient to afford to every child growing up in the land the opportunity of a good common-school education, unmixed with sectarian, Pagan, or Atheistical bias; leave the matter of religion to the family, the church, and the private school, supported entirely by private contributions; keep the Church and the State forever separate. With these safeguards, I believe the battles which created the Army of the Tennessee will not have been fought in vain.

How an Athlete Trains Himself.

William Miller, the wrestler, who will wrestle in a "match" with a French athlete named Christol in a short time, recently had a conversation with a reporter of the San Francisco Chronicle, of which the following is the substance, the reporter beginning his narrative by describing the "Professor" as a powerfully built man, of more "education and intelligence than most men in his business."

Miller, in the course of training, arises at 6 o'clock every morning. He then walks two or three miles at the rate of five miles an hour, being warmly dressed, "to prevent getting chilled on first encountering the morning air." He is then rubbed down with coarse towels, bathes in fresh cold water for a minute or so, is rubbed down again, and is dressed in dry clothes. After an hour's rest he eats a broiled chop and some stale bread, and drinks two cups of weak tea, with very little sugar and milk. He never uses tobacco. After his breakfast has digested he pounds and bruises his trainer, and his trainer pounds and bruises him. It is not considered essentially that a trainer should be a "match" for his pupil; that is, the pupil does not think so. Miller's trainer has not expressed an opinion. There are thirty or more "holds" in scientific wrestling, and as many "stops" to prevent falls. An hour's rest succeeds the mutual bruising and pounding, and then Mr. Miller eats his dinner, which consists of a piece of rare roast beef or mutton, or steak or chop if preferred (only the middle of the piece, where it is rare and juicy, being eaten), a good mealy potato, a little cabbage or cauliflower, and perhaps some tapioca pudding. He drinks a glass of ale with his dinner. Then Mr. Miller, after two hours' rest, uses Indian clubs and dumb-bells and the springboard, and if he feels exhausted during his exercise drinks a glass of ale or sherry. His supper consists of stale toast, weak tea and soft boiled egg. The evening is given up to rest, light amusement and conversation. He goes to bed at nine o'clock.

IT is said that Flood & O'Brien had $10,000,000 in gold locked up when their great opponent, Ralston, found his bank hopelessly embarrassed.

The Huntington Bank Robbers.

A Lexington (Ky.) correspondent of the Chicago Times says: The excitement is still high through this part of the State over the Huntington, W. Va., bank robbery. The identification of one of the gang as the notorious McDaniels, a Missouri desperado, has been fully verified, and the conclusion accepted by the Louisville detectives, who were certain at first that the dead man was Jessie James. The report which first went abroad, that the robbery had been committed by the James and Youngers, of Missouri, having been thus partially disproven, a great deal of interest is felt as to who the other members of the gang are. The robbery was done exactly like similar affairs which have occurred in Kentucky, Missouri and Iowa, and a little light upon this transaction might settle beyond reasonable doubt the identity of these bold night-riders. There are two or three of the old Quantrell band living near Lexington, one of whom your correspondent met to-day and obtained some interesting information from. My informant says the four men who did the Huntington business are old hands at that kind of work, but little known to the public. They have done their work quietly for years, letting the James and Youngers get the credit for their deeds, and themselves enjoying the gains. The four men who robbed the Huntington bank, this man affirms, were Thomson McDaniels, now dead, Clell Miller, Jack Kean and Calvin Carter. The man now in custody in Fentress county is one of the robbers, and when identified will be found to be either Miller, Kean or Carter. Miller, he says he thinks, is supposed to be one of the men who robbed the bank at Corydon, Iowa. When this bank robbery began, he was arrested in Missouri, taken to Corydon, and had a preliminary trial, which resulted in his release in some way. These four men, Miller, McDaniels, Carter and Kean were under Jim Read, the Texas desperado, and constituted the band who robbed the El Paso stage between Austin and San Antonio in April, 1874. Read was afterward killed by Sheriff Morris, in Texas, but the remaining members of his party were never made known until now. Jack Kean, who is pretty likely to be in the Fentress county prison, was at Muncie along with the McDaniels boys and Clell Miller. These four men were also at the Gad's Hill robbery. They have a score of confederates living along the Texas and Missouri border, and have hitherto found no difficulty in reaching cover after one of their daring exploits. This is the information the ex-guerilla placed your correspondent in possession of, after a strict pledge of secrecy as to the source of the news. He is a respectable farmer here, and does not countenance the deeds of violence of his old companions, but hears at frequent intervals of their doings and whereabouts.

Women's Rights.

The Canton (Ill.) Register reports that that city has two female physicians, a female oculist—all succeeding in their profession—fifteen or twenty girls working in cigar factories, and two female compositors—in the Register office. In two mercantile establishments females constitute nearly the entire clerical force, numbering seven in all; and in another the favorite salesman is a woman. These are all exclusive of the millinery and dressmaking establishments—of which there are three quite extensive ones, and four minor ones—managed by ladies. All the teachers in the public schools, numbering twenty-one, are females, the principal only being a male. One of the shrewdest and most successful of traders and stock men never buys, sells or makes a trade without consulting his wife, and drops it if she says "no" —and it is a known fact that the party alluded to has not lost any money on a trade or on a shipment since he has been married. His wife is one of the best housekeepers and happiest mothers in the county, too. Two of the most successful capitalists in the city are ladies, and look closely after the security before negotiations are completed, and one of them has a better knowledge of mortgaged farms than any lawyer in the vicinity of those farms. Who can say, in view of such statements as this, which can be duplicated in every city in the country, that women, if they do not all have all the rights they want, have at least a great number of privileges.—Peoria Transcript.

Statistics of Mining.

In Great Britain there are 410,000 men employed in the coal mines below ground and 106,000 engaged above ground. The coal mined each year amounts to 128,500,000 tons. On an average 1,000 men are killed every year and 4,000 wounded. In the last half century 50,000 men have been killed in the mines and some 200,000 were wounded.

In the United States 83,000 men are employed in mining and 50,000,000 tons of coal mined yearly. In Pennsylvania the death rate exceeds that of Great Britain. The death rate in Ohio was also greater last year than that of England, but this year it will be less.

The most dangerous mines in the United States are in Schuylkill county, Pennsylvania, one man being killed there for every 35,000 tons mined. One man is killed in England for every 138,000 tons mined, one in Pennsylvania for every 88,000 tons, and one in Ohio for every 133,000 tons. This destruction of human life ought always to be considered when making complaints about dear fuel. No doubt the prices often charged for coal are too dear, but the excess of charges is on the part of those who own the mines, and never on that of those who work them.

Changing a Continent.

They are hard at work in England to transform the Western half of the great African desert of Sahara into an inland sea. It is that portion of it called by geographers El Juff, extending from the southeastern spurs of the Atlas Mountains to Timbuctoo, and covering an area of 300,000 square miles—about seven times the size of the State of New York. All that is required is the deepening of the channel of the river Belta, which will furnish a canal from the mouth to the desert, and let in the waters of the Atlantic upon the arid waste to a depth of from 500 to 750 feet. But there is a [illegible] objection to the plan. The mild climate of Southern Europe is caused by the hot and dry winds that come from Africa over the heated sandy plains of Sahara. If the latter were turned into a lake, the winds would be cool and moist, changing the temperature of Spain and Italy, and making all Europe possibly as frigid as Iceland and Spitzbergen. What then?

A Marvel in Billiards.

Monsieur Adrian Izar, the champion "finger billiard player" of the world, made his first public appearance in New York last night at Albert Garnier's, 1292 Broadway. The billiard parlor was crowded at an early hour, and by the time the exercises began it was impossible to gain admittance.

At 8 o'clock M. Izar and Joe Dion opened a game of caroms, 300 points, and in less than twenty minutes Joe was the worst beaten expert that ever leaned over the cloth of green. Joe played with the cue, but the stranger used his fingers, mainly the thumb, the forefinger, and the middle finger. Joe made 21, and slipped up on a draw shot. Izar made a small break, and was followed by Joe with another. Then the Frenchman gave the spectators the first specimen of his wonderful skill. Up the table and down the table he sent his ball, counting at every stroke, until he had scored about 40; when by coaxing the red and white into the upper right hand corner he ran up a total score of 106, amid tumultuous applause. Dion's next effort was a weak one, as was also Izar's.

Then Joe made a few points, and Izar went on to close the contest. His play from the start was marvellous. He made all kinds of shots with the greatest ease, showing that whatever could be done with the cue he could do without it. Again running the object balls into a corner and keeping them generally about a foot apart, he continued his play, and without changing his position rolled up 165, and might easily have made ten times as many had he not been stopped by the call of game. The 300 points were made in five innings, giving an average of 60.

At the close Mons. Izar gave an exhibition of some of his fancy shots, which should be seen to be appreciated. Simple caroms and short draw-shots, follows, cushion kisses, and round-the-table-shots, requiring the most accurate calculations, were executed without the slightest apparent effort. But his unapproachable skill was best manifested in the execution of shots of a more difficult nature. He would twist his ball from the lower end of the table, take the red in the upper left-hand corner and draw it straight back down to the lower left-hand corner and carom on the white. He would carom from the red in the center of the table, take the cushion at the right, and draw to the white ball in the right hand upper corner. He would chalk figures upon the cloth, and playing on one ball, would make his ball follow the lines of the figure and make the carom upon the other. Having one ball held at one end of the table on the wood work, he threw his ball into the air and brought the two into contact, his own ball running the full length of the rail without even touching the cushion cloth, as could be told at the further end of the room by the sound.—New York Sun.

Performing Dogs.

Dogs at various times have held not an unimportant place in the business of the drama. Fictitious bloodhounds were a prominent feature of "Three-Fingered Jack," and in the "Forest of Bondy," a great play in its day, one of the most important characters was the dog who detected and arrested Macaire, in his gorgeous uniform of green and gold. Dogs have occupied a more important place even than babies, their stage rank being about equal to the penny waves of rural dramatic notoriety, the best kind of thunder and real water. It is seldom, however, that the entire business of a play has depended upon a dog, and yet the first programme of a new drama was recently postponed at the Mirror Theater in London owing to an accident which disabled one of the principal actors. As Rip would say, "He vos a dog." The new play is entitled "The Dogs of St. Bernard," and the performer in question, whose part it probably was to cross the stage with a barrel attached to his neck, sniff amid the downy snow, and rescue one of the heroes, was the most important feature of the play. There was a performer once whose leading roles were the cock in "Hamlet," and the hind legs of the cow in "Tom Thumb." That the canine race, albeit there are slanders to the effect that their close attention to duty might have been influenced by the distant prospect of cold bones, have attained to a higher position upon the boards than their master, man, must prove a source of unutterable joy and satisfaction to Brother Bergh.—Inter-Ocean.

Kerr and the Speakership.

The St. Louis correspondent of the Chicago Tribune telegraphs: "The Hon. Michael C. Kerr, of Indiana, has been putting in some very effective work here during the past two days in the matter of pushing his claims for the Speakership of the next House of Representatives. He has been sojourning recently in Colorado, and made it convenient to stop at St. Louis while en route for home, and there is no doubt of his having succeeded in securing pledges from all the Missouri Congressmen to vote for him for Speaker. Kerr and his friends say that every Democrat from Indiana is pledged to him, and that the majority of Illinois members have also been secured. Among his Congressional brethren of Illinois the friends of Kerr assert that, with the votes he has pledged to him in Missouri, Illinois, Kentucky, Indiana, and other Western States, combined with the big Eastern vote which he is certain to get, his election is already assured."

Curious Cause of Death.

Hydrophobia communicated by a pasteboard dog is the latest medical novelty. Two months ago a mad dog was killed in a house after having bitten at nearly everything in the room. One of the things in which he buried his teeth was a little boy's toy dog made of pasteboard. Subsequently a man used this pasteboard dog to stop the blood from a cut in his hand, and so the virus went into his wound and he died.—New York Herald.

WHAT in the name of the good Lord is Ben Butler going to do now? An Eastern paper announces that a thousand-dollar sword is being manufactured for him by a Massachusetts cutlery company. Are we going to have another war?

ACCORDING to a writer in the Stockholder, a New York publication, that city contains 13,000 acres of land, all but 3,000 of which is mortaged at an average of $160,000 per acre. According to this writer's calculation the whole mortaged debt of New York city amounts to $1,600,000,000, nearly as much as the whole interest-bearing debt of the United States.

ONE of our exchanges remarks, in a deprecatory tone: "Because we happen to take our shot-gun and start out for a Saturday afternoon's gunning, it is no reason why half a dozen impudent persons should inquire if we were on a tour for collecting subscription money. The times are hard, and ammunition costs too much money to be wasted on delinquent subscribers just now."

DES MOINES, Iowa, possesses a youthful literary prodigy in the person of a little girl of eleven years, named Lilian R. Fearing, who is in fragile health and nearly blind. She dictates to her mother literally by the hour such verses as this:

> Oh, the hands that white and trembling,
> Grasping yet life's lingering ray;
> Standing 'neath the crimson banner,
> Waving ever to the day,
> Banners that are ever tossing,
> Where the mighty shadows play.

GOV. GASTON, of Massachusetts, is a decided second-termite. In 1854 he was elected a member of the State Legislature, and was again returned in 1856. In 1861 he became Mayor of Roxbury, and was re-elected at the expiration of his first term. In 1870 he became Mayor of Boston, and was the successful candidate also at the next election. In 1874 he was elected Governor of the State, and is now the Democratic nominee again.

ONE of the remarkable men of the Alabama Constitutional Convention is Col. Bethea. He is a lawyer, but has had only one case in his life. It was his first and last. The case involved a large amount of property, and his fee depended upon his success. He won; his fee was $40,000, and with this he gracefully retired from the bar. A legal career so brief and so brilliant has probably been the lot of no other man since litigation began.

AT Jacksonville, Ill., the other day, a muscular son of Ham relapsed into a comatose state, and, according to all outward signs, had shuffled off his mortal coil. The undertaker who came to measure the body was frightened out of a year's growth on being seized by the supposed corpse, who held him with a muscular grasp, saying: "Look heah, boss, better quit your foolin' 'round dis chile, or somebody 'll get hurt. I'se not gone yet, sah!"

MR. SLUSHER, the largest man ever born in Tennessee, died recently at Greenville, in that State. He was but nineteen years of age, and had he not been bent by an attack of rheumatism, would have been nine feet high. His boot was 18 inches long, and one of his hands was about the size of four ordinary ones. He could sit on a chair and pick up anything three feet from him. His head measured about 14 inches, and his chest 7½ feet in circumference. His coffin was 8½ feet long, 28 inches wide and 2½ feet deep.

THE report of the Grand Master of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows to the Grand Lodge, recently in session at Indianapolis, shows the order to be in a flourishing condition, and growing rapidly, especially abroad, lodges being continually organized in the German empire, while Switzerland has grown to the dignity of a grand lodge. In Peru, Chili, the Sandwich Islands and Australia good progress has also been made, and a start has been made in Great Britain. The number of grand encampments and lodges in this country is 84; subordinate lodges, 5,987; subordinate encampments, 1,630; lodge members, 438,701; encampment members, 83,445.

A WESTERN correspondent relates how beef is issued to the Indians at the Red Cloud Agency. The cattle, after being overweighed, are turned out of the pens by twos, threes, or fours, according to the numbers to which each sub-chief is entitled, the Indian children having meantime been shooting them full of arrows. When they are turned loose, the Indians ride them down and dispatch them with innumerable arrows, pistol bullets and rifle balls. The squaws skin and cut up the carcasses, and the Indians sell the hides to the traders at $3 each. Sometimes the meat is taken home, but as a general thing the carcasses are left upon the prairie where the animal was shot down, and a great deal of valuable food is allowed to go to waste, for the reason that the Indians draw more rations than they can eat. In consequence of being thus generously fed by the government these Indians have given up he hunt almost entirely.

MR. HORACE WHITE, late editor-in-chief of the Chicago Tribune, who is now sojourning temporarily in London, is writing a series of articles for the Fortnightly Magazine, entitled "An American's Impressions of England." In one of his papers, describing what John Bull drinks, Mr. White says: "Excessive moisture and a cold climate are more convenient than philosophical as reasons to explain why the Englishman is addicted to sherry, brandy and stout, while the Frenchman, German and Italian are content with sweetened water, light wines and thin beer. In America it is thought that drinking seems to be rather perfunctionary than enjoyable—rather in the way of boisterous politeness and good-fellowship than as a means of assuaging thirst. With an Englishman, drinking seems to be a matter of 'true inwardness.' He drinks because he likes the liquor and its effects. If a man must burn his stomach with alcohol, it seems more reasonable that he should do so because he likes it than because he doesn't."

MR. CHARLES H. HAM, one of the editors of the Chicago Inter-Ocean, has been removed from the office of Appraiser of Chicago. It is hard to have to give up a good fat office, the principal duties of which consist in drawing the salary. It is harder still to be made the butt of innumerable jokes, as Mr. Ham has been. About every editor and reporter in the West has took his turn at perpetrating a joke or a pun at the expense of the unlucky Ham, his name furnishing the handle for most of them. One calls him a "cured Ham," another a "dried Ham," another a "pickled Ham," and so on and so forth. The Chicago Tribune bard poetizes in this cruel strain on the fruitful theme of Editor Ham's decapitation:

> Mysterious Presidential ways are;
> For Ham's no longer our Appraiser;
> Ended his official days are;
> Grant carved him with a razor.
>
> It isn't right, we are assured,
> To carve a Ham before he's cured.
> Gone to meet Phil. Wadsworth.

The bill was then easily drawn out. The total amount thus far discovered to have been taken by him at various times foots up $220.

Battle Between Hogs and Crickets.

A resident of Paradise Valley, Nevada, furnishes the Reno State Journal with the following account of the manner in which the farmers in the upper end of the valley recently conquered a pest of crickets: "When the advance guard of crickets made their appearance, all the hogs within convenient distance were driven to the front. Some four hundred hogs were thus marshaled in battle array, and bravely did they meet the enemy. For an hour the pigs fought nobly, each of them devouring crickets at the rate of twenty or more a minute. They then withdrew to water, and after wallowing a short time, renewed the combat voluntarily. In a few days not a vestige of the invading army was to be seen, and the condition of the hogs improved materially. It is thought the hogs destroyed on an average one thousand crickets a day each, and within easy distance of the water a few hundred of them are capable of killing any number of crickets as fast as they advance."

THE death is announced at Vernon, in France, of the inventor of the apparatus commonly known as the siphon, by which aerated waters are so easily used. He had acquired a large fortune.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Around the Farm.

BE sure to test any new variety of seed, on a small scale, before you venture a full crop.

THERE are thirty-eight agricultural colleges in the United States, 389 teachers, and 3,917 students.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Country Gentleman says he has been experimenting with Berkshire swine, having kept them with Suffolks, Yorkshires, and Chester whites, and he is thoroughly convinced that he can make more and better pork and hams with them than with any of the others on the same food.

BLEACHED BARLEY.—Some of the Western barley, discolored by rains, has been bleached by chemical process, giving it a fine appearance, but making it unfit for brewers' use. Farmers should be cautious against using this bleached barley for seed, as the chemical bleaching may very probably have impaired if not destroyed the vitality of the germ.—Rural New Yorker.

ALL farm machinery should receive two good coats of paint whenever it has been sufficiently exposed to cause the paint to scale off and lose its glossy appearance. A few quarts of the prepared article is economical, and will go a long way in protecting machinery during the exposed period; and there is no doubt that when unprotected by paint when in use and by shelter when not in use more injury is done than by ordinary wear.

ARTICHOKES.—A correspondent of the Country Gentleman recommends growing artichokes. He grew fifty-six bushels last year from one-thirteenth of an acre, and expects to do much better this year. He adds that the same piece of land is in artichokes this year that bore them last, which remark to those familiar with the artichoke seems rather superfluous. It would be more in point if he would tell us when he grows anything else on that small piece of ground.—Rural New Yorker.

GET RID OF THE OLD FOWLS.—There is no profit in keeping fowls until they die of old age or disease. It is better every way to make at least an annual clearing off of old and undesirable stock. They may not bring a very high price in market, but selling them will stop the consumption of food needed by more useful fowls, and, in many cases give much needed room in the yards or sleeping places. Many farmers are very careless with their poultry, considering them at best, as a necessary nuisance. We have seen considerable flocks on farms in which the number of cocks was one-fourth of the whole, and where the only selection made in reducing the number was by killing the largest and finest looking of each year's fowls.

ASSORTING FRUIT.—The true way to make fruit of any sort last a long time is to cut out all the windfall, the worm-ripe and defective specimens and use these first. We take boughs and other early apples into the cellar, spread the fruit out over paper on the cellar bottom, keeping all the sounder apples by themselves. Then the fruit is picked over every week. Every apple is handled with as much carefulness as one would handle eggs. By this means we have fruit a long time after our neighbors' fruit is gone. The slightest bruise will cause the fruit to decay. If placed in a cool, airy room they will keep at least a week after being gathered. Pears should not be allowed to ripen fully on the trees, as in such cases the flavor is never so good as it is when the fruit is gathered early and ripened in the fruit room. Some varieties are now ripe enough to gather; but where there is a good supply of any of them their season may be prolonged by gathering them at intervals of a few days, as they then come in for use successionally. Many kinds of plums are now ripening fast, and those for preserving should be gathered as soon as they are ripe, in order to prevent unnecessary exhaustion of the trees. Any that are to be kept for dessert will have to be protected from both wasps and birds.

About the House.

SAVE your suds for the garden and plants, or to harden yards when sandy.

A WASH composed of a teaspoonful of powdered borax to a pint of rain water is excellent for removing dandruff from the hair.

TO CLEAN lime out of teapots boil in the kettle Irish potatoes with the skins on. This softens the lime which is easily washed out.

DELICIOUS ROLLS.—Half a teacup of butter, mixed well with one pound of flour, half teacup of yeast, a little salt, and enough milk to make a good dough. Let it stand in a warm place for about two hours to rise. Then make into rolls and bake in an oven.

LOIN OF VEAL.—This is best larded. Have every joint thoroughly cut, and between each lay a slice of salt pork; roast a fine brown, and so that the upper sides of the pork will be crisp; baste often. Season with pepper; the pork will make it sufficiently salt.

BIRD'S-NEST PUDDING.—Pare and core six rich, tart apples. Set them in a pudding dish, filling the cavity of each with blanched raisins, two blanched almonds, and a teaspoonful of sugar. Then pour over it tapioca, prepared by soaking for three hours, one cup in two cups of boiling water, and two cups of stewed apples, sweetened. Bake until the apples are tender.

BEFORE commencing to sweep a room, take out all the chairs and light pieces of furniture, and cover up those which cannot be easily removed. Draw back the window-curtains and pin them up as high as you can reach, opening the windows from six to eight inches, both top and bottom, and then close the doors. Hang cotton cloths, kept for the purpose, over the pictures and mirrors. Now the room is prepared for sweeping, and damp tea leaves should be sprinkled all over the carpet, especially in the corners; if they are not to be had, bits of brown paper, wet with water, can be substituted. But one or the other should be employed to keep down the dust. Sweep all carpets the way of the pile, i. e., according as their breadths are sewed, and not across them. If the fireplace is in use all the ashes should be removed from the grate before the carpet is swept, and, while the dust settles, the grate and hearth can be cleaned. Then fasten a soft cloth over a long-handled hair broom, and sweep the cornices and curtain fixtures. Before returning the chairs and small articles to the room dust them thoroughly with a painter's brush. Carved wood-work can be cleaned with a short hair furniture brush, and china ornaments with a soft cloth, but a feather duster is the best adapted to cleaning raised china and gilded work. Piano keys can be dusted with a piece of old soft silk, kept for the purpose

Frightful Plague in Fiji.

Further information from Fiji conveys still darker accounts of the plague which has recently passed over the new colony. A resident of long standing, writing to a Victorian contemporary, says: "The death-rate is not yet made up, but the probability is that 40,000 Fijians died during the four months' plague. The native population of Fiji is now about one-third only of what it was when I landed here twenty-five years ago." The accounts given of the magnitude of the disaster are less harrowing than those of the sufferings of the victims. "Very few died of the measles, the majority dying of subsequent disease in the form of dysentery, congestion of the lungs, etc. Want of nourishment or starvation carried off thousands." We are told that "all work was suspended for two months. You could pass through whole towns without meeting any one in the streets, which were soon completely covered with grass. Entering a house you would find men, women and children, all lying down indiscriminately, some just attacked, some still in agony, and others dying. Some who were strong enough attempted suicide, and not always unsuccessfully." We are further told that "as the scourge became more permanent four or five were buried together in one grave, and generally without religious service. In some cases the dead were buried under the earthen floors of the houses, in others just outside the house. The burials were hurried, and the probability is that some were buried alive. In many instances the husband, wife and children, all died. In one village all the women died, and in another all the men." It is interesting to read of the different mental effects produced by the torture of disease. It is not surprising to find that "some made fruitless appeals to their ancient god. Some inland tribes, who had only recently embraced Christianity, considered that the disease was conveyed by their religious teachers, and they dismissed them and then abandoned their new religion. Among these some were for killing the teacher's wife and child, whose husband and father had died of the plague, to stop infection." But while some in their distress fell back on their former superstitions, the greater number are said to have borne their calamity with fortitude, and to have suffered and died under the influence of Christianity.—Sidney (Australia) Herald.

A Strange Case.

A few years ago there was a pupil at the Institution for the Education of the Blind, who was totally, and it was supposed, irrecoverably blind. She had been blind from infancy, we believe. Her mind was active—quick to grasp and annalyze such subjects as were presented in her various studies; all her faculties were keen, with the exception of the one great affliction—sightless eyes.

She left the institution in due time, her mind well developed by the course of instruction received within its walls, and returned to her home, somewhere in this State, but to us unknown—her parents being well-to-do and respectable people. But now comes the strangest part of this account.

On Thursday this young lady, for she is now about twenty years of age, returned to the city—not as a blind girl, but to enter, as a pupil, the State Institution for Deaf and Dumb. She has lost her sense of hearing and also of speech, but has gained partially the sense of seeing. This wonderful transposition has not been the growth of years, but nature has effected it within a comparatively brief period. Here is certainly a strange case, and challenges the investigation of medical and scientific men. Dr. Gillett, Superintendent of the Institution for Deaf and Dumb, is watching the case with great interest, but gives no expression of opinion, as it was so recently brought under his notice. We hope to publish his diagnosis of the case, or at least his opinions concerning it, in due time.

The sense of sight, we all know, acts strangely in individual cases. There lives in this city a person who can see well enough in daylight, but as evening approaches her sight grows rapidly dim, until by night it is lost entirely. It is said that there is a boy living in Quincy who cannot see at all in the daytime, is blind in fact, but as daylight fades into night, his vision becomes perfect, and he can see plainly in the dark where other persons with good eyes cannot see at all.—Jacksonville (Ill.) Journal.

A BEWITCHED BOY.

Wonderful Performances of Henry Oscar Diener—Facts that Rival Arabian Acrobats—Superstition in Pennsylvania.

[Pottstown Cor. Reading Eagle.]

You have, no doubt, ere this, heard about the bewitched Diener boy at Boyertown. The story is the event of the season, and nothing else is talked about in this region. For the purpose of getting the facts in the case, we yesterday visited Boyertown and interviewed the lad and his parents. The lad said he was nearly 10 years old, and that his name was Henry Oscar Diener. He is of stout build, regular features, rosy cheeks, clear, intelligent blue eyes, and prominent forehead.

He converses with ease, and appeared to have had some little education. His general appearance indicated health, and no matter what produces the "spells" with which he is afflicted, no bodily ailment was noticeable. Here is what his father, Adam Diener, and his mother, who formerly resided in Reading, had to say about the remarkable affair:

Last March one year ago he had the first spell, and, with the exception of several months last spring, he had one, and sometimes two, every day. While the fit is on his eyes become glassy, face contorted, hands cold and skin of a livid hue. He will spring over chairs, sit on their backs squirrel fashion, suspend himself by his hands to nails in the wall, jump out and in windows, and perform a feat which the most expert show-actor would not dare to undertake, that is, of walking around the room on the surbase, the width of which is not over one inch. He at times becomes furious, and the family are obliged to keep their distance. He scratches and bites but does not raise an arm to strike. He passes around the floor on all-fours, like a dog or any other four-footed animal. He imitates to perfection the mewing of a cat, the barking of a dog, the chirping of a bird, the neighing of a horse, and the bleating of a lamb. While the spell is on he frequently breaks crockeryware and upsets the furniture, but was never known to sustain any injury to his person therefrom. The fit, or whatever it may be termed, usually lasts about half an hour, and when it leaves him he awakes as though from a dream, seemingly much refreshed. He can tell all that took place while in that state with a clearness and minuteness most remarkable. Now the family really believe that the boy is bewitched, and base their arguments on the following incidents connected with the affair: The first day he had a spell it was brought about, they say, through his falling out with an old woman of 70, residing with her daughter in Engleville, about one mile distant. This woman is said to be a sort of sorceress, and from some cause not explained she took a deep dislike to the boy. He passed her house daily on his way to school, and upon one occasion, when he refused to accept a piece of bread from her hands, she went over a long rigmarole of incantations, and remarked that the devil would take possession of his body for a certain time every day of his life. Last April the old hag visited Chester county, and remained away until about two weeks ago. Most remarkable to state, the boy had no spells while she was gone, but on the very day of her return they returned also. The woman on that day was seen by the neighbors in front of the boy's residence making peculiar motions with her arms, and drawing circles in the sand. Last Thursday week Mr. Diener took his son to Reading to a witch-doctor, on Neversink street, who now has his case in hand. No medicine was prescribed, the modus operandi of the treatment being purely of the black art kind, and the family are forbidden to divulge the nature of the cabalistic signs and incantations they are obliged to perform.

Hundreds visit the boy daily, and the story we have related here is the one repeated by the party to all those who call.

Had Been Around.

At the City Hall market yesterday while a lady was purchasing a whitefish a man about fifty years old, and a stranger to her, approached and remarked:

"Missus, I have traveled over Europe, Asia, Africa and the Holy Land. I have viewed the pyramids, sailed on the Nile, and fished in the Tiber. Permit me to offer you a word of advice: Don't cook that fish with the scales on."

"I didn't mean to, sir," she indignantly replied.

"Very well, Missus, I have crossed the Atlantic fourteen times; ascended the Andes; sailed up the Missouri and down the Mississippi, and tramped across the Great Sahara Desert. Let me say one word more: Cut the head off before you cook it!"

"Do you think I'm a heathen?" she retorted. "I guess I know how to cook a fish!"

"You may, madam—you may. I have soldiered for Queen Victoria, fought for Uncle Sam, drawn a pension, kept a postoffice, learned to fiddle, and was never sued in my life. I beg your pardon, madam, but let me advise you not to eat the bones of that fish. Some folks eat bones and all, but they sooner or later come to some disreputable end!"

"I'll thank you to mind your own business!" she said, as she picked up the fish.

"I have traveled over the smooth prairies," he replied, with the greatest politeness, "climbed the Rocky Mountains, killed Indians, fought grizzlies, suffered and starved and perished, and I leave you with the kindest and most earnest wishes for your future welfare. Also, cut off the tail before cooking!"

And he went away.—Detroit Free Press.

THIS good little boy was sitting on the front steps whittling up his sister's embroidery frames and muttering to himself, "This ain't no good world to live in unless a feller is his father's and mother's only orphan boy. What makes me git so mad is to have my sister go and take all my ripe peaches to give to that big loafer of a sweetheart of hers that comes round here seven nights in a week to git a square meal, and makes out as if he wanted to talk politics with the old man. I wish they'd marry and go to Texas, I do!" And then he threw the remnants of the frames in the street and seemed lighter hearted.

DURING the past year, 145 new streets were opened in London, and 7,708 new houses built.

JOHN L. DAVIS,

Mr Warner Tries it.

From the Detroit Free Press

Mr Warner, a respectable and law-abiding citizen, of Baker street, rode home in an express wagon the other day having a hand fire extinguisher and the driver for company.

"What's that thing" asked his wife in contemptuous tones as she opened the hall door.

"What's that? Why that's a fire extinguisher—best thing you ever saw—meant to have one a year ago."

"Jacob, you are always making a fool of yourself. Every patent right man gets around you as a cat lays for a mouse.

"Does eh? If you know anything at all you'd know that every store and office in Detroit has one o' these. They've saved lots of building and may save ours."

"You throw it at the fire, don't you?"

He carried it up stairs into a closet without replying, and she followed on and asked:

"Don't it shoot a fire out?"

"If you don't know anything, I'll learn you something! It is full of chemicals; you strike on this knob on top and she's all ready to open this faucet and play on the fire."

She grinned as she walked around it, and finally asked:

"Do you get a horse to draw it around?"

"No, I don't get a horse to draw it around. You see these straps? Well, I back up, put my arms through them, and here it is on my back."

"I see it is."

"And can't I run to any part of the house with it?" he demanded. "See—see——?"

And he cantered along the hall, into the bed-rooms and out, and was turning the head of the stairs when his foot caught in the carpet. He threw up his arms and she grabbed at him, and both rolled down stairs. He yelled and she yelled. Sometimes he was ahead and then she took the lead, and neither of them had passed under the "string" when the extinguisher bumping and jamming, began to shoot off its charge of chemicals.

"You old——" she started to say, when a stream from the nose struck her between the eyes, and she didn't finish.

"What in—o-u-c-h!" roared Mr. Warner, as he got a dose in the ear.

They brought up in a heap at the bottom of the stairs, the stream playing into the parlor, against the hall door, and up stairs by turns, and she gasped:

"I'll have you sent to a fool asylum."

"Who's a fool?" he roared, dancing around with his eyes full of chemicals.

"I'm fainting!" she squeaked.

"And I've broken my back!" he shouted.

It was a sad house when those two highly respectable old people got so that they could use there eyes and discuss matters calmly. And she doubled up her fist and hoarsely said:

"Take that investigator, or extinguisher, or whatever you call it, back down town, and tell everybody that you are a lunatic."

And he said:

"Dummit, I know more than all your family put together."

No More Assessments

It was down in Georgie. There were three of them sitting lazily upon the platform, looking like cast-iron tobacco signs,

"Dere's goin' to be another 'publikin paper here purty soon, de folks say," said one.

"An' all we niggers got to subscribe, kase de 'lection is coming right into hand," said another.

"'Scribe nothin!" said the third one as he loosened up his cotton suspenders, "I'm done wid dis 'publican business, I is. Didn't I hear de preacher readin' in de Bible 'bout de 'publkins? Why, when de Lord himself was on de yearth dey used to sit in de high places at the front gates of de town, an' take up taxes an, 'sessments from de folks. An' now dese 'publikins a' don' de same ting, don't yer see? Now, dey don't git no more 'sessments outen dis nigger fur no 'lections, 'scribins an' nothin!"

"Here sonny, hold my horse a minute." And the pious old gentleman went into Walker, Rauch & Co.'s to buy some boots and shoes, leaving his venerable steed in the care of the little boot-black. In half an hour he relieved the boy, saying:

"You will receive your reward 'beyond the river.'"

"See here, old skinflint, when I walk over the river for a bogus nickel you'll be grayer nor a Norway rat."

The frugal-minded old gentleman is more than ever determined to raise his boys in the country.

AN IRISH FABLE.

"The Bad Son and the Good Son."

"An' it was once long ago, in the old country," says Mrs. Biddy, "there was a livin' a fine, clean, honest, poor widdy woman and she havin' two sons, an' she fetched the both of them up fine and careful, but one of them turned out bad intirely. An' one day says she to him, says she:

"I've given you your livin' as long as iver I can, and it's you must go out into the wide worruld to sake your fortune.'

"Mother, I will," says he.

"An' will ye take a big cake wid me curse, or a little cake an' me blessing?" says she.

"The big cake, sure."

"So she baked a big cake and cursed him, and he wint away laughin'. By and by he came forninst a spring in the woods and sat down to ate his dinner off the cake, and a small, little bird sat on the edge of the spring."

"Give me a bit of that cake for me little ones in the nest,' says she: and he caught up a stone and threw a her.

"I've scarce enough for myself,' says he; and she bein' a fairy put her bake in the spring and toorned it black as ink, and went away up in the trees. And while he looked for her to kill her, a fox went away with his cake.

"So he wint away from that place very mad, and next day he stopped, very hungry, at a farmer's house and hired out to tind the cows.

"Be wise,' says the farmer's wife, 'for the next field is belongin' to a giant, and if the cows gets in his clover he will kill you as dead as a sthone.'

"But the bad son laughed and wint away out to watch the cows, and before noontime he wint to slape up in a tree, and the cows all wint in the clover and out of the tree and killed him dead, and that was the end of the bad son.

"And by the next year the poor widdy woman, she says to the good son.

"Ye must go out into the wild worruld and sake your fortune, for I can kape you no longer,'

"Mother, I will."

"An' will you take a big cake wid me curse, or a little cake wid me blessing?"

"The little cake."

So she baked it for him and gave him her blessing, and he wint away, an' she a-weepin' after him foine and loud. An' by and by he came to the same spring in the woods where the bad son was before him, and the small, little bird sat again on the side of it.

"Give me a bit of yer cakeen for me little ones in the nest,' says she.

"I will,' says he, an' he broke off a foine piece, and she dipped her bake in the spring and toorned it into sweet wine and when he bit his cake, shure an' she had toorned it into fine plum cake intirely, an' he ate and drank and wint on light-hearted. And next he come to the farmer's house.

"Will yer tind cows for me?" says the farmer.

"I will,' says the good son.

"Be wise,' says the farmer's wife, 'for the clover field beyant is belongin' to the giant, and if you lave in the cows he will kill you dead.'

"Never fear!" says the good son; 'I don't slape at me worruck'

"And he goes out into the field and lugs a big stone up in a tree, and thin sinds ivery cow far out in the clover fields, and goes back ag'in to the tree. And out comes the giant a roarin' so that you could hear the roars of him a mile away; and when he finds the cow boy, he goes under the tree to shake him down, but the good little son slips out the big stone, and it fell down and broke the giant's head intirely. So the good son went running away to the giant's house, and it being full to the eaves of gold and silver and splendid things!

See, waht fine luck comes to folks that is good and honest. And he went home and fectched his old mother, and they lived rich and contented, and died very old and rispicted."—Sarah, St. Nicholas.

A Twisted Cow.

From the Sioux City, (Iowa) Journal,

Mr. Hardy, of Portlandville, who was in the quartermaster's department at Sioux City in 1862, tells a story of wonderful endurance of a cow belonging to Mr. Hagy. The cow had been missing for eight days when found at the bottom of a well forty feet deep. When discovered she was standing on her feet, with head bent around to her rump, and evidently had been in that position for eight days, without food or water. The funny part of the story is that when drawn out she continued for several days to walk in a circle and could not be made to walk in a straight line, and it was only by letting her move off in a constantly enlarging circle, until it took in the farm-yard of the owner, that she could be driven to her home from the place where she became so set in her way.

A CLOSE CALL.

A Diver's Adventure with a Shark.

San Francisco Ledger.

"On Deck" had led an eventful life. A sailor in youth, a diver in manhood, and "ne'er do well" in old age, he saw more than falls to the lot of most men. He came to California in early times, and was the hero of a shark story, remarkable as the only one having truth for foundation, native to our harbor born. In 1851, James Carton, a stevedore, while warping the ship Genesee to a berth off Market street wharf, lost an anchor. "On Deck" was the only diver except Bill Matthews then known in the city, and was sent for to recover the anchor.

"On Deck" complied, and while so engaged noticed a shark hovering a few feet above him, evidently odserving his movements. The fish was at least eighteen feet long, and was known as the "bottle nose," one of the most voracious of the shark kind. The discovery naturally alarmed the diver. He found the anchor, made the cable fast to it, and was about assending when the appearance of the shark made him pause.

He had heard that sharks did not molest men in armor. He doubted this, and did not feel now like risking the experiment. He moved a few paces from the anchor—the shark moved too. He returned to his former place—the shark followed. He was evidently, to use his own words, "spotted by the bottlenose for a supper," and unless signally favored, would fall a victim to its voracity. He hardly knew how to act, when he thought of the cuttle fish—how that singular creature often excapes its enemies by darkening the waters with an inky liquor ejected from ity body.

He accordingly stirred up the mud at the bottom till the water was darkened around him, cast off his weights and signalled to the man to hall him up. He was hauled up immediately, but did not entirely escape. The shark snapped at him as he ascended, and three of his toes were taken off. A little more and his foot would have gone, a stout boot only saving it. The happy idea of of muddying the water saved his life.

Facts Worth Remembering

It is worth while for all farmers everywhere, to remember that thorough-culture is better than three mortgages on their farm.

That an offensive war against weeds is five times less expensive than a defensive one.

That good fences always pay better than lawsuits with neighbors.

That hay is a good deal cheaper made in the summer than bought in the winter.

That more stock perish from famine than founder.

That a horse who lays his ears back and looks lightening when any one approaches him is vicious. Don't buy him.

That scrimping the feed of fatting hog is wast of grain.

That over-fed fowls won't lay eggs.

That educating children propesly is money lent at 100 per cent.

That one evening spent at home in study is more profitable than ten lounging about country taverns.

That cows should always be milked regularly and clean.

That it is the duty of every man to take a good, reliable, entertaining paper, and pay for in promptly, of course.

Edward H. Webster, of Kansas City is now even with his mother-in-law. She decoyed her daughter away from him, and started the report that he had seduced the daughter of a prominent merchant in town. The story was not true; and to prove it, young Webster obtained a divorce from his wife and his mother-in-law, and has since married the girl whom he was charged with having seduced.

A WEE PHILOSOPHER.

As down the path, one Sabbath morn,
I walked at rapid rate,
There stepped beside me hurriedly,
Lest she, too, should be late,
From tip to toe as sweet a maid
As careful mother ere arrayed
For [illegible] Sunday morning.

A little space she trotted on Demurely at my side—
A proper maid for Sabbath morn—
When suddenly she spied
A luscious tempter in her path;
I heard a jolly crow and laugh:
"Just ripe for Sunday morning!"

A clump of whortleberries, green,
Save just a few in sight,
Which, [illegible] their neighbors, had Turned black within the night:
These bobbed their heads, as if to say,
"We'll wager that you've come this way
To pick us, Sunday morning!"

Too tempting was the prospect for
So wee a maid to slight;
Quick plunged she into the [illegible], then rose
Uproarious with delight—
So merry that she heeded not,
So happy that she quite forgot
That it was Sunday morning.

A-sudden paused she, and her voice
Took quite a sober trill;
A penitent in word, at least,
She softly spoke—though still
She clutched the berry-branches tight—
"I don't suppose it was just right
To pick them Sunday morning!"

So very loth was she to yield
The luscious prize at stake,
This little maid was tempted sore
A compromise to make;
And curious, silent listener, I
Next moment heard th' exultant cry:
"I'll eat them Monday morning!"

"Perhaps that won't so wicked be"—
And carefully she stowed
Her booty in a hiding-place,
Then hurried down the road,
From tip to toe as sweet a maid
As ruthless tempter e'er waylaid
Bound church-ward, Sunday morning.

That she could keep her compromise
I doubted very much;
Yet, truly, never all that day
Did she the berries touch.
But, bright and early, once again
I saw her tripping down the lane,
To eat them, Monday morning.

THE TWO NEIGHBORS.

One evening as the twilight was dusking into deeper shades, Farmer Welton stood in his dooryard, with a gun in his hands, and saw a dog coming out from his shed. It was not his dog, for his was of a light color, while this was surely black.

The shed alluded to was open in front, with double doors for the passage of carts, and a wicket for pedestrians at the back; and this shed was part of a continuous structure connecting the barn with the house. Around back of this shed was the sheep-fold.

There had been trouble upon Farmer Welton's place. Dogs had been killing his sheep—and some of the very best, at that. He had declared, in his wrath, that he would shoot the first stray dog he found prowling about his premises. On this evening, by chance, he had been carrying his gun from the house to the barn, when the canine intruder appeared. Aye, and in the barn he had been taking the skin from a valuable sheep which had been killed and mangled with tigerish ferocity.

So, when he saw the strange dog coming through his shed, he brought the gun to his shoulder, and, with quick, sure aim, fired. The dog gave a leap and a howl, and having whisked around in a circle, two or three times, he bounded off in a tangent, yelping painfully, and was soon lost to sight.

"Hallo! what's to pay now, Welton?"

"Ah—is that you, Frost?"

"Yes. Ye been shootin' somethin', aint ye?"

"I've shot a dog, I think."

"Ye-e-s. I seed him scootin off. It was Brackett's, I reckon."

Before the farmer could make any further remark, his wife called to him from the porch, and he went in.

Very shortly afterward a boy and a girl came out through the shed, as the dog had came. Down back of Welton's farm, distant half a mile, or so, was a saw and grist mill, with quite a little settlement around it; and people having occasion to go on foot from that section to the farms on the hill could cut off a long distance by crossing Welton's lot. The boy and girl were children of Mr. Brackett. When they reached home they were met by a scene of dire confusion. Old Carlo, the grand old Newfoundland dog—the loving and the loved—the true and the faithful—had come home shot through the head, and was dying. The children threw themselves upon their shaggy mate, and wept and moaned in agony.

Mr. Brackett arrived just as the dog breathed his last. One of the older boys stood by with a lighted lantern—for it had grown quite dark now—and the farmer saw what had happened.

"Who did this?" he asked, groaningly.

"John Welton did it," said Tom Frost, coming up at that moment. "He's been losin' sheep, an' I guess he's got kind o' wrathy."

"But my dog never killed a sheep—never! He's been reared to care for sheep. How came he down there?"

"He went over to the mill with Sis and me," said the younger boy, sobbing as he spoke; "and he was running on ahead of us toward home. I heard a gun just before we got to Mr. Welton's, but oh! I didn't think he could have shot poor Carlo!"

Mr. Brackett was fairly beside himself. To say he was angry would not express it. He had loved that dog—it had been the chief pet of his household for years. He was not a man in the habit of using profane language, but on the present occasion a fierce oath escaped him; and in that frame of mind—literally boiling with hot wrath and indignation—he started for Welton's.

John Welton and Peter Brackett had been neighbors from their earliest days, and they had been friends, too. Between the two families there had been a bond of love and good will, and a spirit of fraternal kindness and regard had marked their intercourse. Both the farmers were hard-working men, with strong feelings and positive characteristics. They belonged to the same religious society, and sympathized in politics. They had had warm discussions, but never yet a direct falling out. Of the two, Welton was the more intellectual, and, perhaps, a little more tinged with pride than was his neighbor. But they were both hearty men, enjoying life for the good it gave them.

Mr. Welton entered his kitchen, and stood the empty gun up behind the door.

"What's the matter, John?" his wife asked, as she saw his troubled face.

"I'm afraid I've done a bad thing?" he replied regretfully. "I fear I have shot Brackett's dog."

"Oh, John!"

"But I didn't know whose dog it was. I saw him coming out from the shed—it was too dark to see more than that it was a dog. I only thought of the sheep I had lost, and I fired."

"I am sorry, John. O, how Mrs. Brackett and the children will feel. They set everything by old Carlo. But you can explain it."

"Yes—I can explain it."

Half an hour later Mr. Welton was going to his barn with a lighted lantern in his hand. He was thinking of the recent unfortunate occurrence, and was sorely worried and perplexed. What would his neighbor say? He hoped there might be no trouble. He was reflecting thus when Mr. Brackett appeared before him, coming up quickly, and stopping with an angry stamp of the foot.

Now there may be a volume of electric influence even in the stamp of a foot, and there was such an influence in the stamp which Brackett gave; and Welton felt it, and braced himself against it. There was, moreover, an atmosphere exhaling from the presence of the irate man at once repellant and aggravating.

"John Welton! you have shot my dog!" The words were hissed forth hotly.

"Yes," said Welton, idly.

"How DARED you do it?"

"I dare shoot any dog that comes prowling around my buildings, especially when I have had my sheep killed by them."

"But my dog never troubled your sheep, and you know it."

"How should I know it?"

"You know that he never did harm to a sheep. It wasn't in his nature. It was a mean, cowardly act, and (an oath) you shall suffer for it!"

"Brackett, you don't know to whom you are talking."

"Oho!" (another oath) "We'll find out! We'll see! Don't put on airs, John Welton. You ain't a saint. I'll have satisfaction, if I have to take it out of your hide!"

"Peter, you'd better go home and cool off. You are making yourself ridiculous."

Now, really, this was the unkindest cut of all. Not all the mad words of Brackett put together were so hard as this single sentence; and John Welton put all the bitter sarcasm of the command into it.

Brackett burst forth into a torrent of invective, and then turned away.

Half an hour later John Welton acknowledged to himself that he had not done exactly right. Had he, in the outset—in answer to Brackett's first outburst—told the simple truth—that he had shot the dog by mistake; that he was sorry; and that he was willing to do anything in his power to make amends—had he done this, his neighbor would probably have softened at once. But it was too late now. The blow had been struck; he had been grossly insulted; and he would not back down.

Mr. Brackett was not so reflective. He only felt his wrath, which he nursed to keep it warm. That evening he hitched his horse to a job-wagon and went down to the village after a barrel of flour. Having transacted his store business, he called upon Laban Pepper, a lawyer, to whom he narrated the facts of the shooting of his dog.

Pepper was a man anxious for fees. He had no sympathy or soul above that.

"You say your dog was in company with two of your children?"

"Yes."

"And this passage over Mr. Welton's land, and through his shed, has been freely yielded by him as a right of way to his neighbors?"

"Yes, sir, ever since I can remember."

"Then, my dear sir, Welton is clearly liable. If you will come with me, we will step into Mr. Garfield's and have a suit commenced at once."

Mr. Garfield was the trial Justice.

All this happened on Friday evening. On Saturday it had become noised abroad in the farming district that there was not only serious trouble between neighbors Welton and Brackett, but that they were going to law about it.

On Sunday morning John Welton told his wife he should not attend church. She could go if she liked. She had no need to ask her husband why he would not go out. She knew he was unhappy, and that he could not bear to meet his old neighbor in the house of God while the dark cloud was upon him. Nor did she wish to meet either Mr. or Mrs. Brackett. So they both stayed at home.

Peter Brackett was even more miserable than John Welton, though perhaps he did not know it. He held in close companionship the very worst demon a man can embrace—the demon of wrathful vengeance; and in order to maintain himself at the strain to which he had set his feelings, he was obliged to nurse the monster. He did not attend church on that day, nor did his wife. Two or three times during that calm, beautiful Sabbath, as he glanced over toward his neighbor's dwelling, he found himself beginning to wish that he had not gone to see John Welton in such a heat of anger; but he put the wish away, and nursed back his wrath.

On Monday, toward noon, the Constable came up from the village, and read to John Welton an imposing legal document. It was a summons issued by William Garfield, Esq., a Justice of the Peace and Quorum, ordering the said John Welton to appear before him, at two of the clock, on Wednesday, at his office, then and there to answer to the complaint of Peter Brackett, etc., etc. The officer read the summons, and left with the defendant a copy.

It was the first time John Welton had ever been called upon to face the law. At first he was awe-stricken, and then he was wroth. He told himself that he would fight it to the bitter end. And now he tried to nurse his wrath, and became more unhappy than before.

On Tuesday evening, Parson Surely called upon Mr Welton. The good man had heard of the trouble, and was exceedingly exercised in spirit. Both the men were of his flock, and he loved and respected them both. He sat down alone with Welton, and asked him what it meant.

"Tell me, calmly and candidly, all about it," he said.

After a little reflection, Mr. Welton told the story. He knew the old clergyman for a true man, and a whole-hearted friend, and he told everything just as he understood it.

"And neighbor Brackett thinks, even now, that you shot the dog knowing it was his?"

"I suppose so."

"If you had told him the exact facts in the beginning, do you think he would have held his anger?"

This was a hard question for John Welton, but he answered it manfully.

"Truly, parson, I do not think he would."

"Were you ever more unhappy in your life than you have been since this trouble came."

"I think not."

"And, if possible, neighbor Brackett is more unhappy than you."

"Do you think so?"

"Yes. He is the most angry and vengeful."

A brief pause, and then the parson resumed:

"Brother Welton, with you are needed but few words. You are a stronger man than brother Brackett. Do you not believe he has a good heart?"

"Yes."

"I wish you could show him how true and good your own heart is."

"Parson!"

"I wish you could show him that you possess true Christian courage."

"Parson, what do you mean?"

"I wish you had the courage to meet him and conquer him."

"How would you have me do it?"

"First, conquer yourself. You are not offended?"

"No. Go on."

And thereupon the good old clergyman drew up his chair and laid his hand upon his friend's arm, and told him just what he would have him do. He spoke earnestly, and with tears in his eyes.

"Brother Walton, have you the heart and the courage to do this?"

The farmer arose and took two or three turns across the floor; and finally he said:

"I will do it!"

* * * * * * *

On the following day, towards the middle of the forenoon, Peter Brackett stood in his door-yard with his head bent. He was thinking whether he should harness his horse and be off before dinner, or whether he would wait until afternoon. He could not work; he could not even put his mind to ordinary chores.

"I wonder," he said to himself, "how the trial will come out! I s'pose Welton 'll hire old Whitman to take his case. Of course the office 'll be crowded. Tom Frost says it's noised everywhere, and that everybody 'll be there. Plague take it! I wish—"

His meditations were interrupted by approaching steps, and on looking up he beheld neighbor Welton.

"Good morning, Peter."

Brackett gasped, and finally answered: "Good morning," though rather crustily.

Welton went on, frankly and pleasantly:

"You will go to the village to-day?"

"I s'pose so."

"I have been summoned by Justice Garfield to be there, also; but really, Peter, I don't want to go. One of us will be enough. Garfield is a fair man, and when he knows the facts he will do what is right. Now, you can state them as well as I can, and whatever his decision is, I will abide by it. You can tell him that I shot your dog, and that your dog had done me no harm."

"Do you acknowledge that old Carlo never harmed you—that he never troubled your sheep?" inquired Brackett, with startled surprise.

"It was not his nature to do harm to anything. I am sure he would have sooner saved one of my sheep than have killed it."

"Then what did you shoot him for?"

"That is what I was just coming at, Peter. You will tell the Justice that I had lost several of my best sheep—killed by dogs—that I had just been taking the skin from a fat, valuable wether that had been so killed and mangled—that I was on my way from my barn to my house, with my gun in my hand, when I saw a dog come out from my shed. My first thought was that he had come from my sheep-fold. It was almost dark and I could not see plainly. Tell the Justice that I had no idea it was your dog. I never dreamed that I had fired that cruel shot at old Carlo until Tom Frost told me."

"How? You didn't know it was my dog?"

"Peter, have you thought so hard of me as to think that I could knowingly and willingly have harmed that grand old dog? I would sooner have shot one of my own oxen."

"But, you didn't tell me so at first. Why didn't you?"

"Because you came upon me so—so—suddenly—"

"O, pshaw!" cried Brackett, with a stamp of his foot. "Why don't you spit it out as it was? Say I came down on you so like a hornet that you hadn't a chance to think. I was a blamed fool!—that's what I was."

"And I was another, Peter; if I hadn't been I should have told you the truth at once, instead of flaring up. But we will understand it now. You can see the Justice—"

"Justice be hanged!—John— Dang it all! what's the use? There!—Let's end it so!"

From her window Mrs. Brackett had seen the two men come together, and she trembled for the result. By and by she saw her husband, as though flushed and excited, put out his hand. Mercy! was he going to strike his neighbor? She was ready to cry out with affright—the cry was almost upon her lips—when she beheld a scene that called forth rejoicing instead. And this was what she saw:

She saw these two strong men grasp one another by the hand, and she saw big, bright tears rolling down their cheeks; and she knew that the fearful storm was passed, and that the warm sunshine of love and tranquility would come again.

QUEEN VICTORIA gave a ball at Balmoral Castle the other night to the servants, tennats, and gillies of her estates of Balmoral, Abergeldie, and Birkhall. All of the royal family were present and danced with lads and lassies.

Love's Young Dream.

Ran and John are two young gents who reside on Peachtree street. They have not yet reached the middle line between infancy and manhood. Each one has a bright particular star to worship. Ran and John met a few days ago and began to discuss the merits of their "ladyloves." The discussion grew warm, and ended in a fierce wrangle.

Ran—My Ella wears a tighter "tied-back" than yours!

John—My Lucy has prettier striped stockings!

Ran—Bah! Yourn sucks candy yet!

John—Don't care! Your's sucks her fingers!

Ran—Y-e-s; and what does your gal do? She's so parrot-toed that she can't jump the rope!

John—And your'n turns somersets and skins the cat, eh?

Ran—You'd better tell the mother of yourn to wipe her nose!

John—And you'd better tell the mother of yourn to wash her feet!

From words the boys proceeded to blows, and they grasped each other by the hair and were cavorting around like two young bovines when the mothers of John and Ran appeared upon the scene, and as their two shoes were pulled off and applied, the boys thought of Rapid Transit in New York.

For a long time the people of New York have been agitating the subject of rapid transit. Various schemes have been proposed looking to the attainment of that desideratum, but each had its defects and all have in turn been rejected. Finally a commission, composed of some of the eminent architects and leading business men of New York, was appointed to invite proposals and inspect plans for the promotion of cheap and rapid transportation in the city and suburbs. The report of this commission has just been published. From more than 100 plans the Commissioners have selected and adopted three, either of which may be constructed singly or by combining the three. They are a single track road on each side of streets, over the sidewalks, elevated on a single line of columns, or a double-track road over the center of streets, on posts placed in the roadway, just spanning the horse-car tracks, or supported on Gothic arches spanning the street from curb to curb, according to plans presented by Richard P. Morgan, Jr., of Bloomington, Ill. It is probable that one of these plans will be adopted, and that ere long the great city of New York will be traversed by a network of elevated railways.

Counterfeit Money in the Wake of a Circus.

Nearly every day brings to light some new counterfeit put in circulation in this city immediately after the departure of Howe's circus. They are well executed, and calculated to deceive. We furnish the following list of counterfeits discovered up to this time, which was furnished us by Mr. A. Thummel, teller of the German National Bank: First National, Lockport, New York, $10; Traders', Chicago, $5; Third National, Chicago, $5; Merchants', Chicago, $5; First National, Boston, $100; First National, Philadelphia, $10; Ninth National, New York, $2; First National, Canton, Illinois, $5; First National, Paxton, Illinois, $5; City Bank, Poughkeepsie, New York, $10; First National, Red Hook, New York, $10; Central, New York city, $100; Central, Rome, New York, $10.—Memphis Avalanche.

A Snake with Ears.

Another snake story is related by the Reading, Pa., Eagle to the effect that a large black snake of the swamp species was recently killed, about a mile and a half from Beckville, seven miles below Reading, by Elhanon Hauser, who was cutting wood on the hill. Hauser was told by a boy that a snake was in the road near him, when Mr. Hauser took a heavy pole and killed the reptile. It measured four feet four inches. When examined it was found to have two ears about two inches apart, three inches and a half from the back part of the mouth. The ears are about half an inch in length, and the shape of those of a rabbit. The skin was removed and stuffed as another evidence of the curious freaks of Dame Nature.

A Fat Fee.

Peter Bentley, the New Jersey millionaire lawyer, who died one day last week, made his fortune out of one law case. Soon after beginning his practice, Mrs. Hill, a widow of Jersey City, had bequeathed to her a water frontage of fifty-three acres where the New Jersey Central and Erie railway depots now stand. These powerful corporations fought the widow and her young counsel for twelve years. Mr. Bentley was defeated time and again, but by pluck and perseverance he at length won. He paid the widow $150,000 at different times and became owner himself of one undivided half interest in the property. In time Mr. Bentley's acquisition became the most valuable in the State, so that its possessor was enabled to retire from his profession.

A Heavy Fair Half Fare.

Just before the Waite left for the islands, yesterday, a gentleman called at the office and inquired of Frank M. Kelley, the clerk, the rates of fare for passage. The reply was, "One dollar for the round trip. "How much for children? I've one that is not thirteen yet." "Oh, half a dollar," replied Frank. The ticket was purchased and presented to Miss Lizzie McCutcheon, of Stone Pike, Wood county, Ohio, who was on her way to the Fat Men's Convention. This child is 12 years and 2 months of age, 5 feet 1 inch in height, measures around her bust 49 inches, and weighs 330 pounds. As Kelley saw the transaction he muttered, "Sold, by thunder!" and those who were watching the affair agreed with him.—Toledo Blade.

Tweed in Jail.

A New York paper states that Boss Tweed pays $50 a week for his accommodations in Ludlow Street Jail. He sees nobody but his family, his physician and his lawyers. It is customary at the jail, when, for convenience, a prisoner wishes to be out in the pure air for a few hours in the company of an officer, to grant him that privilege for a fee assessed according to the amount of bail in default of which he is held. Tweed's bail is fixed at $3,000,000, and a half a day's liberty in his case would be scheduled at about $100. He has only availed himself of this license once, however, when he went home for two or three hours, but did not pay for the privilege.

Death of a Great Pontiff.

The Delai-Lama of Thibet died recently. We presume scarcely a person who reads these lines has any very intelligent idea who the Delai-Lama was, or cares who he was, and yet he was the spiritual and infallible head of the Lamaists, offshoots of the Buddhists, who number over 400,000,000 souls. There are Lamas and there are Delai-Lamas, and the Delai-Lamas are recognized as incarnations of God, and worshipped as the Deity is worshipped. Kublai-Khan, the great conqueror of China, first established the Lama in power and gave him both temporal and spiritual sway, and a throne where he could sit as high as the Emperor in temporal matters, and a good deal higher in spiritual. His most noteworthy successor was Sonkapa, who was immaculately conceived by his mother's falling upon a Buddhistic inscription. By his immaculate birth he was endowed with many remarkable characteristics. He had a white beard, and could talk before he was a day old, and from his hair grew a tree producing leaves which were covered with sacred inscriptions. He died in the fifteenth century, and although he ascended into Heaven, his body is still preserved, floating in the air, in a monastery which he founded. The first of the Delai-Lamas, however, was born in 1389, and the one who has just gone to meet Buddha was the tenth of the line. Their lives have not always been peaceful, for three of these Pontiffs have suffered death by violence at the hands of the Emperors who were jealous of their power over the Mongolians. Their position, however, is an enviable one. They have no end of palaces and temples richly adorned with gold and silver ornaments. They have endless ceremonies, pageants, and music. They run prayer-wheels which are very profitable, and make a handsome thing out of helping the release of dying rich men's souls, which they accomplish by the neat little surgical operation of tearing the skin from the skull and boring a hole in it. Religious services are held for the comfort of departed souls, but their effectiveness depends greatly upon the manner in which the friends of the relatives come down. The bodies of ordinary common people are made into meat balls and fed to the Delai-Lamas' sacred dogs. They derive immense tribute from mines, lands, and flocks, and manage also to eke out a living by the sale of holy textures, fumigations, relics, and idols. When engaged in official business, the Delai-Lama is an object of envy to all persons who love their ease, for on such occasions he sits cross-legged, like a statue, on five elegant cushions, arrayed in his best attire. He is not obliged to say anything or notice anybody. He simply waves his hands, which is equivalent to blessing, and sometimes he distributes little balls of paste or clay. As everything which emanates from him is considered to be omnipotent, there is great demand for these dirt-balls, and the profits are correspondingly large. In addition to this, annual tribute is carried every year to him by caravans. In point of fact, there is very little to do and most excellent pay in the position, the most onerous duties being to sit cross-legged, look wise, and say nothing.—Chicago Tribune.

English Jargon.

Col. J. W. Forney comes to the rescue of Americans who are ridiculed by Englishmen for their nasal twang. He writes in one of his London letters: "Let me admit at the start that there is nothing more delightful than the conversation of an educated Englishman or Englishwoman; but the moment you pass from their circle you are assailed at every quarter by a mingling of dialects, and in many cases a most incomprehensible jargon. I often find it difficult to understand an English clergyman, and it is the common remark of Americans who visit the theaters that they lose a large portion of the play in consequence of the rapid and indistinct enunciation of actors in subordinate parts. The same observation may be made with justice of most of the speakers in the House of Commons. Take out Mr. Disraeli, Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Bright, and a few more, and it is next to impossible to comprehend what nearly all the others say."

A Venerable Couple.

A late letter from Paris say: "Among our latest arrivals in Paris are two persons who deserve to be mentioned as something quite out of the run of ordinary visitors to the French capital. They are both centenarians, and, what is rarer, they are husband and wife. Their names are Monsieur and Madame Ballue. The man is said to be 110 years of age, and the woman 105 years. They live in the South, and have come to Paris on a cheap excursion train. Monsieur Ballue is an old soldier of the First Empire, and while visiting the ruins of the Tuileries delighted his wife by pointing out to her the spot where he mounted guard under the Consulate of Bonaparte. Both these courageous centenarians enjoy excellent health Their eyesight is good, their memory almost unfailing, and their legs as strong as can be expected under such a heavy weight of time."

Hogs Dying of Consumption.

A letter from Des Moines, Iowa, says: "There is great fatality among the hogs in this State. In Marion, H. Cunningham, the great prize-taker at all fairs, has lost nearly his whole herd of valuable thoroughbred Poland-China hogs, valued at over $2,000. The loss is not only great to him, but to the State at large, as breeders were depending extensively on him for animals. A large number of the hogs were dissected, and invariably it was found that the lungs were nearly destroyed. Snow & Huber, at Pella, who have a grease factory, report the same is true of nearly all the dead hogs brought there which have died of disease".

BUILDING ON THE SAND.

BY ELIZA COOK.

'Tis well to woo, 'tis well to wed,
For so the world hath done
Since myrtles grew, and roses blew,
And morning brought the sun;
But have a care, ye young and fair,
Be sure you pledge with truth;
Be certain that your love will wear
Beyond the days of youth!
For if ye give not heart for heart,
As well as hand for hand,
You'll find you've played the unwise part,
And "built upon the sand."

'Tis well to save, 'tis well to have
A goodly store of gold,
And hold enough of shining stuff,
For charity is cold.
But place not all your hope and trust
In what the deep mine brings
We cannot live on yellow dust
Unmixed with purer things,
And he who piles up wealth alone
Will often have to stand
Beside his coffer chest, and own
'Tis "built upon the sand."

'Tis good to speak in kindly guise
And soothe where'er we can;
Fair speech should bind the human mind,
And love link man to man.
But stop not at the gentle words;
Let deeds with language dwell;
The one who pities starving birds,
Shall scatter crumbs as well.
The mercy that is warm and true
Must lend a helping hand,
For those that talk, yet fail to do,
But "build upon the sand."

Remarkable Sale of Short-Horns.

There was a remarkable sale of shorthorns at Aylesby Manor, Grimsby, England, on the 2d of September, being the sale of the herd of the late William Torr. The cattle are what are known as "Booths," and were all bred at Aylesby. Among the bidders at the sale was T. C. Booth, one of the members of the famous Booth family, and it is stated that the sale was the first public one within the memory of those present at which any member of that family participated as a bidder. Mr. Booth bought twelve cows, paying therefor the large sum of £12,122, an average of over £1,000 per head. For one of the animals—Bright Empress—which was conceded on all hands to be the best cow offered for sale, Mr. Booth gave 2,160 guineas, the largest sum that a horned female has hitherto realized in Great Britain. Seventy-one cows and thirteen bulls were sold. The cows brought in the aggregate £37,906 1s, an average of £533 1s 9d, or over 500 guineas. The aggregate price paid for the whole was £42,919 16s, an average of £510 19s. Seven cows brought 1,000 guineas or upward. Three bulls each brought 700 guineas. There were bidders present from all parts of the United Kingdom, from the United States and Australia. One cow—Bright Queen—which is now eleven years old, and lame from rheumatism into the bargain, was purchased by Lady Pigot, the "Queen of the Booths," for 750 guineas.

Concerning Postal Cards.

The first of the old issue of cards were sent to the Springfield postoffice May 12, 1873, and the last to Meriden, Conn., last Tuesday. Between these two dates, 255,478,000 cards have been issued, for which the government has paid the contractors $357,349.85, and have collected $2,554,780 from the people. There were 62,902 requisitions held for the old cards, and they were shipped in 82,424 pouches, packages and cases, all of which were registered, and for which receipts are on file at the agency. The entire shipments of the old cards weighed 960 tons and 1,893 pounds, and would fill a freight train of ninety cars.—Boston Globe.

A LESSON FOR THE TIMES.

Confession and Suicide of a Prominent Business Man.

[From the Indianapolis Journal.]

On Tuesday morning last William S. Wood, President of the Greenfield (Indiana) Manufacturing Company, a leading business man of Hancock county, registered at the Union Depot dining hall, requesting that he might be given a room immediately, as he was not feeling well. Yesterday morning he was discovered in his room suffering from opium poisoning, and soon after expired. It seems that he deliberately took the poison, first indicting a letter which explained the reason of his taking off. The letter is addressed to whom it may concern, and reads as follows:

Know you that while life has had many pleasant charms for me, yet I have so poorly applied my powers of intellect as to suffer myself to become so deeply involved in financial ruin as to leave me in a helpless condition. So, finding myself ruined financially, and in view of the fact that I, having heavy indebtedness over me, had committed that awful crime of forging the names of Pratt & Baldwin, Marion Forgey, J. W. Ryan and Thomas Ward to a note for $1,000, and had discounted the same at the Citizens' National Bank of Indianapolis, a bank for whom I die bearing the greatest love and regard.

Also I forged my father's and father-in-law's name to a note for $4,000, payable to the First National Bank of Cambridge City, and there got Marion Forgey to sign it, and placed it in lieu of one that I had forged for the same amount, and gave as security my father, Thomas Wood, and father-in-law, W. L. Garriatt. Furthermore, I had found for a long time past that my father was becoming uneasy about my success in business, and I, not wanting to disturb him on my account, have forged his name for the last two years, and to-day, on all the papers that his name appears, it was placed by my own accursed hand; and while I determined to pass through the panic of two years ago," and pay every creditor that I owed a cent in the world, I little ever thought that interest and failures of different debtors would so embarrass me that I should come to this end, that I am now about to launch my life into a boundless eternity.

Had Forgey, Pratt & Baldwin took my advice, I could have held out and paid all my indebtedness and saved myself from suicide and my family from disgrace. I never forged a name to a paper with the expectation of the party ever being called upon to pay it, or the party holding the paper to lose a cent in any way. Neither would they, could I only have been left alone for a year or more, as I have been for months past going to shore as fast as I could pull through the troubled financial waters. I pray forgiveness from all. I must say that John B. Simmons, cashier of the Citizens' Bank, was the prime mover in rushing forward my three sureties. I have paid fifteen per cent. to P. H. Boyd, Allison Boyd, W. R. Hough, G. G. Tague, and Melissa Cooper, all wealthy, and to J. P. Paulson twelve and a half per cent.; to John B. and N. D. Simmons, twelve per cent. discount in advance, and to other parties large interests. Will you now, now that I am or very soon will be dead, contribute something to a poor, honest, industrious, confiding wife, left a widow, with three little prattling babes, and no means, no father, no shelter of their own.

I am too brave to run away and leave them never to know what has become of me, and to drag out a life of misery and longing to see and behold what I dare not and cannot without suffering the pangs of an outraged law that would confine me for the remainder of a long life in prison walls. Oh, God, may my sad fate warn any and all who shall hear of my terrible ending that the first debt made lays the road to ruin, that indebtedness begins to bring on crime, care and anxiety, and corrupts the moral sentiments of the best of minds. I earnestly ask of all that I owe anything to to wait with patience and not sue my sureties, as my effects and insurance, if properly handled, will pay all my indebtedness. I earnestly ask a generous public to divide its substance by paying liberal prices for all my property. I have labored hard for the town of Greenfield and its moral good. Will you not do something to make what I have accumulated bring such prices that none shall suffer, but all, both those who hold forged security, and those who have only my own name, may realize fully what is justly theirs? My good, true wife has always been a pleasure to me, and begged me not to speculate as I have done. Oh, that I had taken her counsel. She has been my solace in affliction, my comfort in our married life, and in no way is she to be sentenced or scorned for my misdeeds and misfortunes. My dear children, Lord God, who doest all things well, bless them and make their lives pleasant and reconcile them and their mother to my fate.

I have taken two policies in the Masonic Benefit for my children. I have $2,500 for my dear wife in the Union Mutual or the Northwestern, of Milwaukee. I also took $7,000 for my wife and children in the Franklin Life Insurance Company, on the 28th, the same day I took the Masonic. I don't know whether the $7,000 one will be approved or not, but I hope it will. I have always felt that it was my greatest duty to provide for my family, and I have, at this short notice, no other way to do so than to resort to the insurance companies and ask of them all their kindest charities, not to leave my little ones poor, starving and wretched. I cannot bear the thought that I die and leave so little. I got from Browning & Sloan's drug store, on the evening of the 28th, morphia and chloroform enough to sleep me easily across the rolling river, and, believing my God knows my honest desire, I go hence resigned. Father, mother, brothers, sisters, friends, all, farewell. Charles Downing, be good to my wife and children, and never suffer them to want. * * * Read Proverbs; they will tell you what kind of a life mine has been—desiring riches, yet dying poor. I hope the Coroner will not trouble himself or any of my friends to hold a lengthy inquest. Finally, Father and Mother Garriatt, be kind to my children. I know you will. I have written hastily, and expect to have made errors. I have not time to read and correct. It is now 2 o'clock a. m. Oh! Lord, receive my spirit, and do not let me be disturbed until dead.

SEPT. 29, 1875. WILLIAM S. WOOD.

In addition to the above statement, a number of pieces of paper—medicine wrappers, etc.—were found, all written upon. He expresses the hope that his estate will pay the Citizens' Bank of Indianapolis, which holds no paper or securities that do not bear forged signatures. He then adds: "I had intended to die at home last night, but my wife would not sleep, hence I die here to-day. Educate my children. I die resigned, and know that I have no insanity whatever. Farewell to the world and all its joys.

Mutiny and Piracy.

The Atlantic cable some months ago briefly mentioned a remarkable case of mutiny and piracy on the high seas. A vessel called the Jefferson Borden was making a voyage from New Orleans to London, having on board besides the Captain and mates, five sailors and a boy, with the Captain's wife as passenger. On the 20th of April, while in mid-ocean 900 miles from England, three of the sailors mutinied. The first and second mates were both murdered in the night and an attempt made to decoy the Captain from the cabin where he was sleeping, which was, however, frustrated by the timely caution of his wife, who suspected foul play. The Captain then armed himself and gave battle to the mutineers. He had for allies one sailor, the steward, his wife and the cabin boy. On the other side were three mutineers. The battle waged with varying fortunes for about forty-eight hours. At last the Captain by dint of bravery and skillful tactics succeeded in driving the three men into the forecastle, where they finally surrendered, overcome by hunger, fatigue and wounds. The vessel was taken into an English port, and in due time returned to Boston with the mutineers in custody. They were indicted for murder, mutiny and piracy, and after a trial of eight days' duration, were found guilty—two of them of piracy, mutiny and murder and one of mutiny alone, he having joined the others after the murders were committed. In the case of the two former there were no extenuating circumstances, and they were sentenced to be hung. There has not been an execution in Massachusetts for piracy for more than forty years.

Children's Rights.

The first right of every child is to be well born; and by this I mean that it has a right to the best conditions, physical, mental and moral, that it is in the power of the parents to secure. Without this the child is defrauded of his rights at the outset, and his life can hardly fail of being a painful protest against broken laws. Centuries of preparation fitted the earth for man's occupancy, hinting thus the grandeur of his destiny, and suggested that in an event of such magnitude as the incarnating of a soul prevision should be exercised, and all the best conditions secured in aid of a harmonious and happy result. Good health, good habits, sound mentality and reverent love should form the basis of every new life that is involved. The mother who gives herself up to morbid fancies, who considers her health an excuse for petulance and non-exercise of self-control, proves herself unworthy of the holy office of mother, and ought not to be surprised if she reap at a later day the bitter harvest of her unwise sowing. Second in importance to none, as a means of securing the happiness and best good of childhood and youth, is the right to be taught obedience. It is easy to submit to what we know is inevitable, and to the little child the requirement of the parent should be law without appeal. The tender, immature being, shut in by the unknown, where every relation is a mystery and every advance an experiment, has a right to find itself everywhere sustained and directed by the parent. It should not be tempted to resistance by laws that are imperfectly enforced, nor subjected to the injurious friction of discussion by having a long list of reasons given for every requirement. The habit of obedience to the parents may be formed before the child is two years old, and this is a necessary precedent of obedience to law, the next stage of a true development. The child has a right to ask questions and to be fairly answered; not to be snubbed as if he were guilty of an impertinence, nor ignored as though his desire for information were of no consequence, nor misled as if it did not signify whether true or false impressions were made upon his mind. He has a right to be taught everything which he desires to learn, and to be made certain, when any asked-for information is withheld, that it is only deferred till he is older and better prepared to receive it. Answering a child's questions is sowing the seeds of its future character.—Victoria Magazine.

The Family Teeth.

Says the Boston Globe: A toothless couple in one of our rural districts concluded, after much jaw, that they would gum it no longer; that, in fact, the family must be provided with a new set of teeth. These worthy people were not given to ostentatious display; they also firmly believed the doctrine that they twain were one flesh, and, since one pair of spectacles, brass-bound, had long sufficed for their united eyes, why should not one set of teeth work equally well? Accordingly, those aged mouths repaired to a neighboring dentist, and lo! the triumph of mind over matter—a set of teeth that will bite off a plug of tobacco for "father," or nibble Sunday caraway and chatter harmless gossip for "mother," with equal precision! Life has now fresh zest and found a new relish. It is lovely and beautiful to see them at the little round table ready for dinner. First the old lady picks up the teeth—they are always lying about handy—slips them in, and makes a good use of her privileges while father is laying up a generous stock of provisions on his plate. Presently he leans back in his chair, puts down his knife and fork, and says cheerfully, "Come, mother, give me the teeth." Then the old lady, with true conjugal alacrity, touching to behold, catches them out, hands them across the table to the old gentleman, who dexterously claps them in his own mouth, and the family eating goes complacently on, till, perhaps, "mother" comes to a hard spot and demands the molars. So, back and forth, like a weaver's shuttle, busily ply the teeth till the square meal is ended.

Spiritualism and Litigation.

It is remarkable that the two largest Will cases now in litigation in the United States are the outgrowth of Spiritualism. Reference is made to the Ward will case of Detroit, and the Taylor will case of New York. In the latter case, Judge Donahue, of the New York Supreme Court, has just decided that Mrs. Taylor's counsel, who lately refused to join with her in consulting the spirits in regard to the disposition of the estate affairs, shall be displaced by counsel of Mrs. Taylor's choice. The estate, which is valued at $3,000,000, has been put into a Receiver's hands, and promises to remain in chancery for a generation to come. Meanwhile the widow is dependent upon her credit with friends for her living.

Fire and Sword.

The Cuban patriots are preparing to use against the Spaniards in Cuba that most terrible of all means of warfare, fire, which they employed last winter. An article in a late Havana paper says that the insurgents have laid plans whereby all the valuable sugar districts are to be devastated by burning. The Cubans declare that the coming winter will be celebrated by the most active operations on their part that have been witnessed during this long and desperate struggle.

Who says that women are not treated with becoming consideration in Michigan? At the Eaton county fair, recently, they were awarded the following premiums: To the girl, not over 20, who showed the best sample of mending—Miss Emma Robb, $5. To the woman with the longest hair—Mrs. Viola Heims, being 3 feet 9 inches in length, $5. To the woman who has been the longest without a new dress—Alice Fuller, $10. To the girl who made the best bread—Allie Roller, $5. To the prettiest baby under 3 years—Mrs. O. P. Shuler, $5. The premiums offered to the best speller, the politician who never told a lie, the wife who never scolded her husband, the old maid who never wanted a husband, and the handsomest woman, were not competed for.

THE Mason & Hamlin Organ Co. have obtained another triumph over all their competitors, and won new honors for America. They have just been awarded the grand medal of honor for the best cabinet or parlor organs, at the World's Exposition in Linz, the capital of Upper Austria.

WILHOFT'S FEVER AND AGUE TONIC.—This medicine is used by construction companies for the benefit of their employes, when engaged in malarial districts. The highest testimonials have been given by contractors and by the Presidents of some of the leading railroads in the South and West. When men are congregated in large numbers in the neighborhood of swamps and rivers, Wilhoft's Tonic will prove a valuable addition to the stock of medicines, and will amply reward the company in the saving of time, labor and money. We recommend it to all. WHEELOCK, FINLAY & Co., Proprietors, New Orleans.

MANY valuable horses die from the effects of colic. The best thing to do in a case of this kind is to pour a bottle of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment into a long-necked junk bottle, add half pint of molasses and water, then pour the whole down the horse's throat. In ten minutes the horse will begin to eat.

MYSTERY SOLVED.—The great secret of the wonderful success of Vegetine. It strikes at the root of disease by purifying the blood, restoring the liver and kidneys to healthy action, invigorating the nervous system.—Com.

PARSONS' Purgative Pills will greatly relieve, if not entirely cure, dyspepsia when everything else fails. They have been tried in some desperate cases, and have given more relief than any other medicine.

CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED.
SCHENCK'S PULMONIC SYRUP,
SCHENCK'S SEA WEED TONIC,
SCHENCK'S MANDRAKE PILLS,

Are the only medicines that will cure Pulmonary Consumption.

Frequently medicines that will stop a cough will occasion the death of the patient; they lock up the liver, stop the circulation of the blood, hemorrhage follows, and, in fact, they clog the action of the very organs that caused the cough.

Liver Complaint and Dyspepsia are the causes of two-thirds of the cases of Consumption. Many persons complain of a dull pain in the side, constipation, coated tongue, pain in the shoulder-blade, feelings of drowsiness and restlessness, the food lying heavily on the stomach, accompanied with acidity and belching up of wind.

These symptoms usually originate from a disordered condition of the stomach or a torpid liver.

Persons so affected, if they take one or two heavy colds, and if the cough in these cases be suddenly checked, will find the stomach and liver clogged, remaining torpid and inactive, and almost before they are aware the lungs are a mass of sores and ulcerated, the result of which is death.

Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup is an expectorant which does not contain opium or anything calculated to check a cough suddenly.

Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic dissolves the food, mixes with the gastric juice of the stomach, aids digestion, and creates a ravenous appetite.

When the bowels are costive, skin sallow, or the symptoms otherwise of a bilious tendency, Schenck's Mandrake Pills are required.

These medicines are prepared only by
J. H. SCHENCK & SON,
N. E. corner Sixth and Arch Streets, Phila.
And are for sale by all druggists and dealers.

VEGETINE
PURIFIES THE BLOOD AND RESTORES THE HEALTH.

SEVENTY-ONE YEARS OF AGE.

EAST MARSHFIELD, Aug. 22, 1870.

Mr. H. R. STEVENS:
Dear Sir—I am seventy-one years of age, have suffered many years with Kidney Complaint, weakness in my back and stomach. I was induced by friends to try your VEGETINE, and I think it the best medicine for weakness of the Kidneys I ever used. I have tried many remedies for this complaint, and never found so much relief as from the VEGETINE. It strengthens and invigorates the whole system. Many of my acquaintances have taken it, and I believe it to be good for all the complaints for which it is recommended.
Yours truly,
JOSIAH H. SHERMAN.

EXPERIENCE OF YEARS.

CHARLESTOWN, Mass., March 19, 1869.

Mr. H. R. STEVENS:
This is to certify that I have used your "Blood Preparation" (VEGETINE) in my family for several years, and think that for Scrofula or Cankerous Humors, or Rheumatic affections, it cannot be excelled; and as a blood purifier and Spring medicine, it is the best thing I have ever used; and I have used almost everything. I can cheerfully recommend it to any in need of such a medicine. Yours respectfully,
MRS. A. A. DINSMORE,
19 Russell Street.

WHAT IS NEEDED.

BOSTON, Feb. 13, 1871.

Mr. H. R. STEVENS:
Dear Sir—About one year since I found myself in a feeble condition from general debility. VEGETINE was strongly recommended to me by a friend who had been much benefited by its use. I procured the article, and, after using several bottles, was restored to health, and discontinued its use. I feel quite confident that there is no medicine superior to it for those complaints for which it is especially prepared, and would cheerfully recommend it to those who feel that they need something to restore them to perfect health.
Respectfully yours,
U. L. PETTINGILL,
Firm of S. M. Pettingill & Co., 10 State-st., Boston.

VEGETINE extends its influence into every part of the human organism, commencing with its foundation, correcting diseased action and restoring vital powers, creating a healthy formation and purification of the blood, driving out disease, and leaving Nature to perform its allotted task. VEGETINE is sold by all druggists.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN INDIANA, OCT. 21, 1875

Hayes is elected Governor of Ohio by 4753 majority. This out of 525,000 votes is a pretty close shave. Such a victory is not an encouraging one, such a defeat is not humiliating.

The Cincinnati Enquirer says:

"We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, but not in despair; persecuted, but not forsaken; cast down, but not destroyed."

Our neighboring county, over the line done splendidly in the late election. The Defiance Democrat says: That State of Defiance county came out of the fight with flying colors. A gain of 293 over the biggest majority ever before given is enough to make us feel good.

The soldiers' Reunion at Indianapolis induced a great many people to go to the capital, but the line of soldiers was not as large as was expected. From the way things was arranged it looked like a political dodge for the benefit of Senator Morton. He harangued them in the bloody shirt style, but the enthusiasms was not general.

It is hard to determine whether the inflation issue gave the election in Ohio to the Republicans or not. Cleveland and Cuyahoga county gave a Republican majority of over 6,000. Last year they were Democratic by 800 to 1,200. Had there been an honest vote here, Hayes would hardly have been elected. Still we think, had they left the inflation issue out, and stood square against resumption in 1879, it would have been better.

The numerous friends of the Hon. M. C. Kerr, in various parts of the country will be gratified to know that he has returned to his home in New Albany, Indiana, completely restored to health and vigor by a visit to the Colorado Springs. He is fully equal to all the duties and labors that may be expected or required of him at the coming session of Congress, which is likely to be one of the most important that has been held since the close of the war. There never was a time when the counsel of able and upright men like Mr. Kerr, with statesmenlike grasp of mind and clean records, was more needed than now.

The New York Sun says: "It turns out the Democracy are beaten in Ohio by only a small majority.—This shows that if they had made the contest on the square issue of administrative reform and the overthrow of Grantism, they would have carried the State by at least 30,000.

For many years past the folly of the Democrats has again and again saved the Republicans. In fact, this has become proverbial, and the result in Ohio shows that they have now done it again, and in a most conspicuous instance.

Will this last lesson be sufficient, or will they need one or two more national defeats in order to teach them the necessary amount of political good sense?

Murry, of the Goshen Democrat, is considerable exercised over our commendation of Carl Schurz's brilliant speech on the finance question. Pray, Mr. Murray, what are you going to do about it?—National Banner.

We were not so exercised over your "commendation of Carl Schurz's brilliant speech" as we were exercised over the convert applause of the speech and the meeting as a demonstration against the re-election of Gov. Allen, and the democratic state ticket.

But what are we going to do about it? That is a question deserving an honest answer.

Had any man carrying the National Banner during an engagement with the rebe's, stepped to the front of the battle line and expressed a wish for the success of the enemy and the defeat of his own friends, the nearest soldier would have run him through with his bayonet or shot him on the spot.

That is the way we will treat the man who flaunts the democratic National Banner when he undertakes to betray his party friends in a political contest—Substituting our pen for a bayonet and paper wads for bullets are you answered Mr. Stoll?—Goshen Democrat.

That suits us for an answer. It is one that has a clear ring to it. The flippant question receives a regular genuine Democratic answer, and we think the Banner will be a little more careful in the future as to the questions it may desire to ask of Democratic cotemporaries.

From Angola.

ANGOLA, Oct., 18, 1875.

—Always bear in mind that the charter of a person is known by their associates or by the company they keep. Its old but true.

—Oh, talk about your big pumpkins and sqashes, tomatoes and your potatoes and all such things, but who of you have seen large cucumbers and beans grow on apple trees. We have an instance of the kind here.

Last Tuesday morning the ground was frozen two inches deep over the potato-hills and lots of them froze. Potatoes are rotting very fast in this county and the indications are that they will be worth about $1 per bushel next spring.

—Ocorns, hazel nuts, walnuts, hickory nuts and cranberries are plenty.

—The word impartiality should not occur in last week's items, but should read without prejudice or partiality.

—W. H. Donaley, from Indianapolis, is making it rather unpleasant for many of our people in looking up old fines assessed 15 or 16 years ago. Also looking over the books of all our county officers running back to the organization of the county.

Inasmuch as the statistical portion of the Assessors duty was very imperfectly preformed last spring, 1875, it has been suggested that it be taken over again next spring, 1876, as perfect as possible, and in order to do so without extra expense and correctly, too, let every person make out a schedule of what stock of all kinds on hand the 1st of Sept. 1875, and other articles of product as follows:

Number bushels of wheat, corn, oats potatoes, seeds, apples, tons of hay, lbs of beef, pork, lard, wool, No, acres of wheat harvested in 1875, corn, potatoes, and mowing, of all kinds.

I have understood that G. W. Poland, assessor for Pleasant-tp, will take the statistical portion next spring without extra charge, if persons will have a list of their products, &c., made and ready to give when called upon. The attention of assessors should be called to the above as most assurdly the stasistics of last year did not amount to anything.—Any man of common sense could guess at it about as close as it was generally taken. There was some exceptions, of course.

ANGOLA.

BUTLER ITEMS.

BUTLER, Oct., 19th, 1875.

—New postals are getting numerous.

—Parties and parlor dances are in vogue.

—A mild form of epizootic has made its appearance.

—The debating club met last night and received several new members—mostly ladies.

—A South Bend paper says that Jasper Co., Ind. boasts of a female insurance agent. Butler can do the same.

—Mrs. Jno. Carr moved to Ligonier last week. She has a married daughter living there.

—Mr. S. Hawkins' new dwelling house south of the railroad, is almost under cover.

—Elwood Jones has returned from his trip to Colorado, where he went a few months ago in search of health. He has evidently found it as he is looking much better. He says he finds a severe change in climate. When he left Denver they were in the midst of warm weather; arriving here a few days after he found cold, blustering days and frosty nights.

—Considerable excitement in town last night over a fight. Your reporter was not on the scene, pencil in hand as reporters are generaly supposed to be, but heard this much: Joe Price put Jake Moughler, who was somewhat intoxicated, out of his store. Moughler, Jr., then took up fists while Moughler, Sr., commenced proceedings by law vs. Price. Meanwhile Moughler, Jr. and Price came out tie, and Moughler, Sr's. return Price set up cigars; then all shook hands and Moughler, Sr., as he slowly wended way was heard to murmur: "Let by-gones be by-gones," only not nearly so plain as I have expressed it.

Found at Last

Is the universal cry of countless sufferers who have been fortunate enough to give the world's great cough remedy "Dr. Kings New discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds," a trial. The American people have been humbugged long enough with quack nostrums and worthless preparations that are daily flooding the country and they now demand a change. In Dr. King's new discovery, the true remedy is found at last. No one need suffer longer with caughs, colds, Asthma and Bronchitis, as a single trial will convince him. For sale by F. E. Davenport, Druggist, Auburn, Ind. Trial bottle free.

Dr. Ford bought a dog on the Kankakee last August. His name is Beecher. Doc. hesitated some in the purchase on account of the name. Finally with the innocent expression of the dog, together with the scientific wagging of his tail beguiled the Doctor, and Beecher changed masters. It was a little risky to bring Beecher from the country into a town where many dogs aboun of both genders, but something worse has transpired. This innocent dog has been caught killing sheep south of town, and now some think that it was because of his name that he thus disgraced himself. The Docter has disposed of his right and interest in the brute.

The house known best as the Watt property, has been moved to a lot in Rainer's addition.

COME AT LAST!

Our School House in Ashes.

Enough Damage to buy a Steam Fire Engine.

It was but two weeks ago that we made an appeal to our citizens to organize and do something in the way of protecting ourselves from the ravages of fire, and it was clearly demonstrated last Saturday night, that had we but organized a hook and ladder company at that time, we would not have been deploring the loss of our school house to-day.

About half past 9 o'clock on Saturday evening the alarm of fire was given, and flames were soon discovered in the west end of the school house. A few buckets of water would have put out the fire, but no ladders were to be had, and in a short time, the building enveloped in flames. The school furniture was taken out in a hurry—desks broken into fragments—windows and doors smashed in, and, very little saved in good condition The building burned very slowly, and many of the desks could have been taken out whole, but everybody was excited, and good judgment did not prevail.

The cause of the fire is inexplicate. Some think that it caught from a flue on Friday and smothered there until it finally gained headway on Saturday evening. Others think it was brought about through the carelessness of boys who are said to be in the habit of going into the garret, at night, to screen their light from the passersby, and play cards Still others think it was set on fire, in an attempt to free the prisoners in jail.

The building was insured for $3,000, and furniture for $500, in the Ætna of New York, J. L. Davis Agent. Had it happened six months hence, there would have been less cause for regret, but it interrupts our school for the winter.

Fire Notes.

—The teachers did'nt call the roll last Monday morning.

—A barn fell off of Doc. Dancer and scratched its chin.

—The juvenile is happy over his vacation. It would'nt be a bad time to organize a junior base ball club.

—Johnny Slifer saved his own property. He got on his chicken coop and held fast to a hop-pole.

—A Good-man went to the Junction after a ladder, and got back in time to save a black-board pointer.

—The seats were all damaged but one The fellow that took that one out, got outside and sat on it while the building burned,

Dave Morris got his limb slightly hurt by the awkward move of some fellow trying to save a stick of a stove-wood at the fire.

—There was one fellow that used his strength "for the county." He shouldered ten joints of the best stove-pipe and carried it way off to—where he lived.

—Some fellow, with coat and hat off, carried an empty bucket around the crowd until it wore a blister on his left hip, waiting for some one to put water in it.

We noticed a fellow on Jackson street on the top of a house setting on a chair and a bed quilt around him humming, "Old dog Tray was ever faithful—

One of our grocery merchants was reluctant to let his buckets go to the fire Saturday night. And on Monday he had a bill in for what was missing. Enterprise.

—Some fellow bounced a ladder and went on the roof, put his hat over his left ear and right hand in his pocket and brawled out, "water! water!" We have no idea what he wanted with water unless it was to cool his parched—oh, do take care the bee.

—There are some people who never "take an interest" in fires, only as boss. Then we have young men, who call themselves high toned that walk around with both hands in a pair of jean pants pockets, until they get their eye on some gals. They waltz up and say, "By-jink I'm played out. Did your father come to the fire. It't a darn bore, ain't it?

—A reverend gentleman stood a good distance off, leaning himself on a cane and was watching the course of the sparks very closely, when "one of his flock came up," and the minister said:

"I wish I had a gold dollar for each one of those beautiful sparks."

"You do, eh," interrupted a little boot-black.

"Yes, I do, my bright little boy," and he patted him on the head.

"Then you would'nt do nothin' but play pool all winter, would you, mister, said the little boot-black.

"Your a bad boy," said the minister, pushing the little fellow from his side, and looking sharpely at the boot-black and then at his box.

"What do you see so interesting, old skinkflint," and the little fellow turned around.

"Go on away, clear yourself off," said the good man.

Yes, I will, in a horn. Tain't your ground"

"Little boy, come here. Do you ever think of the judgment day."

"Your shoutin' I do, old man. Don't you think I'll SHINE among the angels."

And he run around the other side of the school house to see the bell come down.

SCHOOL BOOKS.

The books which were saved from the fire at the school house, and have not been claimed, are stoerd at Mrs. Puffenburger's. If pupils will come to her house at 2 o'clock on Saturday afternoon Oct., 23rd, the books will be distributed.

All persons who use the third reader whereever residing, may commence attending school at the new house on Monday October 25th.

A room will be obtained in the South part of town for the use of the primary department in that section.

Arrangements are being made for the other grades and will probably be in readiness on Monday, November 8th. It has been thought best to defer the opening of school until that date on account of the county Institute which commences November 1st, and requires the attendance of our teachers.

O. M. RECORD, Supt.

Perhaps now that we have had a fire, there will be an effort made to organize in some shape, and get some means to extinguish fires. A Hook and Ladder Company ought to be organized immediately. We would like to see an engin purchased, but that can not be done without a special levy of 25 cents on each $100 valuation. How many are in favor of that levy? A few months ago a number of our prominent citizens opposed such a levy. We hope they have changed their views, and are now for protection against fire. A good fire department lessens insurance and always saves property.

SENTENCE.—W. E. McIntyre, Charles and Lehmanowski Williard, and Charles Johnson were sentenced last week to serve a term of one year at hard labor in the State Prison at Michigan City. We hope the visit will do the boys some good. Ezry ought to have known better, but it seemed to be his particular aim to get there. His relations and friends have done everything to get him to do right, but he still went on, and now he ends in the State Prison. We don't know much about the other boys, but doubtless they can ascribe their misfortune to bad company and bad habits.

George Hopenix, was convicted of larceny, and was sentenced to 90 days in the County jail. Geo. also wants to graduate in something higher, and if he keeps on his prospects are good. He will be old enough the next time to go to the penitentiary.

DEATHS

DAVIS—Oct. 20th, 1875, at the residence of his father in this place, L. Albert, oldest son of John L. and Louisa Davis, aged 17 years, eight months and six days, having been born at Aurora, Erie Co., N. Y.

Funeral services will be held at the M E. Church to-morrow (Friday) at 2 o'cl'k pm. by Rev. Mr. Johnson, Pastor of the Presbyterian church.

Albert was a bright, genial and interesting young man, beloved by all his young associates and respected by all who knew him. He had been a great, yet patient, sufferer for a year past and most of the time cofined to his room with some affection of the kidneys, and on Tuesday was not considered in any immediate danger, when suddenly the disease seemed to change and locate in the brain and spine producing frequently spasms from which he never recovered. From this sad occurence the young people of the place should take heed, and remember that "the old must die—the young may die."

Mr. and Mrs. Davis have the entire sympathy of our citizens in this their sad and sorrowful bereavement.

THE WEST.

INFORMATION from Macon, Mo., says that it is now a settled fact that gold abounds there in paying quantities. An old miner from California has just completed a prospecting tour, and in four days gathered from the surface of the ground $100. Great excitement prevails over the recent developments, and the hills are covered with prospectors, who, in spite of their inexperience, make fair wages. This new gold region is on the Chariton river, about 21 miles northwest of Macon, and 12 miles from the northern branch of the St. Louis, Kansas City and Northern road....A Salt Lake dispatch reports the discovery of rich gold diggings in the Sweetwater and Big Horn mountains.... In his charge to the Grand Jury at Salt Lake City, the other day, he admonished them to indict a number of individuals implicated in swindling the Territory out of lands and for illegal voting. He particularly urged them to indict every leader, proclaimer or instigator of polygamy, which he denounced as a walking ulcer and degrading crime, fit only for the darkest days of anterior civilization. He said it had existed only by the generosity of the government, but that the government was now in earnest, and the Mormons would soon be made to realize it.... There was a bloody row at a mining camp 120 miles from Denver, Col., last week, 50 or 100 miners, with guns and pistols, playing a lively part. The notorious Maj. He says frontiersmen insist that the Black Hills will be occupied without a treaty, or that the Indians will be stirred up to such an extent that trouble and a treaty must follow. THE SOUTH.

A DIFFICULTY occurred last week in Charleston, Tallahatchie county, Miss., between a colored man named Blackwell, the Sheriff, Alcorn, and other officials of the county. Blackwell was abusing Alcorn and other Republican leaders, and was arrested by Deputy Sheriff Stewart. After being arrested, Blackwell shot George Wall, a white man, dead, and was then pursued by the Sheriff and hemmed up in a back room of a grocery store and shot by the Sheriff and assistant some fifteen or twenty times and mortally wounded....The colored people of Georgia held a convention a Augusta last week, and appointed an Emigration Bureau to gather information of the best localities inside the State of Georgia for negroes in the late insurrectionary counties to emigrate to. THREE colored men were attacked in the streets of New Orleans by unknown white assassins, a few nights ago, one killed outright, another mortally wounded, and the third slightly injured. The affair caused great excitement. Citizens assembled on the streets to denounce the great wrong, and in the afternoon an immense mass meeting was held at the Court House, when the stores were closed, that all might participate. Resolutions were adopted disclaiming all responsibility for the deed, and loudly calling for the prosecution and punishment of the assassins.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL HARRIS, ex-Senator Pease, and United States Attorney Wells, of Mississippi, visited Washington last week, and had a lengthy consultation with Attorney-General Pierrepont in regard to the condition of affairs in their State. They made serious charges against Gov. Ames, and assured the Attorney-General that any departure from the policy of the administration already indicated by the Attorney-General would be disastrous to the interests of the State, and especially would its best citizens deplore the sending of troops.

THE United States Supreme Court commenced its October term on the 11th inst., all of the Justices being present except Miller.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says: "Although this government has repeatedly and emphatically expressed its desire to the Spanish government for the termination of the insurrection in Cuba, and tendered its good offices to produce an accommodation between the contending parties, it has never gone to the extent of the late transatlantic story, by diplomatically threatening to acknowledge the rights of the Cubans in case hostilities be not closed before the 1st of January next."

FINANCE AND TRADE.

Weekly Review of the Chicago Market.

FINANCIAL.

The money market was quiet, orders being less numerous, and the general trade of the merchandise markets less active. Money is plenty at 6@10 per cent., according to time and the class of security offered. Government bonds firm and in fair demand.

BREADSTUFFS.

The grain markets have been quite active during the past week, but at the same time a very unsettled feeling prevailed, and values were irregular and subject to both frequent and quite severe fluctuations. At times prices for wheat were higher and also lower, but the closing quotations for futures do not show any change as compared with the opening, although the premium for cash wheat has been lost. The corn market was active but unsettled, although averaging, and closing 2@3c higher. Demand mainly on speculative account. Oats were rather quiet, but very firm throughout, and higher. The receipts of all kinds of grain were lighter, and fair shipments were reported. New York and Liverpool advices were rather favorable for corn and oats, but not encouraging on wheat. Rye and barley steady, and without important change for the week's average. The markets all closed quite firm.

The following table shows the prices current at the opening and at the close of the past week:

PROVISIONS.

Rather an unsettled feeling prevailed in this market during the past week, and a marked falling off was noticeable in the amount of business transacted. The fluctuations in prices were quite frequent, but not severe, they being confined to rather a small range. The market for mess pork closed at $22.75 for cash, $22.45 seller October, and $19.15@19.20 seller the year. Cash lard closed at $13.37½@13.40, seller the year at $12.05@12.27½, and seller February at $11.05.

SEEDS AND HIGHWINES.

The market closed at $2.00@2.35 for common to prime timothy; $6.00@6.50 for medium clover; $1.20@1.30 for flax, and light sales of fair Hungarian were made at 42½@45c. Prime quotable at about 50c. Highwines were quiet.

COOPERAGE, LUMBER AND WOOD.

Quotations range at $1.00@1.05 for pork barrels, and $1.25@1.30 for lard tierces; $1.90@2.10 for whisky barrels, and 45@55c for flour barrels. The offerings of lumber were quite liberal, and there being a good demand the market ruled fairly active, and prices were steady. Sales ranged at $8.50@14.00 for common to choice boards and strips, $8.75 for joists and scantling, $1.50 for lath, and $2.30@2.75 for shingles. There was no change noticeable in the market for wood; prices remain nominally the same as previously quoted.

PRODUCE.

Butter was quotable at 26@33c for extras, 19@25c for firsts, 17@18c for seconds, and 14@16c for thirds. There was a fair trade reported in broom corn, but the arrivals of new were somewhat larger, and this caused rather an easier feeling to prevail. Quotable at 10@11½c for No. 2 to No. 1 hurl, 7@8c for good stalk braid, 5½@6½c for inferior brush, and 4c for crooked. There was nothing of consequence done in beeswax. Quotable at 26@28c for prime yellow. The offerings of beans were light, and prices for this reason ruled steady. Quotable at $1.80 for prime Eastern medium, and $1.25@1.75 for Western, according to quality. There was a good demand for cider at $6.00@7.00 per brl, and $2.75@3.25 for kegs. The supply was only moderate. Cheese was firm, and somewhat higher, owing to an improved demand and more favorable reports from Eastern markets. Prime sold freely at 11½@12c, and good at 10½@11c. Common grades, however, were rather dull, and these ranged at 4@9c. Dried peas were slow at $1.60 for green, and $1.25@1.40 for yellow, according to quality. Dried fruit was in good demand and higher, with the offerings of all kinds light. Apples quotable at 10@10½c for Eastern, and 8½@9c for Southern. Peaches steady at 12@13c for halves, and 10c for quarters. Feathers were firm at 53@55c for prime live geese, 25@27c for turkey tail, and 3@5c for chicken. Green fruits were fairly active, and for most descriptions prices were firm. Apples sold at $2.50@3.25 for common to choice in lots. Peaches closed at 90c@$1.25 for large boxes, and 75@90c for ⅓-bu baskets. Grapes sold at 20@40c for Michigan baskets, $1.00@1.25 for 20-lb baskets of Ohio Concords, and $2.50 for 36-lb cases. Delaware quotable at $1.75@2.00 for large baskets, and $3.50 for cases. Catawbas sold for about the same prices as Delaware. There was a good demand for all descriptions of game, and prices were firm. Prairie chickens closed at $4.00@4.25 per doz, Mallard ducks at $3.00, and small ducks at $1.50@2.00. Snipe sold at $1.00@1.25. Hops were steady, though the market was dull, and but few sales were made. Quotations range at 4@18c for poor to prime. Hides remain steady and firm at 8½c for green salted and 6½c for damaged. Honey remains quiet at 20@25c per lb for comb and 10@12½c for strained. Potatoes sold slowly at 25@35c per bu, and sweet potatoes at $2.00 for yellow Illinois, and $3.50@4.00 for Jerseys. There was a fair demand for salt at $1.50 for Onondaga and Saginaw fine; $1.70 for ordinary fine without bags. There was but little demand for vegetables, and the market ruled dull at 30@40c per bu for tomatoes, 5@6c per doz for corn, and 75c per brl for onions.

Where to Advertise.

The propensity to seek irregular mediums for advertising is one of the queer things in this business. The prices that some business men will pay for sticking their advertisements in an irregular place, where no one looks for business advertisements, is unaccountable, especially when compared with their unwillingness to pay anything for advertising in the regular channels. They will pay large sums for inserting their business cards in a section of a frame in a hotel, bar-room, street-car, railway station, or in a hotel register, or an almanac, or a guide-book, or annual of one sort or another, or in a theater programme, or in a special advertising sheet, issued when it can get enough to pay.

The by-ways they seek, or that successfully solicit them, are innumerable. Likewise they will spend large sums in printing special circulars, and in postage to send them. In all this they ignore the most essential condition in advertising, namely, that it has character and effect from the mediums through which it is given to the reader. Advertisements thrust into irregular and unbusiness places impress the general mind that the concern is of similar character. On the other hand, an advertisement in a general newspaper of first-rate standing, carries the impression that the advertiser has a standing in his own community, which he is not afraid to show his neighbors, and that he does not shrink from competition with the best of them.

These are the different impressions that are made on all minds by advertisements in a journal of high character and general circulation among the reputable classes, and the same when seen in by-places, and irregular or low channels. Every one finds this in his own feelings, if he will but think on the subject. If any one is going to a place to buy, whether he be a trader or buying for use, and has to seek the dealers through advertisements, where will he look for them? To registers, almanacs, theater bills, frames in railway stations, occasional advertising sheets, or circulars? On the contrary, he looks to the most reputable newspapers of the place, and he thinks that advertisements in these give an assurance of the good standing of the advertiser, and of his business enterprise, and the sufficiency of his stock. —Cincinnati Gazette.

A Town Destroyed by a Waterspout.

The correspondent of the Globe-Democrat at Los Cruces, New Mexico, says a tremendous waterspout suddenly appeared in the hills about one mile back of town, at 5:30 o'clock in the afternoon, Sept. 11, and before the citizens had time to comprehend the impending calamity, it was upon them. The tall, dark columns, composed of water and dust, approached with such velocity that in less than ten minutes from the time of its observance, and before $10 worth of personal property could be saved by any one of the inmates, sixty-three houses had been hurled to the ground. The streets were soon covered to the depth of four or five feet with water, and the current was of such great strength that boulders of large size and corresponding weight were carried away. Two hours later, a rain fell in torrents, and continued several hours. In all the wreck and ruin of falling houses and rushing water, strange to say, not a life was lost. On Sunday the entire population were out repairing damage as much as possible, in order that the homeless might be housed and cared for. The work was kept up on Monday, and everybody began to look cheerful, when at 4 o'clock another waterspout made its appearance, from the exact spot at which its predecessor was first noticed, and came on with equal celerity. Sixteen houses, fortunate enough to escape the first visitation, were tumbled down and their contents totally destroyed. This flood lasted three hours. The damage done by these floods will figure up $150,000 at the least calculation. Four of the houses destroyed were valued at from $5,000 to $10,000 each.

Death in the Dish-Cloth.

A lady says in the Rural World that during this month and next, when some of you are sure to be down with the typhoid fever; when neighbors are neglecting their own work to nurse you; when doctors are hunting in cellars and old drains for the cause, let me whisper in your ear—look to your dish-cloths. If they be black and stiff and smell like a "boneyard," it is enough—throw them in the fire, and henceforth and forever wash your dishes with cloths that are white, cloths that you can see through, and see if you ever have that disease again. There are sometimes other causes, but I have smelled a whole houseful of typhoid fever in one "dish-rag." I had some neighbors once—clever, good sort of folks; one fall four of them were sick at one time with typhoid fever. The doctors ordered the vinegar barrels whitewashed, and threw about forty cents worth of carbolic acid in the swill-pail and departed. I went into the kitchen to make gruel—I needed a dish-cloth, and looked about and found several, and such "rags!" I burned them all, and called the daughter of the house to get me a dish-cloth. She looked round on the tables; "Why," said she, "there was about a dozen here this morning;" and she looked in the wood-box and on the mantlepiece, and felt in the dark corner of the cupboard. "Well," I said, "I saw some old, black, rotten rags lying round and I burned them, for there is death in such dish-cloths as those, and you must never use such again." I "took turns" at nursing that family four weeks, and I believe those dirty dish-cloths were the cause of all that hard work. Therefore, I say to every housekeeper, keep your dish-cloths clean. You may wear your dresses without ironing, your sun-bonnets without elastics—but you must keep your dish-cloths clean. You may only comb your heads on Sundays, you need not wear a collar, unless you go from home—but you must wash your dish-cloth. You may only sweep the floor "when the sign gets right;" the windows don't need washing, you can look out at the door; that spider's web on the front porch don't hurt anything—but, as you love your lives, wash out your dish-cloth. Let the foxtail get ripe in the garden (the seed is a foot deep anyway), let the holes in the heels of your husband's footrags go undarned, let the sage go ungathered, let the children's shoes go two Sundays without blacking, let two hens set four weeks on one wooden egg—but do wash out your dish-cloths. Eat without a tablecloth; wash your faces and let them dry; do without a curtain for your windows, and cake for your tea—but, for heaven's sake, keep your dish-cloths clean.

Letter from Mark Twain.

Mr. Samuel L. Clemens has consented to lecture in Hartford for the benefit of the poor. Following is his letter:

GENTLEMEN: I accede to your request with pleasure. Many months ago I permanently quitted the lecture field, and said I would not appear upon a platform any more unless driven there by a lack of bread. By the spirit of that remark I am debarred from delivering this proposed lecture, and so I fall back upon the letter of it and emerge upon the platform for this last and final time because I am confronted by a lack of bread—among Father Hawley's flock. Most people lie by the spirit and the letter, too, but I am not one of that kind, for I have been very carefully brought up. I wish to impose upon you this condition, that the expenses of this enterprise shall be paid out of four or five private pockets (mine to be one of them), to the end that all of the money that comes in at the door shall go to Father Hawley's needy ones, unimpaired by taxes on its journey. I am glad to know that you are going to put the tickets at $1; for what we are after now is money for people who stand sorely in need of bread and meat, and so the object justifies the price. As this will probably be the last time I shall ever have the opportunity of hearing sound wisdom and pure truth delivered from the platform, I wish to buy a ticket to this lecture, and herewith send money for the purchase. I am aware that I could get in for nothing, and still be acting in a measure honorably; but when I run my lecture over in my mind and realize what a very treasure of priceless information it is, I find I cannot conscientiously accept of a free pass. Respectfully, MARK TWAIN.

The President's Western Trip.

Denver, Col. (Oct. 7), correspondence of the Chicago Times: "The Presidential party returned here this afternoon from Southern Colorado. The Denver and Rio Grande railroad placed a special at their service. Ranchmen and miners came to Pueblo from thirty and forty miles around about, to see the President. The party spent last night at Manitou, our fashionable spa, at the foot of Pike's Peak, and this morning they were driven in carriages to Glenn Eyrie, Garden of the Gods, and other natural spots. Grant said the wonderful scenery was a perfect revelation to him, and declared his intention to spend the whole month of September, 1876, there, with his family. At Colorado Springs, before the train left for Denver, 400 school children, besides many citizens, called upon and shook hands with Grant. During the trip, the President presented ex-Gov. Hunt with a $5,000 stallion for his stud farm near Denver. The President held a reception here at the Grand Central Hotel, this evening. Three thousand people shooks hands with him."

Immigration---A Few Statistics.

The report of the Bureau of Statistics shows that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, there arrived in the United States 227,498 immigrants, which is 180,149 below the number that arrived in 1874, and less than one-half the number that arrived in 1873. This large falling off is attributed to the continued depression of trade and the prostration of industries. The economic value of each immigrant is placed at $800, which makes a loss to the material wealth of the country during the year 1875, as compared with 1874, of $144,119,200. Compared with the year 1873, the loss is $186,844,000, a sum $30,000,000 in excess of the aggregate customs receipts for the last fiscal year. The material loss for 1875, as compared with 1874, is $35,000,000 greater than the receipts from internal revenue during that year, and lack but $13,000,000 of being equal to the aggregate receipts from customs for the same period. The loss sustained during the last two fiscal years, compared with 1873, estimating the economic value of the immigrants alone, and not considering what would have been added to the material wealth in two years by their labor, aggregates a sum which would more than pay the interest on the national debt for three years.—Washington Letter.

How Farmers' Wives Break Down.

A woman tells this story to the Boston Cultivator, and many can testify of their own knowledge that it is very sadly true: "I can get forty women to marry me, within fifty miles of this village," said a man to me the other day, "but I can't find a woman anywhere who will come and help my wife, and she is breaking down every day." Yes, breaking down! Can anyone look in her ashy white face, and not read the story written there of hard work, in season and out of season? She has four little girls—the eldest six years, and the youngest three months. Her husband keeps six cows, and cultivates a farm of a hundred acres, employing two hired men to aid him. Three meals must be cooked daily for a family of seven, not counting the baby; four children dressed and cared for; the milk of six cows attended to, and butter made, while the weekly washing and ironing must be done in some way. From four o'clock in the morning until ten and sometimes eleven at night, one pair of hands and one pair of feet perform this labor, and now the tired body rebels and says: "This cannot be endured."

Let me tell you of another case: The farmer and his wife have three children, all under eight years. He employs two hired men, boarding them, and keeps eleven cows. A woman comes in to do the washing and ironing, but that is all the assistance the wife receives, except the few steps her children can save her. She must rise at four o'clock and prepare breakfast, so that her husband and the "hands" can be in the mowing field by five. Every other day, however, one of the hired men remains to do the churning for her; but this favor was not allowed her until she had threatened to call in the doctor, to declare to her husband her inability to do such hard work. Then it was reluctantly conceded, although two forty-pound firkins of butter were packed each week; for our farmer prides himself upon his herd of cows—pure blood Alderneys—and sells his butter at the highest rates, carefully depositing its proceeds in the bank, and rarely giving his wife so much as a five dollar bill of it. His last injunction to the "hand" as he departs to the field is: "John, come just as quick as you can. Don't let Mrs. M. keep you for anything else. Hay can't wait for woman's work." There are dishes to wash, milk to skim, pans to scald, beds to make, children to dress, baby to nurse, rooms to sweep and dinner to cook over the boiling hot stove—and one woman to do it all!

An Evasive Female Brought Up Before His Honor.

"Susan Wall, do you plead guilty to the charge of disturbing the peace?" inquired the Court of a long female in a brown dress and a solemn looking bonnet.

"I might, to-morrow," she replied.

"But you won't to-day?"

"I shan't say that I won't."

"Well, did you strike your husband with a club?"

"It wasn't a stone, sir."

"What started the fuss?"

"I didn't say there was a fuss," she replied.

"Did you have any trouble with your husband, Mrs. Wall?"

"I didn't say I had a husband!"

"See here, Susan, I can't have any more fooling. I want you to return plain answers to my questions. Was there a fuss?"

"I didn't say there wasn't."

"Did you hit your husband?"

"I'm not prepared to say I did or didn't."

"I'm prepared, your Honor!" exclaimed the husband, as he came forward and exhibited a fresh scalp wound. "Here's where she hit me!"

"You had trouble, eh?"

"Yes, sir. She wanted a new corset, and I says that this is to be a hard winter and we'd better have taters than corsets, and she says I was the meanest man in Detroit and hit me here with a club."

"What have you got to say to this, Mrs. Wall?"

"I may say something or I may not," she replied.

"Well, I'll give you thirty days in which to make up your mind. Go in and sit down beside Mr. Ferguson and talk about the grasshoppers until the Maria drives up."—Detroit Free Press.

Fall Bonnets.

Fashionable French milliners have already modified the extremely large bonnets sent out at the beginning of the season, and now make a graceful bonnet of admirable proportions and smaller size. The flaring aureole brim is retained, but the crown is smaller, and the cottage sides fit the head so closely that the bonnet scarcely needs an elastic for holding it on. The ribbon strings that we recorded as a sensible fashion, it seems are not to serve their natural purpose of tying the bonnet under the chin, but are to be crossed behind the head and passed around the neck as a drapery for the neck, instead of the black lace scarfs lately worn. Black tulle and lace are used for this purpose as well as ribbon, and this is the only way in which black lace appears upon the bonnet. Ecru cashmere lace is seen at all the best millinery houses, but is most sparingly used. Very full face trimmings, usually of velvet chiffonne—that is, in irregular loops, knots, half-bows, rosettes that are placed on one side, and in many odd curves a la Renaissance—are in all the new bonnets. The stylish flowers are full of soft tufts of roses, or carnations, or artemisias, with much brown foliage, mossy buds, pine cones, burs and unblown buds. The fashion of a drooping cluster of flowers low behind on the left side is about to be revived; also that of having variegated clusters of roses—pink, red and yellow—in a single bunch, as if from grafted bushes. More than anything else feathers are used, and the object of the milliner seems to be to place them in new and capricious fashion.—Harper's Bazar.

GOSSIP OF THE DAY.

George Alfred Townsend is authority for the statement that Mr. Abell, of the Baltimore Sun, is the richest newspaper publisher in America, not excepting Bennett or Childs.

Mr. J. H. Nicolay, who was for some years private secretary of Abraham Lincoln, is writing a life of the late President. He claims that it will contain more extended and authentic details of Mr. Lincoln's life than have heretofore been published.

Chief Engineer Wood, U. S. N., has filed a caveat on an invention, consisting of a power derived by the agency of carbonic acid gas obtained by means of electricity and galvanism. Wood claims there are great possibilities in his motive power.

Vice-President Wilson has been counseled by his medical advisers to abandon his intention to lecture this season, as it would prove too serious a strain on his constitution if undertaken in addition to his official duties and the completion of his book.

It has been proposed to put a stop to body-snatching by interring with the corpse a quantity of some explosive material, such as nitro-glycerine, dualing or the like. The general adoption of this plan would make it unprofitable for insurance companies who take risks on the lives of medical students and resurrectionists.

Dr. Linderman, Director of the Mint Bureau, is now perfecting measures for the coinage of silver pieces to take the place of the fractional currency now in circulation. It is a big job, and will require 120,000,000 dimes, 40,000,000 quarters, and 30,000,000 half dollars to replace the notes of these denominations. It will take about two years to coin the 120,000,000 dimes, unless all other work is suspended at the mint.

Capt. Webb, the marvelous swimmer who lately crossed the English channel by a sheer exercise of muscle, has been examined by a distinguished surgeon, who reports the results in the Lancet. The Captain is said to be 5 feet 8 inches in height; weight, 203 pounds; chest-measure, 41 inches; biceps, 13¼ inches; forearm, 11½ inches. One remarkable thing about the Captain's physical development is his weight, which is extraordinary for an athlete, and shows, as the surgeon says, the presence of considerable other tissue beside muscle.

We are to have a royal visitor next year, who will be heartily welcomed—Dom Pedro II., Emperor of Brazil, who has secured the sanction of his Chamber of Deputies to a proposed absence of eighteen months in Europe and the United States, taking in the Philadelphia centennial, of course. Dom Pedro has proved himself the most intelligent ruler that South America has ever seen, and Brazil has made steady and rapid progress through his reign. He has always shown himself a warm friend of the United States, and a very hearty respect for the man has grown up on our part.

The folly of placing loaded fire-arms in the hands of fools received a sad illustration at Beaver Dam, Wis., the other day. A young man, living with a farmer named Allen, took a musket and started for a neighboring farm to secure a job of threshing. As he entered the house on his return he playfully pointed his gun at Miss Allen, saying, "I will shoot you." The gun was fired, the contents entering her body above the left lung, making an opening large enough to admit a man's fist, resulting in instant death. Miss Allen was 23 years old and a very estimable young lady. It is a pity there is no law by which such lunatics can be punished.

Several years ago Gen. McClellan was appointed Chief Engineer of the Dock Department of New York city, and he began the construction of a system by driving piles and placing thereon heavy rocks. In 1873 McClellan resigned, and was succeeded by Gen. Chas. K. Graham, who made material alterations in the plans of McClellan, and a recent examination has shown that the docks built by Graham are practically worthless. Work has been discontinued in consequence. The Dock Commissioners were originally authorized to spend $3,000,000 annually in the construction of these works, which sum, it is now asserted, would have been practically wasted.

Thirty-one years ago Albert Hall, a traveling salesman of New York city, deserted his wife and two children, and nothing was afterward learned of him until a few weeks since, when he called on his former wife in a very cavalier manner, to find that after a lapse of ten years she had married a second time, and to a more constant spouse. One of the children he had abandoned was yet living, and the father of four children. Hall, Sr., gave no account of his wanderings, save to say that he had done a little of everything except drinking and getting married. After tarrying a few days in the neighborhood of his old home he departed in a mysterious manner, without notice and without farewell.

Now that the treaty negotiations for the purchase or lease of the Black Hills country have failed, the question naturally arises, What is the government going to do about it? It is bound by the terms of the treaty of 1869 to keep the whites out of the Sioux reservation, which is reserved exclusively for Indian occupation. Will it act in good faith, and drive out the miners who are already digging for gold in the vicinity of Harney's Peak, and keep all others out, or will it permit the frontier adventurers to violate the treaty and precipitate a border war? It is quite probable that the government will be powerless to prevent emigration to that section entirely, but it can, to a great extent, keep the terms of the covenant intact.

The long and shocking catalogue of fiendish murders recorded in the criminal annals of this country furnish no parallel to the tragedy recently enacted at Pembroke, in the State of New Hampshire. The details of the horror sound more like the creation of a vivid imagination than actual, living occurrences, and as we read them it seems almost impossible of belief that there could exist a being born of woman capable of such a foul and unnatural deed. The victim of this murder—Miss Josie Longmaid, a pretty and accomplished girl of 17 years, and, as we are told, a general favorite in the community—left the house of her father in the morning, as was her wont, to attend the Pembroke Academy, a mile and a half distant, but it appears she never reached her destination. Failing to return, as usual, in the evening, search was instituted, and her headless body was found in a clump of bushes near the roadside, shockingly mutilated, and her clothing torn to shreds and saturated with blood. A few feet from the body was the hat, neatly trimmed with flowers, which the murdered girl had worn. The lining on the right side at the back had two large stains of blood, which seem to indicate that she had been struck and wounded on the head. The next morning a large party continued the search for the head, which was found about seventy-five rods from where the body had lain, in the same piece of woods. Near by lay an oak stick stained with blood, with which the poor girl had evidently been clubbed to death. The head, when found, was wrapped in the water-proof cloak which Miss Longmaid had worn when starting for school. The head had been cut clearly off, as if severed by a sharp instrument, and physicians who examined the remains are unanimous in the opinion that decapitation was performed before life was extinct. She might have been unconscious, or partly so, when the villain put the murderous knife to her throat. This conclusion is arrived at because of the profuse evidence of her having bled freely.

The Laporte Chronicle says: "A convict named Kistler, who was sentenced to two years imprisonment in the Michigan City Penitentiary, at the December term of the Marion County Court, for blackmailing, passed through Laporte, in charge of Rev. Mr. Ragsdale, Chaplain of the prison, on Monday, en route for Indianapolis, having been granted a new trial."

A timely discovery by the turnkey at the County Jail at Terre Haute prevented a general jail delivery one night last week. He had noticed a strange noise for several nights, and upon searching found a number of tools in a large cell, where the inmates had attempted to get through to daylight by cutting out some iron bands which held a large stone. They were nearly through when discovered.

Two men named Yates and Fitch have been arrested at Lafayette on a charge of attempting to levy blackmail on Mr. Crouse, of Wayne township, who was a candidate for State Senator from Tippecanoe county at the last election. By some means Mr. Crouse was induced to answer a circular advertising counterfeit money, and ordered some samples, when he was arrested by the two confederates, who claimed to be government detectives.

Recent changes in postal affairs in this State: Offices Established—River, Huntington county, John O. The friends of Mr. Samuel Oberholtzer, of Allen county, will probably be a little careful as to the hour at which they visit him in the future. One night last week Miles Updegraff, a neighbor, called upon Mr. O. and attempted to wake him by knocking at the front door. Upon hearing the noise, the latter arose, mistaking his friend for some one trying to break into the house, got a gun down, and fired a charge, taking effect in the cheek of the former, inflicting a very dangerous and probably fatal wound.

Owen county has several curiosities. At Catarnet are the falls wonderful to behold, and three miles south of town is a cave which is perhaps a mile and a half long. Just below it is what is called the natural bridge. It is a high ridge with deep gullies on either side, and is the only place where wagons can pass through that section for several miles each way. Near this natural bridge is what is known as the potter's pond, which is full of representations of pots, etc.

Thomas Stout, cattle dealer, living near Newmarket, Montgomery county, bought $16,000 worth of cattle of Darnell & Carver, of Putnam county, about two weeks ago, giving a check for $5,000 on the First National of Crawfordsville for part payment. He then shipped the cattle from Indianapolis to Pittsburgh and Buffalo, receiving advances of $10,000 from the railroads, and has not been heard from since. He had no money in the bank, and, therefore, the check was worthless. He is supposed to have "skipped." Stout enjoyed a good reputation.

OCEAN TELEGRAPHY.

How Messages are Sent and Received Under the Sea.

He (the ocean telegraph operator), says the Boston Herald, taps the "key" as in a land telegraph, only it is a double key. It has two levers and knobs instead of one. The alphabet used is substantially like the Morse alphabet; that is, the different letters are represented by a combination of dashes and dots. For instance, suppose you want to write the word "boy." It would read like this: "— . . . ——— — . ———" B is one dash and three dots; O, three dashes; and Y, one dash, and one dot, and three dashes. Now, in the land telegraph, the dashes and the dots would appear on the strip of paper at the other end of the line, which is unwound from a cylinder and perforated by a pin at the end of the bar or armature. If the operator could read by sound, we would dispense with the strip of paper, and read the message by the "click" of the armature as it is pulled down and let go by the electric magnet.

The cable operator, however, has neither of these advantages. There is no paper to perforate, no "click" of the armature, no armature to "click." The message is read by means of a moving flash of light upon a polished scale produced by the "deflection" of a very small mirror, which is placed within a "mirror galvanometer," which is a small brass cylinder two or three inches in diameter, shaped like a spool or bobbin, composed of several hundred turns of small wire wound with silk to keep the metal from coming in contact. It is wound or coiled exactly like a bundle of new rope, a small hole being left in the middle about the size of a common wooden pencil. In the center of this is suspended a very thin, delicate mirror about as large as a kernel of corn, with a correspondingly small magnet rigidly attached to the back of it. The whole weighs but a little more than a grain, and is suspended by a single fibre of silk much smaller than a human hair, and almost invisible. A narrow horizontal scale is placed within a darkened box two or three feet in front of the mirror, a narrow slit being cut in the center of the scale to allow a ray of light to shine upon the mirror from a lamp placed behind said scale, the little mirror in turn reflecting the light back upon the scale. This spot of light upon the scale is the index by which all messages are read. The angle through which the ray moves is double that traversed by the mirror itself; and it is therefore, really equivalent to an index four or six feet in length without weight.

To the casual observer there is nothing but a thin ray of light, darting to the right and left with irregular rapidity; but to the trained eye of the operator every flash is replete with intelligence. Thus the word "boy," already alluded to, would be read in this way: One flash to the right and three to the left is B. Three flashes to the right is O. One to the right, one to the left, and two more to the right is Y, and so on. Long and constant practice makes the operators wonderfully expert in their profession, and enables them to read from the mirror as readily and as accurately as from a newspaper.

An Enormous Gun.

A London correspondent of the Chicago Inter-Ocean says:

"The new 81-ton gun was tested yesterday without the slightest misadventure, the iron monster proving all that was expected. Six rounds were fired with charges varying from 170 pounds to 240 pounds of powder, and with projectiles weighing 1,258 pounds. The length of the gun is 26 feet 9 inches; the external diameter at the muzzle being 25 inches, and at the breach 6 feet. The gun is made of five coils, and the bore, which is 24 feet long, has a primary caliber of 14.5 inches, but which is afterward to be increased to 16 inches by successive borings. The rifling consists of 11 grooves, having a gaining twist of from 0 to 1 in 35 calibers. Each grain of powder used for this gun is an irregular cube of an inch and a half in diameter, and the charge of 250 pounds would fill a sack six feet high. This monster is supposed to have a range of about eight miles, and from this convenient distance can drop 1,260 pounds of iron on the favorite bunion of an enemy with the most perfect ease. In bringing the gun to the firing ground the rails over which it traversed split and sank as the enormous weight passed over them, and at one spot the carriage got off the track, but was replaced after some hours work, without any damage to its mighty burden. The success with which this gun has been brought to a successful completion, encourages the Woolwich authorities to hope that before long they will be able to turn out a 160-ton gun, carrying a 2,500-pound shot, that will sink an iron-clad as readily at a mil distance as the ram of the Iron Duke did the Vanguard."

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Harvest Days.

The lake in the forest glows
With the water-flag's golden-lipped vases,
And sunshine and shadow drape o'erhead
Their silvery, changing, filmy laces;
To and fro the foxglove sways
Its bells, claret, hued and gay,
And the honeysuckle o'er the gnarled oak
Winds many a fragrant spray;
While out in the sunny meadows
The harvesters sing and toss the hay.

The hawthorns that grow in the hedges
Are veiled o'er with creamy lace,
And deep in a mossy pillow
The pimpernel hides its tiny pink face.
Purple and orange vetches bloom
In royal splendor by the way,
And golden-banded wild bees
Go booming about all day;
While out in the sunny meadows
The harvesters sing and toss the hay.

The purple thyme breathes out its honey
Under the sun's warm glance,
And the snowy bells of the bindweed
Lie still in a perfumed trance;
Overhead, in the amethyst heavens,
Larks flutter and chant a merry lay,
And silvery butterflies cleave the air
Like wandering starlight ray—
While out in the sunny meadows
The harvesters sing and toss the hay.

Around the Farm.

A Kansas man boasts of a crop of wheat which yielded fifty-two and four-fifths bushels to the acre.

A Georgia farmer has raised from one grain of wheat 191 stalks and 190 heads. The largest head has 185 grains. This is the most remarkable reproduction on record.

The champion farmer is Michael Sullivan, of Ford county, Ill., who has 22,000 acres in wheat and 6,000 in oats and flax. He has 400 teams at work, and no less than 800 persons on his place.

A farmer residing at Farmington, Mass., has just found a pair of spectacles that he lost in his potato-field four years ago embedded in an early rose potato, which probably took them for its eyes.

The San Francisco Bulletin says: "Cutting up the great ranchos has been the policy of their owners for the past year or two. During that time half a dozen or more of the largest ranchos in the southern counties, where most of these reserves exist, have been divided into small lots convenient for settlements and thrown upon the market.

The following rule is given for telling whether a mare is with foal or not: Take a rope, strap, or string, and measure around the girth where the harness goes on the back and the belly-band buckles up; then measure again, just forward of the hind legs around the body. If the distance is greater in the latter instance than in the former, it may be safely concluded that the mare is with foal.

When a cow's bag becomes swelled a simple and generally effectual remedy is found in applying fresh lard, which should be thoroughly and repeatedly rubbed in. Some people use beef brine instead of lard, with good results. Plenty of rubbing without any application will often effect a cure. The calf should be allowed to suck until a cure is effected, and if a portion of the milk is drawn from the cow before he is given his rations, so he will be obliged to do a good deal of stripping, he will help to reduce the swelling.

Pronounced success in farming often comes from learning to grow a large crop at less expense than any one else can. Occasionally a farmer may make a good strike, and make money, by taking hold of a new thing and pushing it for a year or two then dropping it. But there is more often failures than success in this method. The man who makes the most steady gains is he who takes up a plan and sticks to it through thick and thin. When everybody goes into one product and creates a greater supply than there is a demand for it, and the majority leave it for something else, he sticks to it, and in the long run, makes money.

The Poultry World tells of a very successful poultry-keeper whose hens lay the year round, and attributes a good share of his success to the free use of milk as food. Not one particle of meat or scraps is given; and but the least trifle of vegetable food is fed, in the shape of boiled potatoes, about once a week. Abundance of grain is allowed, of various sorts, ground and unground, but never cooked; and plenty of unburned oyster shells, pounded, are at all times accessible. They have a pailful of skimmed milk every day, so that they can help themselves to all they want, no other drink being provided. The value of the milk is said to be equal to three cents per quart for feeding poultry.

About the House.

To Make Glossy Starch.—Add to each pint of starch ready for use a teaspoonful each of epsom salts and fine clear gum arabic.

Cure for Sick Headache.—One-half teaspoonful of the best ground ginger, as much soda as will cover a three-cent piece; on this pour a wineglass full of cold water, and drink.

Buckwheat Cakes.—One cup of sugar, one cup and a half of cream, one cup of milk, teaspoonful of soda, a little salt. Mix very stiff with buckwheat flour. Put in buttered tins and bake.

Glue for Ready Use.—To any quantity of glue use common whisky instead of water. Put both together in a bottle, cork tight, and set it away for three or four days. It will then be fit for use without the application of heat. It will be found a useful and handy article in every household.

To Remove Stains of Iodine.—Many urge that the tincture of iodine is not easily eradicated from the skin, and so will not use it. "If a few drops of carbolic acid be added to the tincture," says a medical journal, "it will not stain; moreover, the tincture itself is made more efficacious."

Vermin.—If you are troubled with ants, water bugs, or insects of any description, powdered borax laid in their haunts will dismiss them to a new ranging ground. It is also desirable to sift it into the joints of bedsteads in houses or rooms which have become infested with these most disgusting of all insects.

Rice Pudding Without Eggs.—Put into a well-buttered dish half a pound best Carolina rice, simply washed; pour on it three pints of cold milk; sweeten and flavor to taste; put a little butter and nutmeg on the top to brown; bake two and a half hours in a slow oven, on which much of the success of the pudding depends.

An egg spread on toast is food fit for a King, if Kings deserve better food than anybody else, which is doubtful. Fried eggs are less wholesome than boiled ones. An egg dropped in hot water is not only a clean and handsome but a delicious morsel. Most people spoil the taste of their eggs by adding pepper and salt. A little sweet butter is the best dressing. Eggs contain much phosphorous, which is supposed to be useful to those who use their brain much.

Useful Hints for Every Day.

TO CLEAN BLACK KIDS.

Take a teaspoonful of salad oil, drop a few drops of ink in it, and rub it over the gloves with the tip of a feather, then let them dry.

TO PREVENT TIN RUSTING.

Rub fresh lard over every part of the dish, and then put it in a hot oven and heat it thoroughly. Thus treated, any tinware may be used in water constantly, and remain bright and free from rust indefinitely.

LIGHT RYE TEA-CAKES.

One pint of sweet milk, two eggs, a teaspoonful of brown sugar, and a large pinch of salt. Add enough rye flour to make it as stiff as common griddle-cake bake batter. Bake half an hour in "gem" pans. Serve hot or cold, as required.

CHICKEN CHEESE.

Did you, reader, ever eat any? We like it. Boil two chickens till tender; take out all the bones and chop the meat fine; season to taste with salt, pepper and butter; pour in enough liquor they are boiled in to make moist. Mold it into any shape you choose, and, when cold, turn out and cut into slices. It is an excellent traveling lunch.

TREATMENT OF BURNS.

Hall's Journal of Health says: On the instant of the accident, plunge the part under cold water. This relieves the pain in a second, and allows all hands to become composed. If the part cannot be kept under water, cover it over with dry flour an inch deep or more. In many instances nothing more is needed after the flour, simply let it remain until it falls off, when a new skin will be found under. In severer cases, while the part injured is under water, simmer a leek or two in an earthen vessel, with half their bulk in hog's lard, until the leeks are soft, then strain through a muslin rag. This makes a greenish-colored ointment, which, when cool, spread thickly on a linen cloth, and apply it to the injured part. If there are blisters, let out the water. When the part becomes feverish and uncomfortable, renew the ointment, and a rapid, painless cure will be the result, if the patient, meanwhile, lives exclusively on fruits, coarse bread and other light, loosening diet.

Execution of an Octogenarian.

Galveston, Texas, (Oct. 5) correspondence of the St. Louis Globe: "The Galveston papers of to-day contain details of the hanging of Nelson Mitchell for the murder of two men named Truitt in Hood county, and the death of Jeff Mitchell, who was trying to convey poison to his father in jail. Mitchell, who is a man of eighty years of age, made several attempts to commit suicide on Wednesday night by hanging himself with a chain he had wrenched from the door, but his heart failed him. He spent the night in cursing the Sheriff and officers, and on Thursday night a guard was placed in his cell to prevent self-destruction. On Thursday night the guard about the jail discovered an armed man crawling toward the jail, and, not knowing how many others there might be, fired. In the morning the lifeless body of Jeff Mitchell, youngest son of the doomed man, aged about twenty-one, was found on the ground, the whole top of his head blown off. He was armed with a double-barreled shot-gun, and had a brace of Colt's revolvers buckled around him, and all heavily loaded. In his pocket was found a large vial of laudanum, wrapped with rags, which he was evidently conveying to his father. The old man asked that the body be brought into the jail, that he might see his son, and was much affected. Near by his horse was hitched, his hat and shoes tied to the saddle. The execution was attended by 5,000 people. A little after 1 o'clock the wagon, containing the doomed man seated on his coffin, proceeded to the gallows, the rope was tied, and the execution gone through with."

Incident of the Gulf Storm.

A gentleman living up the bay says that a negro man with his wife and four children were forced to take a tree to save themselves during the late storm. The tree swayed to and fro with the violence of the wind, and threatened to fall with its heavy burden. The old couple concluded that some one must be sacrificed to save the rest. After a consultation the old woman said that she was not prepared to die, and urged the old man to drop himself into eternity. But he, too, wasn't ready, and the matter was compromised by launching the two youngest children into the surging waters. A few hours after they were rescued, and the old negro told the story himself to those who saved him.—Galveston (Tex.) News.

An Old Man on a Good Sort of Frolic.

Uncle Reuben Mock leaves in a few days for a big hunt and fishing spree in the State of Texas. Uncle Reuben is 85 years old, and, like Moses, his eye is not dim nor his natural vigor abated. He has a gun made by himself, lock, stock and barrel, which he will use on his trip. It is of elegant workmanship, carries a ball weighing forty to the pound, and Uncle Reuben can plant that ball in the center of the target nine times out of every ten shots. Woe to the buffalo and deer that stand in the range of his vision. Uncle Reuben thinks Texas only a neighborhood hunt—distance nothing—travel not a circumstance.—Springfield Kentuckian.

TEAS—Our Tea trade is the wonder of the country. No one ever dreamt such a trade could be bui up. We sell more chests daily than some houses do pounds, and still our trade is increasing. It is a uncommon thing for us to purchase two hundred chests at a time, and here is the great element of our success. As by purchasing such larger quantities direct of the Importers we save our consumer, at least the three extra profits of jobbers, speculator and wholesale grocer, who make 10 to 20 cents per pound. This our customers get the benefit of. No middle men with us. As with teas, so with sugar coffee, syrup and all other gohds. No secret---it is simply in purchasing all our goods at first hands and re-selling direct to our customers at small margin, and save them at least 20 to 40 cents a pound on tea and 20 per cent on all other goods.

THE PHŒNIX TILE MACHINE.

It is well adapted to the wants of Tile Makers. It is usually driven by the power of two horses. It delivers tile at the two opposite ends of the machine. It may be converted into a single delivery machine. It has a simple and ready means of taking up the wear on the plunge head and sides of the chamber, thus correcting all leakage of mud, and adding years of service to the machine. It makes from 800 to 7-10 rods of tile per day. It is fully warranted. It may readily be adapted to Steam Power. The tiles are finished with smooth ends. Forms and Trucks at moderate prices.

JOHN L. DAVIS,

Not A Resident

From The Detroit Free Press.

"I belong to Chicago," was Maria Morton's answer, as she faced the desk.

"I can't help that."

"And I've got my trunk packed to go out to-night."

Silence.

"And I'm going if it kills me."

More silence.

"And I'm going to have a lawyer if this trial goes on."

Still eating his apple.

"And I'm going to see if the police had any right to arrest me."

Last bite.

"If they hadn't I'll make it cost 'em $10,000 apiece."

"Maria Morton," says the court, as he threw the apple-core away and wiped his chin. "do you realize that you are standing in the shadder of destruction," she answered.

"I want a lawyer," she answered.

"Do you realize that the brink of an awful legal chasm is at your feet, Maria?"

She looked down, failed to see the brink, and replied:

"I tell you I'm going to Chicago to-night."

"Life is very uncertain, Miss Morton. We are here to-day—to-morrow we may be in Chicago, or we may not. As healthy as I am myself, I may be dead before I reach home and get away with my breakfast. Little did you think when you were prowling around last night, smashing windows and raising disturbances, that the morning sun would shine upon your cell."

"It took three of 'em to bring me!" she exclaimed in tones of triumph.

"But it will only take one to carry you away. Go in and take seat number three on the blue sawhorse, and when the Maria drives around don't be backward about getting in. The sentence is thirty days."

"Can I see a lawyer?"

"There are four or five right where you are going."

"I'll have damages for this—you hear me?"

"I do hear you, and make it sixty days."

"You do, eh? Well I'll make somebody prance for this."

"I inadvertenly put the figure 9 wrong side up. It now reads "90" Miss Morton and if I were you I wouldn't say anything more. In about a-month more husking-bees will be all the rage, and you won't have any invitation if you keep on."

She clinched her hands, gritted her teeth and wanted to sass back, but Bijah induced her not to. Court being adjourned, the black Maria drove around, and a boy with a stone-bruise on his heel played the jewsharp while the other sang:

"It's kinder sad to hear her cry,
And it makes a fellow blue;
But when she up and sassed the court
What could his Honor do?"

A Little Game of Draw.

The Virginia (Nevada) Chronicle tells this story;

It was a pleasant and right sociable little party that sat around a little pine table in the rear of a C street grocery store night before last. There were five men in the party, and they sat on candle boxes, end up. A candle illuminated the board, enabling the reporter, who had dropped in to get a pound of sugar to see that each man had a number of white beans in front of him. They were playing cards, and kept pushing from one to the other a big jack-knife, which they called the "buck," probably from the fact that it had a buckhorn handle may be, perhaps. One man seemed to be doing most of the talking. His name was Sam Griggles. He talked like a philosopher, and the reporter sat down on a beer keg and listened to him.

"I tell you there is no use talking. The best thing a man can do is to get married. Gimme three and bet you five beans. Bein' single has its advantages. See it and raise you six. But the comfort a man takes in havin' a wife and a home of his own can't be told. Raise ten, eh? See it, an' call. Dammit, you've got the pot again, Jim, put a bit of ice in mine an' a dish o' bitters. Yes, boys, a wife's a good thing, you bet your bottom dollar. Whew? Ten to come in! All right Jim, straddle your blind. Now when a man gets through his days work an' feels tired an' worn out, what's nicer'n to go home an' find a good little wife waitin' fer you ready to throw her arms around your neck—Oh Lord."

A hush fell upon the corner grocery as she walked in with a shawl over her head and brought him one on the side of the head that sent his cards flying and upset his cocktail. Neither of them spoke a word, but he looked as if he had lost one foot of his six as he followed her out.

A Rustic Courtship

I hitched my cher close to her an' shet my eyes an' said:

"Sal, your the very gal I've been hankerin' after for a long time. I lov you all over, from the soul of your foot to the hed of your crown, an' I don't keer who knows it, an' ef you say so we'll be jined in the holy band of padlock.—"Epluribus onions, sick temper tarantuula non compismentus," world without end," sez I, I felt as thou' I had thrown up an alligater, I felt so relieved."

With that she fotched a scream, an' arter awhile she said:

"Peter!"

"What is it, Sally?"

"Yes," sed she, hidin' her face.

You may depend upon it, I felt orful good.

"Glory! I must hollow, Sal, or I'll bust wide open, Hooray! hooray I can jump over a ten rail fense; I can do any thing a fellow could or ort to do."

With this I sorter sloshed myself down beside her an' clinched the bargain with a kiss. Talk about your molasses, talk about your nite-blooming serious, they warnt no where; you couldn,t have got me ni' 'em, they would have tasted sour arter that. O, broom straws with lasses on 'em.

If Sal's daddy hadn't bawled out, "It's time all honest folks was in bed," I do believe I'd stayed all nite.

Taking the Risk

From the Vicksburg Herald

The other day a colored resident of Vicksburg found a bottle of whisky in the suburbs of the city, and halting a pedestrian he inquired:

"Dats whisky, ain't it?"

"Smells like whisky, I guess it is,' was the reply.

"An' dar ain't no pizen in it?"

"Well, there may be, I can't tell; I shouldn't want to drink it."

"If dar was pizen I'd be a dead nigger eh?"

"You would."

"An' if dar wasn't any pizen I'd be wastin a pint of good whisky."

"Yes."

The finder turned the bottle over and over, smelled of its contents, three or four times, and finally made ready to drink saying:

"Dars heaps of pizen lyin' around loose, but dars also heaps of niggers in Vicksburg, an' I'se-gwan to tip up de bottle an' run de chances!"

Commit the following to memory and you will have at your "tongue's end" the names of the monarchs of England, from the time of the conquest down to the present date:

First, william the Norman, then Henry, his son,
Henry, Stephen and Henry, then Richard and John.
Next, Henry the Third; Edwards one two and three;
And again, after Richard, if rightly I guess,
Two Henrys, six Edwards, Queen Mary and Bess-
Then Jamie, then Scot; then Charles whom they slew;
Then followed Clomwell, another Charles too.
Next, James, called the second, ascended the throne;
Then William and Mary, together came on;
Till Anne, George four and fourth William all past,
God sent them Victoria, the youngest and last.

Mistook Her Man.

A rather unusual occurance took place on a street of Macon Sunday night. A young gentleman was quietly walking along homeward smoking a cigar, and wholly unapprehensive of any impending danger. He saw not far ahead a lady coming towards him, and with customary politeness he gave her the sidewalk to pass. Instead of passing, however, she halted in front of him and rudely slapped him in the face and then began to claw him at a lively rate. "My dear madan," began the unhappy young man, but without giving him time to proceed, the lady commenced, "Don't dear madam me. Here you've been out to this time of the night, and all the children sick at home." About this time the lady discovered that she had made a mistake, thinking our young friend—who is a batchelor—was her husband, and bolted for the nearest house. The affair has banished all thoughts of matrimony from the head of the assailed party.—[Macon (Ga.) Telegraph.

A family of three children, with the mother, were discovered by a doctor almost starved to death in Fulton county, Indiana, a few days ago. The mother and one child are blind. The citizens of Fulton county ought to be ashamed of such a heartless transaction.

Business

From the Vicksburg Herald.

Sunday night when a young man drove out of Vicksburg several miles to pass the evening with the girl of his choice, he was met at the gate by her father, who at once proceeded to business by saying:

"Come to spark Louisa, eh?"

The young man let silence answer the question.

"Expect it'll make match?" continued the father.

Silence again, while the young man tied the horse. As he was ready to go in, the father braced up and then continued:

"See here, young man, lets have an understanding. If you mean hitch beteen now and Jinuary, all right, but if ye don't I want ye to understand that candles is mighty high this fall and crops don't turn out wuth a cuss."

As the young man got through the gate it is probable that he gave the father a direct and agreeable answer.

An Affecting Scene.

Yesterday when a Mich., avenue street car made a trip from Twelfth street to Woodward avenue inside of three hours the astonished passengers made up a purse of fourteen cents for the driver, and a red-headed man fell on his neck and exclaimed:

"I never thought I should live to see this thing!"

A woman with a big breast-pin on clasped his hands and said:

"I want to die now; I can't stand this.

A man with a new straw hat on leaned up against the car and wiped his nose and sobbed:

"I wish father could have seen this afore the ager took him off!"

The driver was much affected, and brushing a tear from his eye, he replied.

"I don't know how it happened. Dont tell the company, or I shall be discharged.—Free Press.

A Daring Feat.

[illegible]

We last Sunday witnessed the performance of a daring feat by Miss Mossholder, of Lebanon, one of the most exquisitely beautiful girls in this region. The false work for the new bridged across the Santiam is just in place, and rises some forty feet above the water; on the top of this is placed a single row of boards, reaching across the river, from pier to pier; and this young lady on a banter, actually walked this single little track clear across the river and back again. The height was so great, the water so turbulent, and the passage so narrow that it actually made our heads swim to look at it, and yet the young lady marched across it as firmly and confidently as if she had been wandering quietly through some shady grove leaning on her jimson weed's stalwart arm.

Running A Newspaper

"I was doing pretty well with my paper," writes an Iowa editor, "but there was a man who kept telling me how I ought to run it until I made a proposition that he take it off my hands. He did, and now at the end of three months I take it back at his earnest appeal, as he has all he can do to watch his libel suits. P. S.—Looking over his books I find that he has lost every paying subscriber, and that he has collected ahead on the few advertisement that are left."

They were husband and wife, and as they stood before the soldier's monument she asked:

"What's that figger on top?"

"That's a goddess, he answered.

"And what's a gooddess!"

"A woman who holds her tongue," he replied.

She looked sideways at him and began planning to make a peach pie with the pits in it for the benefit of his sore tooth

THE WEST.

THE grand jury of Winnebago county, Ill., has indicted the two St. Louis editors, Foster and Edwards, who some time ago fought a duel near Rockford. The seconds and surgeons, and Postgate, the Inter-Ocean reporter, were also indicted. The same grand jury also found indictments against Patrick Flynn, ex-Sheriff of the county, and Franc B. Wilkie, one of the editors of the Chicago Times for conspiracy and subornation of perjury in obtaining affidavits to damage the character of Miss Early, the young lady who some time ago recovered a verdict for $25,000 damages for libel against Storey, of the Times....John T. Huss, Cashier of the First National Bank of Tiffin, Ohio, having involved the institution by embezzlement, ended his life the other day by shooting himself through the heart with a pistol. ....The village of Park Ridge, a suburb of Chicago, has narrowly escaped having a second Charley Ross affair. Willie Broughton, aged 10, son of a prominent citizen, was enticed into a secluded spot by a couple of strangers, bound and gagged, and thrown into a carriage in waiting. The men then drove rapidly away. At the neighboring town of Jefferson they stopped to get a drink, leaving the boy under the seat out of sight. While they were drinking he managed to slip the cords from his wrists and make his escape, and reached home safely. The affair created the wildest excitement in the village.

PROF. WALTER P. JENNEY, chief geologist of the Black Hills exploring expedition, returned to Cheyenne last week, having spent five months in the Hills. The Professor reports gold fields extending forty miles north from Harney's Peak, and twenty miles wide, that contain gold in quantities that will pay from $3 to $5 per day to the man. There are bars on numbers of streams that will pay much more than that. Prof. Jenney corroborates Gen. Custer's report of the Hills, and says that they will support thousands of miners when the government opens them to settlement. The valleys are adapted to agriculture, and the hills and canons to stock-raising. The rainfall is plentiful, and timber abundant.

JUDGE BOREMAN, of Salt Lake, has decided that Brigham Young must immediately pay over to Ann Eliza, his divorced wife, the alimony due her, now amounting to some $10,000.

TWO BROTHERS named Courtwright, who were implicated in the murder of the Sheriff of Portage county, Wis., were taken from the jail at Stevens Point by a party of about forty masked men, and hanged, a few nights ago. GEN. SOL. MEREDITH, one of Indiana's most prominent Generals during the late war, died last week, at Richmond, Ind., from cancer of the stomach, caused from injuries received in 1862, at the battle of Gainesville, Va., where he was crushed beneath a horse....Denver, Col., is reveling in a first-class sensation. The people of that city were horrified a few days ago, at the discovery of the mangled bodies of four persons in the cellar of a building, their throats cut from ear to ear. The bodies were those of an old Italian, his two sons and a nephew, and they had evidently been murdered some days. The whole matter is involved in a deep mystery....The people of Williamson county, Ill., show a determination to make murder odious in that locality. A short time ago two assassins were sentenced to long terms in the Penitentiary, now Marshall Crain, one of the worst outlaws in the county, has been sentenced to death for the murder of William Spence....A young German, Fritz Kaiser, committed suicide, in Chicago, the other day, by jumping from the top of the water-works tower, a distance of 187 feet.

THE election of a Bishop for the diocese of Iowa is yet in an unsettled condition. It was at one time thought that Dr. Eccleston was to be chosen, as a number of Standing Committees had voted in his favor; but now the delegates from seventeen of the thirty-three parishes in Iowa solemnly protest against the election of Dr. Eccleston, stating that upon the sixteenth ballot in the Cedar Rapids Convention they voted for Dr. Knickerbocker. For the present, therefore, Iowa will be without a Bishop.

THE SOUTH.

THE epizootic prevails among the horses in many parts of the South, though in a mild form.

Dr. L. Ballard, while riding with a lady, was waylaid by a man named Andrews, who fired one barrel of a shotgun at the doctor, the charge taking effect in his neck and face, and knocking him off his horse. After falling, Ballard asked Andrews to raise him, which he did, into a sitting posture, and then, placing the gun near his head, discharged the other barrel, literally blowing Ballard's head off.

WASHINGTON.

THE President returned to Washington on the morning of the 15th inst., and the first regular Cabinet session for several weeks was held at noon of that day.

A SINGULAR episode happened at the White House one day last week. An insane colored man visited the Executive Mansion and stated that he had been discharged from the Maryland Penitentiary, where he was unjustly incarcerated. He claimed that President Grant was his father, and asserted this claim by reason of signs which were given him while in prison. He was arrested and on his person was found a five-barreled revolver, loaded in every barrel. ....The President has made the following appointments: Charles M. Lynch, Collector of Internal Revenue, Nineteenth District of Pennsylvania; George B. Chamberland, Supervisor of Internal Revenue; Thomas J. Mitchell, Illinois, Agent for Indians of Milk River Agency, Montana; James S. Hastings, Michigan, Agent for Indians of Red Cloud Agency, Dakota, vice John J. Saville, resigned; Col. Ben. R. Bonner, Marshall of the United States for the East District of Missouri....Workmen on the Nevada and Northern telegraph extension have been driven off by the Indians of the Umatilla tribe, who threatened to kill them if they continued.

THE report of the Commission appointed to investigate the affairs of the Red Cloud Agency has been made public. It sustains Prof. Marsh's charges of incompetency against Agent Saville, but exonerates him from imputations of dishonesty. The Commissioners report that they find no evidence to sustain the charges against the late Secretary Delano and Indian Commissioner Smith. They recommend that Agent Saville be removed; that J. W. Stevens, J. H. Martin, and D. J. McCann be excluded from future contracts with the government; that E. B. Threlkeld be excluded from all future employment as Inspector; that bids for flour, clothing, and wagon transportation be received at some suitable point in the West; that the office of Superintendent of Indian agencies be abolished, and the duties connected therewith be transferred to inspectors; that the feasibility of dispensing with railroad freight contractors from New York to the West be considered; that army officers be detailed to inspect Indian supplies; that the system of keeping accounts be improved; that Indian agencies be graded with reference to salaries of agents; that Red Cloud and Spotted Tail Agencies be removed nearer the Missouri river; that a commission of army officers be appointed to consider the propriety of organizing an Indian soldiery for police and similar duties; that a Territorial government be established over the Indian Territory; that suitable persons be appointed to prosecute for all wrongs against Indians, to defend their rights as far as they may become subject of adjudication before the courts, and that future legislation be shaped with a view to bringing the Indians under the same laws which govern all other inhabitants of the republic.

EX-SENATOR CHANDLER, of Michigan, has accepted the appointment of Secretary of the Interior, made vacant by the resignation of Delano, and entered upon the duties of the office. ....It is stated that the recent reduction of 54-100 of a cent per pound in the drawback on refined sugars exported has completely stopped the exportation of refined sugars from the United States.

IT is stated that the new Interior Secretary is in favor of turning the Indian Bureau over to the War Department....An effort is being made to collect the facts in regard to the medical and sanitary history of Andersonville prison.

POLITICAL.

OHIO, at the recent election, decided against taxing dogs....Attorney-General Pierrepont stated at a Cabinet meeting, the other day, that he was in receipt of information, which he deems authentic, to the effect that both parties in Mississippi have agreed to terms which will prevent further troubles in that State, and a peaceable election is confidently anticipated.

GENERAL.

THE steamer Pandora has arrived safely in England after a year's cruise in the Arctic regions. The adventurous mariners revisited the mournful neighborhood where the gallant Franklin and his companions are buried, and found the monuments of the last explorers unimpaired. They found the storehouses built for the benefit of sailors, or castaways of ice-bound vessels, broken into. On entering the building the visitors found the clothing and provisions left there to be in a state of terrible confusion. Everything of a movable nature was scattered about in the most singular manner. At first this seemed to be an act of a human being, but on further investigation the Pandora people were satisfied that the destruction of the stores had been accomplished by polar bears, as traces of these animals were visible in every direction, both inside and outside the building.

THE Pacific coast has had a marine tidal wave, the water of the ocean rising from one to three hundred feet above the ordinary high-water mark. One of the incidents of this commotion of nature was an earthquake shock on the coast. It is believed there has been some great upheaving in some locality yet to be heard from....Two notorious abortionists, a Dr. Davis and his wife, have been sentenced to death in Toronto, Canada.

THE fire-fiend is on the rampage again. In Polish Russia, the town of Widzy has been devastated by a conflagration, several hundred dwellings being destroyed; the town of Iquique, in Peru, has been almost literally wiped out of existence by a similar visitation; and the mining town of Fairview, Col., has suffered by fire to the amount of $100,000, scarcely a house being left standing....A new mixed Commission is shortly to assemble at Halifax, N. S., to arrange for a final settlement of the Canadian fisheries question.

EX-SECRETARY MCCULLOCH has published his plan of resumption. He would have the Secretary of the Treasury redeem such greenbacks as were offered him in 4½ per cent. gold bonds. The legal-tenders received in exchange for the bonds would be destroyed.

FOREIGN.

THE coast of England has been visited by another destructive storm, attended by considerable loss of life and property....A frightful accident recently occurred in an iron mill near London, fifteen workmen being fatally burned by an overflow of molten metal....A Constantinople dispatch says the following news is official: "A force of 2,000 insurgents has been defeated by the Turks. One hundred and sixty were killed. The rest took refuge in Montenegro. Seventeen villages hitherto strongly insurgent, have submitted to Turkish authority."

RUSSIA has commanded the Polish proprietors in the Provinces of Milus, Grodno, Koona, Minsk, and Vitepsk to sell their farms to Russian tenantry, the government fixing the price. This completes the impoverishment of the Polish nobility....A serious revolt against Spanish rule in Porto Rico is threatened.... The well-known English poet and lecturer, Gerald Massey, has become insane. Spiritualism did it....Don Carlos has dismissed from his service Gens. Dorregaray, Mendiri, Velasco and Mogrovejo....It is stated that in consequence of the Pope's intercession, the Emperor of Germany has remitted one year of Cardinal Ledochowski's term of imprisonment, for resisting the Prussian ecclesiastical laws, and that a full pardon will probably follow.

TWENTY-ONE persons were recently lost by the wreck of a French schooner on the coast of France....M. Thiers, in a recent speech at a banquet given in his honor, said that the French republic must be maintained. He did not think that the Radicals are as bad as they are painted, and believed that if they gained power, they would pursue a different course from what their opponents suppose. The policy of the future, he said, would be peace and non-intervention....An edict has been published in the official journal of the Chinese, the Pekin Gazette, declaring the right of foreigners to travel the interior of China, and requiring officials to take cognizance of the treaties.

STILL another destructive inundation is reported throughout Lancashire, Warwickshire and elsewhere in England....The Turkish government have declared their willingness to give the great powers any guarantee compatible with the nation's dignity for the fulfillment of her financial programme....The Supreme Court of Prussia have heard the appeal of Count Von Arnim, and refused to reverse the verdict of the lower court.

THE English Foreign Office has received a telegram from Minister Wade, dated Shanghai, 18th inst., in which it is said that the guarantees obtained from the Chinese by the British in the recent negotiations include the dispatch of a mission to England, bearing an apology for the Yunnan outrage, and safe conduct to Burmah for the Commissioners of Inquiry.... Preliminary work upon the English channel tunnel has been commenced.

FINANCE AND TRADE.

Weekly Review of the Chicago Market.

FINANCIAL.

Money continues abundant, and borrowers are readily accommodated on the street at 8 per cent., while the banks continue to obtain 10 per cent. The demand for favor is not at all urgent. Government bonds remain steady and quite firm.

BREADSTUFFS.

There has been considerable interest shown in wheat and corn, but for the other grains a comparatively quiet feeling prevailed, the amount of business transacted being considerably below the average. For spring wheat the demand from the opening until the close has been quite active, and a steady improvement in values was noticed, the colosing quotations showing an advance of from 4c to 4½c per bu, being mainly on the short futures, the demand from speculators who had not covered their maturing contracts being quite active. At the same time there was a good shipping and export demand, and Eastern advices were of a favorable tenor. Corn opened firm and higher, but closed lower under increased receipts, while oats sympathized with the changes in corn. Rye was firm and a trifle higher, but barley was weak and lower under increased receipts. The movement was principally on speculative account.

The following table shows the prices current at the opening and at the close of the past week:

Several good lots of new were sold at 6@7c. Beeswax was quiet at 26@28c. There was a fair local and shipping demand for cheese. Quotable at 5@5c for inferior, 9@10½c for common to good, and 11½@12c for prime. Choice sweet cider was in fair demand and steady at $6.50@7.00 per brl, and $3.00@3.75 in kegs. Cranberries in light demand at $7.50@8.50 per brl for good Wisconsin, and $10.50@11.50 for choice large cultivated; one-bu boxes sold at $3.00@3.50. There was no demand for dried peas, and sales were slow at $1.50@1.60 for choice green, and 95c per bu for yellow dried. Eggs closed at 21c in carriers and about 20c in loose packages. Prime live geese feathers were in fair demand and steady at 58@60c; the other kinds ruled dull. Game was in better supply and easier. Prairie chickens sold at $4.00 per doz; mallard ducks at $2.75@3.00; small at $1.50@1.75, and snipe and plover at $1.00. The hop market remains very dull, but prices were without change; quotable at 4@10c per lb for poor to good and 11@15c for prime. Honey was in fair request when in the comb at 23@24c, but strained was dull at 10@12c per lb. There was a fair demand for hides, and sales were made at 8½c for green salted, 6½c for damaged, and [illegible] for calf. Potatoes were in better demand and prices were a shade firmer, quotable at 30@40c per bu for peachblows. Sweet potatoes, however, remain dull and slow of sale; yellow Illinois $2.00@2.25 per brl, and Jerseys $3.00@3.25. There was a fair demand for salt, and a fair business was reported at $1.50 for Onondaga and Saginaw fine, and $1.70 for ordinary coarse. Wool was in fair demand and steady at 38@40c for washed, and 28@32c for unwashed.

SEEDS AND HIGHWINES.

There was a fair demand for prime timothy, and prices, under light offerings, were steady at $2.20@2.25. There was a good deal of common offered, however, and this was slow at $1.85@2.10. There was a fair demand for highwines, and the market closed steady at a slight decline. The market closed at $1.13½.

PROVISIONS.

In this market there was a slight increase in the amount of business transacted, but prices were rather irregular. The stocks were larger than was generally anticipated, but this had a tendency to increase the offerings. Mess pork was about 40@45c lower, but was rather steady toward the close. Lard was quiet but firm.

COOPERAGE, LUMBER AND WOOD.

Quotations for cooperage range at $1.10@1.15 for pork barrels and $1.30@1.40 for lard tierces; $1.90@2.10 for whisky barrels, and 45@55c for flour barrels. Lumber, owing to light offerings, was quiet but firm. Values were nominally firm at $8.25 for joist and scantling, and $8.50@14.00 for strips and boards. Shingles, $2.10@2.60. Lath steady at $1.50; closing firm. For wood the demand continues moderate, and prices were steady and unchanged.

Large Brains and Intellect.

The relation between weight of brain and extent of intellectual capacity is as yet in obscurity, and this obscurity is by no means cleared up by a report of Dr. Lawson, pathologist to the Lunatic Asylum of the West Riding of Middlesex. Six distinguished men are instanced as having exceeded the male average of forty-nine ounces, and opposite their brain weights are placed those of six lunatics, the aggregate of the latter exceeding that of the former by more than ten ounces. The following are the figures: Dr. Chalmers, 53 oz., lunatic, 58 oz.; David Webster, 53.5, lunatic, 58; Sir J. Y. Simpson, 54, lunatic, 58.5; Goodsir, 57.5, lunatic, 59.5; Abercrombie, 63, lunatic, 60.5; Cuyler, 64, lunatic, 61. It must, of course, be remembered that lunacy is no indication of a want of intellectual capacity, and also that the size of the body should be taken into consideration in all comparisons instituted between brains. This last circumstance is not alluded to by Dr. Lawson, although the advocates of woman's rights forced attention to it by their efforts to account for forty-four ounces being the average for the female brain. This is a subject of great scientific interest; but in all investigations great care should be taken to carefully discriminate between mental weakness and the destruction of mental equlibrium.

Mortality in the Large Cities.

We find in the Sanitarium for October a table showing the population and deaths in the leading cities of the United States, computed for four weeks ending August 28, (except Newark and Providence, which are for the month of August). The comparative health of these cities is shown, provided that the data here given may be relied upon:

Affairs in Mississippi.

Ex-Senator Pease, of Mississippi, now sojourning in Washington, has received the following dispatch from Jackson:

Military operations have been suspended by Gov. Ames, based upon the most ample and minute assurances of leading citizens of the State that there shall be peace and a fair and free election. They would not undertake to answer for the lawless, but guarantee to aid the civil officers in the execution of the laws. The Governor expresses himself wholly satisfied with the assurances given, and believes that they will be carried out to the letter. An improved feeling prevails, especially among the whites, and a general desire for peace prevails among all classes. Good citizens are greatly encouraged.

J. L. LAKE, Jr.,
United States Marshal.

ACCORDING to Frazer's Magazine the available force which Great Britain has to commence a campaign abroad or to defend the shores of England, Ireland, and Scotland, consists of only 5,250 cavalry, 30,272 infantry, and 120 guns—an army just about equal in numbers to one of the sixteen army corps into which the land forces of Germany are at this moment divided.

STANLEY IN AFRICA.

The Adventurous Correspondent in the Land of the Hippopotami—Exploration of Lakes Victoria and Niyanza.

The last letter of Henry M. Stanley to the London Telegraph and New York Herald, whose joint correspondent and explorer he is, written from the interior of Africa, reads like a chapter from Robinson Crusoe or Jules Verne. It is dated "Village of Kagehyi, District of Uchambi, Country of Usukuma, May 15, 1875." We give below a few extracts, regretting that our limited space forbids the reproduction of the whole of this intensely interesting narrative:

From Majita north we sail along the coast of Ururi, a country remarkable for its wealth of cattle and fine pastoral lands. It is divided into several districts, whose names you will find marked on the map.

THE EL DORADO OF IVORY SEEKERS.

Molinna and Shirati, low, flat and wooded districts of Ururi, separate this country from Ugeyeya, the land of so many fables and wonders, the El Dorado of ivory seekers and the source of wealth for slave-hunters.

Our first view of it while crossing the Bay of Kavirondo is of a series of tall mountains, and of a mountainous projection, which latter from a distance we take to be a promontory, but which on a nearer view turns out to be an island, bearing a tall mountain on its back. At the northeastern extremity of the bay is Gori river, which rises northeast near Kavi—an important stream, but one that grows during the rainy season to large breadth and depth. Far east beyond the Niyanza, for twenty-five days' march the country is one continuous plain, low hills rising here and there dotting the surface, a scrubby land, though well adapted to pasture and cattle, of which the natives have vast herds. About fifteen days' march east the people report a land wherein low hills spout smoke, and sometimes fire. This wonderful district is called Susa, and is situated in the Masari Land. All combine in saying that no stream runs north, but that all waters come into the Niyanza—for at least thirty days' march. Beyond this distance the natives report a small lake, from which issues a stream flowing toward the Pangain.

GOSHI'S NOOK OF REFUGE.

Continuing on our way north we pass between the island Ugingo and the gigantic mountains of Ugeyeya, at whose base the Lady Alice seems to crawl like a mite in a huge cheese, while we on board admire the stupendous height and wonder at the deathly silence which prevails in this solitude, where the boisterous winds are hushed and the turbulent waves are as tranquil as a summer's dream. The natives as they pass regard this spot with superstition, as well they might, for the silent majesty of these dumb tall mounts awe the very storms to peace. Let the tempests bluster as they may on the spacious main beyond the cape, in this nook, sheltered by tall Ugingo Isle and lofty Goshi on the mainland, they inspire no fear. It is this refuge which Goshi promises the distressed canoe men that causes them to sing praises of Goshi, and to cheer one another when wearied and benighted that Goshi is near to protect them.

Sailing between and out from among the clustering islands, we leave Wategi behind, and sail between two low isolated islands not far from the mainland, for a quiet night's rest, and under the overspreading branches of a mangrove tree we dream of unquiet waters and angry surfs and threatening rocks, to find ourselves next morning tied to an island which, from its peculiarity, I have named Bridge Island, though the native name is Kihwa.

A NATURAL BRIDGE OF BASALT.

While seeking a road to ascend the island to take bearings, I discovered a natural bridge of basalt, about twenty feet in length by twelve in breadth, under which one might repose comfortably, and from one side see the waves lashed to fury and spend their strength on the stubborn rocks which form the foundation of the arch, while from the other he could see his boat, secure under the lee of the island, resting on a serene and placid surface, and shaded by mangrove brances from the hot sun of the equator. Its neighborhood is remarkable only for a small cave, the haunt of fishermen.

From the summit of Bridge Island the view eastward takes in all Masari as far as Nakidimo, and discovers only a flat and wooded district, varied at intervals by isolated cones, and northward, at the distance of twenty miles or so, finds the land makes a bold and long stretch eastward. Knowing, however, by experience, that the appearance of the land is deceptive, we hoist our sail and scud merrily before a freshening breeze, hugging the coast lest it should rob us of some rarity or wonder.

UNDER THE EQUATOR.

At noon I found myself under the equator, and four miles north I came to a discolored water and a slight current flowing to the southwest. Seeing a small bay of sufficient breadth to make a good river, and no land at its extremity, I made sure I had discovered a river, which would rival the Shimeeyu; but within an hour land all around revealed the limit and extent of the Bay of Nakidimo. We anchored close to a village and began to court the attention of some wild-looking fishermen, but the nude barbarians merely stared at us from under pent-houses of hair, and hastily stole away to tell their wives and relatives of how an apparition in the shape of a boat with white wings to it had suddenly come before them, bearing strange men with red caps on their heads, except one—a red man, clad in white, whose face was as red as blood, who, jabbering something unintelligible, so frightened them that they ran away. This will become a pleasant tradition, one added to the many wonders now told in Ugeyeya, which, with the art of embellishment inherent in the tongue of the wondering, awe-struck savage, may become in time the most wonderful of all wonders.

PURSUED BY HIPPOPOTAMI.

Perceiving that our proffered courtesies were thus rudely rejected, we also stole out of the snug bay and passed round to another much larger and more important. At its extremity a river issued into the bay, which, by long and patient talk with the timid natives, we ascertained to be the Ugoweh. In this the hippos were as bold as the human savages were timid, and to a couple of the amphibious monsters we had to induce the Lady Alice to show a swifter pace in retreat than the savages of Nakidimo had shown to us. These hippopotami would afford rare sport in a boat specially built for killing them; then they might splinter sides with their tusks, and bellow and kick to their utmost; but the Lady Alice, if I can help it, with her delicate skin of cedar and ribs of slender hickory, shall never come in close contact with the iron-hard ivory of the hippopotamui, for she would be splintered into matches and crushed like an egg before one could say "Jack Robinson," and then the hungry crocodiles would leisurely digest us. The explorer's task, to my mind, is a far nobler one than hunting hippos, and our gallant cedar boat has many a thousand miles to travel yet before she has performed her task.

A NARROW ESCAPE.

We flew away with a bellying sail along the coast of Maheta, where we saw such a dense population and clusters of large villages as we had not seen elsewhere. We thought we would make one more effort to learn of the natives the names of some of these villages, and for that purpose steered for a cove on the western shore of Maheta. We anchored within fifty yards of the shore, and so lengthened our cable that but a few feet of deep water separated us from the shore. Some half a dozen men, wearing small land-shells above their elbows and a circle around their heads came to the beach. With these we opened a friendly conversation, during which they disclosed the name of the country as Maheta or Ugeyeya; more they would not communicate until we should land. We prepared to do this, but the numbers on the shore increased so fast that we were compelled to draw off again until they should moderate their excitement and talk. They seemed to think that we were about to pull off altogether, for suddenly appeared out of the bush on each side of the spot we had intended to land such a host of spears that we hoisted our sail and left them to whet their treachery on some other boat or canoe more imprudent than ours. The discomfited people were seen to consult together on a small ridge behind the bush lining the lake, and, no doubt, they thought we were about to pass close to a small point at the north end of the cove, shouting gleefully at the prospect of a prize; but, lowering the sail, we pulled to windward, far out of the reach of bow or sling, and at dusk made for a small island, to which we tied our boat, and where we camped in security.

Sad Occurrence at the Tombs.

On the 3d of September last Samuel McMurray was confined in the Tombs on charge of murdering Thomas Doyle, and twenty days later his wife Anna Jane was locked up in the Tombs as his accomplice. She took to the prison her little child, a puny, 2-year-old boy, so small and delicate that he seemed hardly a year old. The father was confined in the prison for men, and the mother and child in what is known as the "Magdalen," a place set apart for mothers and their children and young girls. The little family living underneath the same roof saw no more of each other than though an ocean divided them. Day by day the little one grew weaker, and a few days ago it was plain that it must die. Then the father was taken to see his boy, and the little family were for a few minutes united. On Wednesday the father saw the boy again. He was alive, but very weak. After the father was again locked up in his cell the little one died in his mother's arms. "He's better off now," she said, but she wept, and when her husband was brought to her cell, both sobbed over their dead child. They said they could not bury it—they were too poor—but asked the Warden to send word to a friend. The friend declined to bury their dead baby, and so the body was sent to the morgue. The mother, still weeping, made the little corpse as decent as she could, and then kissed the cold lips, and strangers buried her boy in the potter's field.—New York Sun.

Fancy Prices for Short-Horns.

Winchester, Ky. (Oct. 14), correspondence of the Chicago Times: "Never before in the short-horn history of this State has such a large and enthusiastic crowd of breeders been congregated at a sale as that seen at the grounds of Ben B. Groom, in this county. The seats erected for spectators and bidders were inadequate to accommodate the crowd. The first animal offered for sale, the Twenty-second Duchess of Airdrie, calved in June, this year, was purchased by J. H. Spears, of Tallula, Ill., and brought the princely sum of $17,500. The highest priced animals were: Kirklerington Duchess Eighteenth, $5,150, J. C. Craig, Burnhamtown, Canada; Fennell Duchess, $5,100; Benj. Lumner, Woodstock, Conn., and Highland Maid Sixth, $5,050, J. C. Tyler, Brattleboro, Vt. Prices ranged from $500 to $17,000. The sale consisted of sixty-five cows and nine bulls. The cows brought a total of $109,435, and averaged $1,709.92. The bulls brought $14,015, averaging about $1,457. A great number of breeders, principally western men were in attendance. Dr. Sprague, of Des Moines, an agent for Mrs. Jesse Long, purchased ten very fashionably-bred animals. J. H. Spears & Son, of Tallula, Ill., purchased the very best, and paid more money into Mr. Groom's pocket than any other three breeders present."

Prominent Chicagoans Implicated in Whisky Frauds.

Washington (Oct. 15) correspondence of the Chicago Inter-Ocean: "From some information that has leaked out of the Treasury Department, it may be expected that startling revelations may be made within a few days concerning the implication of several prominent Chicagoans in the whisky frauds. It is whispered that the reputation of a gentleman of high official and social position will be somewhat tarnished. It is further said that some who are numbered among the Secretary's most ardent supporters will be implicated. Rumor at the Treasury Department has it that one of the parties, whose name is very frequently mentioned in this connection, is making preparations to leave for Europe or California, and that he will be allowed to go in peace, but examples will be made of less influential persons. Every effort is being made to suppress the facts from publication and confine them to the confidence of a few chiefs in the department, but the matter has been alluded to in such plain terms in correspondence, which subordinates are required to copy, that it has leaked out in this way."

A Good Crop of Turtles.

Some time since a Providence (R. I.) policeman saw a turtle dig a hole and deposit her eggs therein, at Roger Williams Park, and when he went to his home that night disinterred the eggs, thirty-five in number, and took them with him. Digging a hole in his yard, similar to the one made by the turtle, and as near to it in shape and size as possible, he again buried the eggs, and after 112 days they commenced to hatch out, and in a short time thirty-four little turtles no larger than old-fashioned copper cents came to the surface, only one of the eggs failing to hatch. They were put in a pond.

A YOUNG MONSTER.—California presents another young criminal, a boy of 14, named McDonald, who has been sent to the Industrial School for having, within two weeks, committed one burglary, stolen a horse and buggy, chopped a boy with a hatchet, cut a man with a knife, and stabbed his mother in the face. His mother appeared, "and pleaded hard for him, saying that he was a real, good, obedient little boy."

GOSSIP OF THE DAY.

They know how to do it in Honduras on the American plan. The Minister from that land of teak and mahogany to England has cabbaged $1,000,000 on a fraudulent loan, using his wife in the transaction.

A few months ago some valuable mills at Rockland, Canada, were set on fire by a passing steamer and destroyed. The owners of the property sued the company to which the steamer belonged, and have just recovered a verdict of $210,000.

Kossuth is living in comfort at Barraconne, a village between Turin and Rivoli, absorbed in the cultivation of fruit, flowers and vegetables, and keeping an eye on his collections of minerals and insects. Kossuth was 73 years old on the 16th of September.

The California wheat crop is very short this year, yielding only 425,000 tons, of which 225,000 tons, or about 7,000,000 bushels, constitutes the export. The grape crop is immense, the largest ever known, and the wine production will amount to over 8,000,000 gallons.

An enterprising English resident of Hokadadi, Japan, having set up a banking business and commenced the issuing of notes of hand, payable on demand, the Japanese government promptly suppressed his business by issuing a decree forbidding the circulation of the little I. O. U.'s.

The Cincinnati papers record the death of Charlotte Crampton, at one time one of the most famous actresses on the American stage. She was born in 1816, and made her debut on the stage at Cincinnati in 1831. She seems to have lost her dramatic power several years ago, and of late has been but little heard of.

"What is a statesman?" is the bold caption of the leading editorial in a New York illustrated weekly. The editor need not travel far to get an answer to his conundrum. Let him drop over to the Tombs and the Hon. William M. Tweed will enlighten him on the subject. We believe the "Boss" is the only man who ever claimed to be a statesman by profession.

At the funeral of his favorite daughter the Khedive of Egypt distributed among the crowd 450,000 pieces of silver coin, from 1 to 5 piastres each. Upon the lid of the coffin the jewelry of the deceased, valued at 3,000,000 florins, was exhibited. Twenty-four buffaloes were killed by the priests before the Mosque Rilah at Cairo, roasted and eaten, and then 3,000 priests said prayers by the tomb for seven days.

The recent explosion at a celluloid factory in Newark, N. J., accompanied by serious loss of life, has led many to ask, "What is celluloid?" It is a newly discovered substance manufactured from gun-cotton, camphor, and several other ingredients. It can be made to resemble coral, ivory, tortoise-shell, etc., according as is desired. It is light, strong and capable of taking deep or delicate coloring, and is largely used in the manufacture of fancy goods.

The floods in France during the latter part of September were more disastrous and widespread than those of the previous month. The rains came down in torrents for days and nights, swelling and overflowing the rivers and smaller streams, and causing extensive destruction in towns and country. Such rains and such a flood have never been known in that country. Many millions of dollars' worth of property was destroyed, and many persons were drowned.

The following from the Lincoln County (Ga.) Advocate shows to what dire misfortune any married man is liable: "Last week we announced, on the authority of a certain hardware merchant of this town, that his wife had just been delivered of a pair of twin girls. This week, on the same authority, we have to announce that the wife of the same merchant has been delivered of another child. The last one is also a girl, weighs nine pounds, and the mother and child are doing well.'

Sometimes an item gets into the newspapers which digs a pair of rowels into the sides of the imagination, so to speak. Here is an instance from the New York Sun: "A Hartford man recently got a piece of tough meat lodged in the lower part of the oesophagus, making breathing difficult and threatening inflammation, and was treated by Dr. Ellisworth, of that city, who killed a number of dogs, and, with the gastric juice of their stomach coatings, succeeded in dissolving the pieces in the course of the day."

Score one more for old Ireland! On the 30th of August last the hackmen of Paris, France, celebrated the annual feast in honor of their patron saint, who is no less a person than St. Fiacre, a native of Ireland, who come to Paris in the year 597—as long as 1,278 years ago—and invented cabs for the benefit of the Parisians, and they still persist in calling those vehicles by his name—fiacres. What would Frenchmen do without an Irishman for President of their Republic and without an Irishman to invent carriages for them.

Westervelt, convicted of complicity in the abduction of Charley Ross, has given a new turn to the search for the missing boy by suggesting exploration of the Catholic Orphan Asylums. Nobody seems to have thought of it before, and yet there is no place at which the abductors when pressed by pursuit would have been more likely to have placed him. It appears, however, that the suggestion was a mere conjecture on Westervelt's part, and that he doesn't know the boy's whereabouts, so that the Charley Ross mystery remains as much a mystery as ever.

Commissioner Pratt, of the Internal Revenue Department, is preparing his annual report. We learn that it will present a favorable view of the national finances. The receipts for the first three months of the present fiscal year show an increase of revenue amounting to $2,000,000, and the estimated receipts for the fiscal year will aggregate $120,000,000, which exceeds those of last year by $10,000,000. This is certainly an encouraging presentation, especially in a season of such marked and general business depression. The improvement is partly due to the additional tax on whisky and tobacco.

The story about Conductor McKinney, of the Hartford and New Haven railroad, and his $1,000 bill is again on its travels. Five years ago he called upon a sleepy passenger on a night train for his fare, when the latter handed him a $1,000 greenback. Thinking it a $100 bill, he went into the baggage car to change it, and there discovered its real value, but when he tried to return it the passenger denied having given it, and claimed to have given him a ticket, a statement which his companion corroborated. The conductor finally concluded that the men were thieves, and, after keeping the bill awhile and no owner appearing, put it into a bank, where it still lies.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

The Farmer King.

The farmer sat in his old arm-chair,
Rosy and fair,
Contented there,
"Kate, I declare,"
He said to his wife, who was knitting near,
"We need not fear
The hard times here,
Though the leaf of life is yellow and sere.

"I'm the King and you are the Queen
Of this fair scene,
These fields of green
And gold between,
These cattle grazing upon the hill,
Taking their fill,
And sheep so still,
Like many held by a single will.

"These barnyard fowls are our subjects all;
They heed the call,
And like a squall,
On fast wings fall,
Whenever we scatter for them the grain.
'Tis not in vain
We live and reign
In this our happy and calm domain.

"And whether the days be dim or fine,
In rain or shine,
These lands of mine,
These fields of thine,
In cloudy shade and in sunny glow,
Will overflow
With crops that grow,
When gold is high and when it is low.

"Unvexed with shifting of stocks and shares,
And bulls and bears,
And strifes and cares,
And the affairs
Of speculation in mart and street,
In this retreat
Sweet peace can meet
With plenty on her rural beat."

Around the Farm.

How to Get Rid of Stumps.—Gen. Colquitt, of Georgia, in a recent address, said to remove stumps from a field all that is necessary is to have one or more sheet iron chimneys, some four or five feet high. Set fire to the stump and place the chimney over it, so as to give the requisite draft at the bottom. It will draw like a stove. The stump will soon be consumed. With several such chimneys of different sizes, the removal of stumps may be accomplished at merely nominal labor and expense.

A friend sends us a sitting of eggs—fifteen—very securely packed. Each egg is wrapped in several distinct pieces of paper, 7x9 size say, as stiff as the stiffest newspaper we get. Each piece of paper is wrinkled and crumpled by the hands in wrapping, quite disguising the form of the egg, and surrounding it with sponge. So protected, you may drop an egg on the floor without breaking the shell. Packed in a box lined with old rags, as these were, eggs ought to go to Ballyhack in safety.—Connecticut Courant.

Very often a screw-hole gets so worn that the screw will not stay in. Where glue is handy the regular carpenter makes the hole larger and glues in a large plug, making a nest for an entirely new hole. But this is not always the case, and people without tools and in an emergency often have to fix the thing at once. Generally leather is used, but this is so hard that it does not hold well. The best of all things is to cut narrow strips of cork and fill the hole completely; then force the screw in. This will make as tight a job as if driven into an entirely new hole.—American Builder.

Mr. Francis Gerry Fairfield writes in the Scientific American, that "a bland solution of carbolic acid in common whale oil or kerosene is the scientific remedy for the rot. The best way to use it would, I think, be to dip the potato, just before planting, in the solution, which is very inexpensive and very easily obtained. I may add that my experiments convince me that carbolic acid in this bland solution in no way impairs the germinal activity of the tuber; but, by way of certainty, let me recommend to your farmer readers to first try the experiment on a few hills next spring, and if successful, to adopt it as a remedy for he blight."

Having had some experience, says a correspondent of the Country Gentleman, in clover raising, I will say for the benefit of any who may be interested in the subject, that I believe it produces more milk than either timothy or corn fodder, and at the same time I find that land improves by frequently being seeded to clover. As to whether plaster is indispensable, I have always used it. and with varied results. The presen season I had twenty acres of clover which I had intended for seed, and to which I applied, about May 20th, one hundred pounds of plaster per acre. On examining the heads this fall, I found that very few of them had seed—in fact, I do not think the twenty acres would have produced five bushels, and I abandoned the idea of cutting it for seed, and put a part in for feeding, and pastured the remainder. On an adjoining farm I saw some clover well filled with seed where no plaster was used.

About the House.

To Remove Fly-specks.—Boil some onion skins, and use the water in which they have been boiled.

Potato Cheesecakes.—Four ounces of mashed potatoes, butter, flour, and sugar, and two eggs; mix all together with a fork, and bake in tins lined with puff paste.

Lamps are liable to explode when trimming is neglected. The wick being charred low down in the tube, the flame obtains access to the oil below.

To Destroy Ants.—Wrap a piece of gum camphor in cloth or paper to keep it from dissolving and place it in or about your cupboard or sugar, and it will drive away those pests.

To Remove Stains on Spoons caused by using them for boiled eggs, take a little common salt, moistened, between the thumb and finger, and briskly rub the stain, which will soon disappear.

Putting cream on onions instead of butter (or even a little milk if one has no cream), removes much of the strong flavor, and renders them less likely to affect weak stomachs unpleasantly.

Cheese Pudding.—Grate three oz. of cheese; five oz. bread; warm one oz. of butter in a quarter of a pint of milk, and mix with the above, then add two well-beaten eggs, a little salt and pepper, and mustard, mix all well together, and bake in a piedish for half an hour.

Hard Times Plum Pudding.—Quarter of a pound of finely chopped suet, the same of grated bread crumbs, currants, raisins, and flour. Add two tablespoonfuls of molasses and a half pint of milk; all of which must be well mixed together and boiled in a mold for three and a half hours. Serve with sauce.

Meat Loaf.—Chop fine whatever cold meat you may have, fat and lean together; add pepper, salt and finely chopped onion, two slices of bread which have been soaked in milk, and one egg; mix well together and bake in a form. This makes an admirable tea or breakfast dish.

New York Styles.

FALL HATS.

Private milliners, says Harper's Basar for the current week, have had their fall openings of bonnets, and settled the matter of shapes for the season. Fashionable French milliners have already modified the extremely large bonnets sent out at the beginning of the season, and now make a graceful bonnet of admirable proportions and smaller size. The flaring aureole brim is retained, but the crown is smaller, and the cottage sides fit the head so closely that the bonnet scarcely needs an elastic for holding it on. The ribbon strings that we recorded as a sensible fashion, it seems are not to serve their natural purposes of tying the bonnet under the chin, but are to be crossed behind the head and passed around the neck as a drapery for the neck, instead of the black lace scarfs lately worn. Black tulle and lace are used for this purpose as well as ribbon, and this is the only way in which black lace appears upon the bonnets. Ecru cashmere lace is seen in all the best millinery houses, but is most sparingly used. Very full face trimmings, usually of velvet, chiffonne—that is in regular loops, knots, half-bows, rosettes, that are placed on one side, and in many odd curves a la Renaissance—are all in the new bonnets. The stylish flowers are full soft tufts of roses, or carnations, or artemisias, with brown foliage, mossy buds, pine cones, burs, and unblown buds. Felt hats will be worn before the velvet ones are put on, and many of them are so handsome that they will be worn on dressy occasions throughout the season.

GLOVES.

There will be less matching the glove with the shade of the dress than formerly. Such dark shades are now chosen for costumes that light-colored gloves of some harmonious tint are used to brighten the toilet. Thus with myrtle green, plum, or navy blue dresses the gloves are of the neutral shades of mode color, wood, drab, or cream. For those who prefer a monotoned toilet there are dozens of shades of each of the stylish colors, slate gray, blue, green, and brown. It is said that gray will be the prevalent color for gloves to wear with various dresses. Brown is shown in all the "beige" hues, and the blue-black gloves of last year reappear. The safest purchase, however, is the demi-shades of brown and gray, such as the natural colors of undressed kid gloves, as these are worn with any dress, and especially with black costumes.

Gambetta Interviewed.

M. Gambetta has been again interviewed at Vienna by the Presse. Congratulated on the peaceable progress of French politics, he eulogized the good sense and tact of his countrymen, who, in spite of the strange procedure of the Assembly and the useless annoyances of incapable Prefects and obnoxious Mayors, have displayed admirable composure and moderation, patiently awaiting the amelioration of their position at the next election. He is not uneasy at party divisions and the intrigues of Legitimists, Orleanists, or Bonapartists, for all these shades do not penetrate to the heart of the nation, which only desires and needs a liberal government, carrying on conscientiously public affairs and watching over the good administration of justice. With six or eight years' internal and external peace France will astonish the world even more than now, by its inexhaustible material and moral resources. The Bonapartists may at most double their numbers in the next Chamber, but in spite of their fuss and activity they cannot seize on the government, nor tamper with the spirit of discipline which prevails in the army. The army and navy are the best elements of France, and no idea can be formed of the moral enthusiasm produced by the war; they are a pattern of honor and duty, and submission to the public interests. Speaking favorably of Marshal MacMahon, M. Gambetta says it is well that he is not a politician properly so called, whom party interests might perhaps draw into grievous acts. His loyalty he has never for an instant doubted.

Chinamen as Farmers.

The Natchez Democrat-Courier gives an interesting account of a number employed in Chicot county, Arkansas. They are most serviceable as tenants, and display far more ability than the negro. The terms usually made are 100 pounds of lint cotton to the acre, the planter furnishing a mule with which to cultivate the crop. At early dawn the Chinaman has had his breakfast and is in the fields. At 11 o'clock one of their number is sent in to cook their dinner, the hour for which is announced by the display of a small pennant. Half an hour is usually consumed at the meal, and returning to the field they work until dark. During plowing time planters are compelled to see to it that their animals have time to rest and eat, as the Celestials appear to be blessed with no compunction where mules are concerned. Their plowing is with furrows straight as a rule. They also seem to be adepts in cultivating vegetables, all their gardens being kept in perfect order. A supply of the principal vegetables is carefully dried and kept for the winter. Their house is the personification of neatness, every utensil being scoured bright as silver, while the clothes are clean, and in personal appearance they are never offensive. With great difficulty they can be restrained from working on Sunday.

An Ancient Equine.

Old "Jim," that good old horse, the property of Thomas R. Botts, Esq., is no more. He departed this life a few days ago, after a long and faithful service of about forty years. His exact age is not known, but enough is known to justify the belief that he was in the neighborhood of forty years. He was purchased by Mr. Botts from Robert McCart when he was about three years old, and Mr. Botts has owned him thirty-seven years since then. He was bred, we believe, by Uncle Jimmie Jones, who doubtless could tell his exact age. Mr. Botts' children are now nearly all grown, and this old horse, year after year, carried them to town and to school. He was gentle and kind, and was, like all good horses, a little lazy, and required the switch and cluck to get him along. We doubt whether there is another horse of his age in the country, unless Craddock has one.—Flemingsburg (Ky.) Democrat.

A few Sundays ago a young Unitarian became drowsy at church, and, putting his head in his father's lap, closed his eyes. Auburn Courier.

AUBURN INDIANA, OCT. 28, 1875

The Republicans had 60,000 majority in Iowa in 1872, and now their majority is only half that number, and yet Radical papers are calling it a victory.

Gov. Sol Meredith of Cambridge City this State died last Tuesday morning. The General done good service in the army, and later was regarded as one of the greatest cattle breeders of the State.

Morton and Hayes are now talked of as possible Republican candidates for the Presidency by those who hope that Grant can be beaten for the nomination. They will not do. Morton is too weak in the lower story, and Hayes is too weak in the upper.

We were led to believe that if Allen was defeated gold would suddenly fall. It is higher now than ever. Will the Ligonier Banner and Fort Wayne Sentinel, please rise and explain how this comes about?—Columbia City Post.

Yes, you who crowed over the defeat of Allen, please explain why the greenback is not quoted as high as before the election.

In forty-nine counties in Ohio there is a gain for Governor Allen at the late election over his previous success. The remaining thirty-nine counties show a gain for his opponent, mainly in the counties of Cuyahoga, Lucas, Hamilton, Franklin and Ashtabula. There is where the reporters put in their work. There is where the false counts were perpetrated. The bulk of the business was done in Cuyahoga Lucas and Ashtabula counties, convenient to Canada, where in a few hours there was safety for the perpetratars of the fraud upon the ballot-box.—Cuyahoga county gave 800 Democratic majority in 1874. It was changed to 6,375 Republican majority in 1875 Does anybody suppose that this was done by an honest vote? It is reasonable to suppose that the change of seven thousand would be made in a county casting less than twenty thousand votes? Cincinnati is on the frontiers of Kentucky and a great railroad center, and we accordingly suffered largely from the tampering with the ballot-boxes by the Money Power. There were nearly six hundred thousand votes cast in the State We have not to exceed two millions seven hundred and fifty thousand inhabitants. This is one vote to every four and a half of the population. It is one hundred and fifty thousand more votes than we cast in 1873, at the last election for Governor. It is many thousand more than were ever given at any vote for President of the United States. To do this required the enterprise of the Money Power of the world, and yet the party which used to have forty thousand majority, with all this trickery, has sunk to five thousand,—Enquirer.

The vote of Cuyahoga county is as follows, as officially declared:

Wm. Allen	10,960
R. B. Hayes	17,012
Majority for Hayes over Allen	6,052

There were 111 votes cast for J. Odell, Prohibitionist. The total vote given was 28,083. The population of Cuyahoga county is exactly one-half of that of Hamilton county. The latter county polled 48,937 votes. Upon that basis Cuyahoga county should have given 24,468. In other words Cuyahoga polled 3,500 votes in excess of Hamilton county, where we gave an enormous poll, a poll that was undoubtedly largely fraudulent. Hamilton county, with our population on the same basis with that of Cuyahoga, would have given 56,000 votes. This result accounts for the fact that the election judges, in violation of the law adjourned from the voting places, where the votes are required to be counted, to whisky and beer saloons, where they counted them privately and in disregard of that provision which permits every candidates to be present, and gives that right as a peremptory qualification. It is easy to see from this exhibit that the Cuyahoga county returns are a fraud There could not be in that county nearly 4,000 votes more given pro rata than were cast in Hamilton, where there is a still larger city. The superfluity is a fraud of the most glaring character A county which was 800 Democratic and for two elections previous, is not likely to give 6,000 Republican twelve months later, when the majority of the counties in the State show Democratic gains.

—The show windows of Scovell & Latson's store takes the prize, but then you know that Frank Chadwick is there and that accounts for it. We have as splendid a lot of store rooms as can be found anywhere and as well filled. We extend a cordial invitation for all to call and see us. Prof. Geo. Kemery's smiling countenance can be seen every day at Sammy Moss' store S. W. corner public square.

—All persons owning stock in the old fair-grounds should call a meeting and come to some conclusion as to what to do in the premises. Something must be done soon; either sell out to Carver or have a division of the property in some shape. The stock is worth double what it was when taken. The R. R. Co. should pay something for running through it—no taxes paid on it by any person or Co. Say we call a meeting on Saturday Dec. 25th 1875. Steuben "Republican" please copy.

—J. A. Woodhull's fine new dwelling came near burning down a few nights ago, and no doubt would have burned had it been covered with pine shingles but being covered with slate the fire made slow progress, though several rafters and considerable of the sheeting was burned off. It was undoubtedly the work of an incendiary as there had been no fire in the house yet, and the fire originated in the garrett. There was some 20 empty barrels set next to the roof and filled with shavings and kindling. The fire was started in one of them. All good dwellings should be covered with slate. It costs but a trifle more than a first-class shingle roof and is much more safe and durable.

—Died of diptheria Friday, Oct. 22nd, 1875, the only daughter of H. F. Austin aged 12 years. I know how to sympathize with the bereaved parents and cant help but drop a few tears while writing the sad notice.

Several others in town are down with this dreaded monster. At the present writing it is somewhat singular. As far as has been entertained all that have died this season have been young women or girls.

A young sprig of the law at Ft. Wayne started for Auburn a few days ago, and on the train tackled a three card monte party, using his watch in lieu of money Of course he got left, leaving his watch in their hands. He threatened to secure the service of the Sheriff at this place, but through a briefly acquired legal acumen, he discovered that he was a "particeps criminis" and this design had to be abandoned. At this juncture, one of the monte men approached him and asked him for the key to the watch.

"No sir," was the indignant reply.

Two Hundred Dollars Out.

A young man dropped off the cars at Garrett, last week, to "spend" awhile amid the noise of the hammers and music of the frogs. His wallet contained $210 He broke out for the nearest hotel, and on entering the bar-room inquired for the clerk. A fellow about half asleep came up, rubbing his eyes, and answered the strangers question. He took the "clerk" to one-side and gave him $200. telling to keey it until he returned, that he was going to take the remaining $10 for a spree. He had his drunk, and in the evening called for his money, but the "clerk" had been taken off by a camel-back engine, and the money was in his keeping.

We learn that Mr. Whittington, formerly of this place, had some money taken from his room one day last week.

The Waterloo "Press" says the lecture of W. H. Dills, Esq., at the Presbyterian chapel on Sabbath evening, was attended by a very large audience, the Methodist congregation joining in the meeting Songs appropriate to the occasion were sung by the choir, and Rev. R. D. Spellman addressed the throne of grace. Mr. Dills treats the temperance question different from nearly all other advocates of reform; and while many will differ with him in according so much sympathy to the inebrate, there are few intelligent persons but will agree that drunkenness is a sort of disease, which should be treated as such, in all efforts to reclaim the unfortunate. But no matter what the views of others may be, Mr. Dills gave his audience many things to think about, in connection with this subject —a subject which is commanding the attention of the benevolent and philanthropic everywhere.

We attended the horse fair at Morenci Michigan, last week, the weather being most favorable. The attendance of horses was very good, though many of them were suffering from the prevailing malady "Epizootic inflamation." They have handsome grounds at Morenci and a very good track. The association is still young and the improvements it has made, speaks well for its enterprise.

Many of the races did not fill, but the management were liberal, and arranged matters so that about all that was on the programme came off, in good order.

The best time made was by White Stockings in the pacing race. He distanced all competitors it 2:36 and never made a skip, the best time ever made on the track.

Sue Monday and Little Minnie had an exciting contest in the trotting race, but through the effects of another horse the latter won.

We stopped at the Exchange Hotel under the management of S. T. Snow, one of the most agreeable landlords, it has been our fortune to meet for many a day. He runs his house on the plan that people prefer to pay for comfort and good cheer, rather than for style and empty courtesy, and the consequences is, that Spence is ahead in the hotel business. If you want to be happy in Morenci, stop at the Exchange.

We dropped in upon the Editors of the "News," and found them busy in a good run of business. The "News" might be useful if less radical.

Another poet makes a tilt for us.—Now we like to encourage home poets, for who knows but what we may have the germ of a Carlyle or Sergt Kennedy among us. This last effort is in a humorous strain, and as many of our readears prefer laughter to tears, we give a part of it. If we were to give it all at once there would'nt be half hoops enough in the county to supply the demand. It is called, "The Fate of the Girl With a Pin-Back:

The girl stood on the burning deck,
With a ten-cent ruch around her neck;
She could'nt sit down to save her soul
For her Pin-back was tight as old King Cole

The flames rolled on and burnt her clothes
And popped the corn upon her toes:
Thermometer ninety in the shade;
This girl was not a bit afraid.

But when the flames ran up her shins,
It made her think of all her sins;
She clasped her hands and cracked her heels,
And danced four jigs and sixteen reels.

VERY LAST VERSE:

For she saw her doom was a trip in the air,
And knew that she han'nt a moment to spare
Crack! Bang! Whis!! away went the powder
And this girl with a pin-back was blown to Clam Chowder.

Apropos to this, the Dramatic Club are nearly prepared with their grand Temperance Drama.—They have all signed a pledge of total abstinence thus showing how heartily they have entered into the spirit of the play. So much for their morals. All who have the glorious cause of temperance at heart should give the club a helping word.

THE OLD CLOCK.

Moments of the gone-by hours,
Dost thou recall alone the past?
Why stand'st thou silent 'mid these towers,
When time still flies so fast?

Where are the hands in moments fled,
That marked those moments as they flew,
To generations of the dead,
Who turned on thee their view.

To watch and greet the appointed time
Of every empty dream of joy,
Or wait in agony the chime
Which might such dreams destroy?

To thee the eager eye was turned,
Of pride, of policy, and power,
And love's own longing heart has burned
To hear thee mark the hour.

Pleasure and pastime, grief and care,
Have heard thee chime some change of lot;
While the dull ear of cold despair
Has heard, but marked thee not.

And thou art silent now, and still,
While round thy mystic dial runs
The legend of man's hours—though ill,
As thou, he marks the sun—

Those rolling suns—those rolling suns,
Unchronicled by both, go on;
Though still each comments as it runs,
Till man's brief day be done.

Man's heart, too, like thy face? on it
Records of passing hours may stand,
But stand unmarked by movement fit,
By chimes or pointing hand.

O, dial! art thou raised on high
To speak reproach for life's abuse?
Or give to eager hope the lie?
Or tell Time's future use?

The future! Thou has naught to do
With it! The solemn past alone
Is that whereon thy comments go,
Its gravestones of hours gone!

The future! Yes! at least to me
Thus plainly, thus, thy moral stands—
"Good deeds mark hours! Let not life be A dial without hands."

AMONG WILD BEASTS.

"I have been scalped by a leopard, hugged by bears, knocked 'galley west' by elephants, had my whiskers pulled out by a vicious monkey, been clawed by a tiger, had my shoulder smashed by a lion, and a score of times been kicked half way across the street by an ugly camel, and yet I am alive to tell of it."

Such were the words of the great lion tamer and wild beast king, Charley White, to the writer, who applied to him for certain information regarding the manner of training ferocious animals for public performances.

"Well, haven't you got some notable instances of interference between you and death or harm which you can chalk up to the credit of some of your animals?"

"Certainly I have. My pet lioness 'Rose' has saved my life many times by her good teeth and claws. Several times when I have felt that my time had come has the noble girl sprung to the rescue and given me another chance."

"Is she the only one to whom you owe a debt of gratitude in that way?"

"No; but I once had a lion that I called 'Jimmy,' who made a savage attack on me when I was performing before the audience. He seized me by the shoulder, ribs and arm of my right side, and threw me to the bottom of the cage instanter, and began to gobble up my muscles as fast as he could. Although his claws had been clipped, and his teeth had some difficulty in entering my thick clothing, he yet was breaking my bones in fine style. I made as good a fight as I could with my left hand, in which I had a whip, and the men outside hurried with iron bars and spikes as soon as they could, but they would all have been too late had it not been for 'Rose.' She had been lying on her belly apparently asleep, though the sequel showed that she had been watching everything pretty closely. When she thought things had gone about far enough she gave one sharp, vicious growl, and leaped from her shelf like a thunderbolt. She seized Jimmy by the neck, and shook him as a terrier would a rat till he yelled for mercy. I was badly mauled, but I took my whip in my left hand and went through the rest of the performance. I made Jimmy go through all his tricks—mounting on my back, standing on his hind legs, and all the rest of it. Rose stood by and watched him. She noted every motion, and stood ready to take hold of him again in case of necessity."

"How did Jimmy welcome you?"

"O, he was glad enough to see me—that sort of animals have little power to remember spites or injuries."

"But don't they remember their keepers after long absences?"

"Sometimes, and that is what bothers me. I have had my animals recognize me after an absence of several months. They would hear my voice and footstep and come rubbing up against the side of the cage and put their paws out between the bars. Strange to say, they do not know a man by his features, but by his dress and more particularly his voice. If I should go into my cages with a strange suit of clothes, and should not speak, they wouldn't know me, and ten to one the beasts would try to do me a mischief. But let me put on the spangled dress again, or let them hear my voice, and all would be right."

This conversation led to some talk about how these fierce brutes are brought under the subjection of man. Mr. White was willing to impart information, and some of the results of his many years of experience are given below:

Animals taken full grown from the woods and jungles are generally much more easily trained than those that have been born in captivity and brought up by the human hand or by the mothers in the cage. These latter, or "pet" animals, nearly always acquire many tricks and manners which they have to unlearn before they can be properly taught. Then, too, their constant familiarity from early cubhood with mankind tends greatly to divest them of that fear of the human animal which is the first essential in their education to proper subjection. On the other hand, those beasts that are brought up so as to know no sentiment but fear, soon learn that their ill-temper will not be tolerated for a moment, and that a fit of sulks only brings heavy punishment.

The first great agent in taming wild beasts just taken from their native forests is partial starvation. They are kept without food until they are both weakened in strength and subdued in temper and fierceness. Food is then given them by degrees, always by the same person until they learn to recognize man. As soon as expedient, their claws are cut so closely that their power of mishief is nearly destroyed from these weapons; they are then muzzled, and having been sufficiently accustomed to the presence of the keeper, they are then exercised in a cage one at a time. The slightest sign of viciousness is instantly punished by a sharp blow, until the animal learns to know the whip and to understand the word of command.

The same routine is pursued in the case of lions, tigers, panthers, leopards, and all other animals of the cat kind, which must ever be controlled by fear, and must be constantly watched lest their treacherous natures break out.

To teach an animal to jump through a hoop, a piece of meat is suspended in such a manner as to be only accessible by a leap through the ring—after a few repetitions the animal soon learns to connect the ideas of food and the ring and the act of leaping, and will soon make the leap and be content to wait for the reward. It will be noticed that a cage of performing animals is always fed during or immediately after their exhibition.

The nose is the most vulnerable spot. A sharp blow on the nose with a whip will give a lion or tiger exquisite pain, when a hit with a sledge-hammer between the eyes he wouldn't mind at all. Next to the nose, the paws are the most sensitive portions of the frame.

It is often asserted that red-hot irons are used in training animals for public performances. This is all a mistake. Hot irons are only resorted to when a keeper has been seized and is in imminent danger, and hot irons chance to be near. Sometimes they are used to separate two large lions or tigers which are fighting and cannot be driven apart in any other way. Long bars of iron or steel, heated to red heat in a forge, are pressed against the jaws and teeth of two fighting brutes. For a time each imagines that the unwonted pain comes from his adversary, but a few minutes serve to convince both that some power more potent is at work, and they quickly return to milder duties. A lesson of hot irons seldom has to be repeated more than once a year.

Of those animals seen in an ordinary performing cage, the hardest to train is the black leopard. This animal is treacherous, and always liable to break out in open insubordination.

Thus it will be seen that both in the training and the performing of caged animals, and in the keeping them in subjection at all times, the one element of fear is all that is mainly relied on. Only thus can they be managed with even tolerable safety, and no matter how carefully managed, they will, in some sudden, inexplicable fit of ill-temper, attack a keeper whose daily companion they have been for years.

Despite a commonly-received opinion to the contrary, basts—the larger felines at all events—do not seem to possess the means of communicating to each other any acquired knowledge. Each one has to be taught separately. The others tell him nothing. Among certain of the smaller animals this fact does not hold, as may appear in the sequel.

A full-grown, lion, not less than six or ten years old, if properly trained for the public, is worth $10,000. A lioness perhaps a little more, on account of the possibility of her bringing into the world a family of cubs.

A tiger trained is worth about	$ 7,000
A tigress trained is worth about	7,000
A leopard trained is worth about	500
A panther, not trained, will bring, according to age and size	100@200
Training adds to the value about	400
A black leopard, very rare, the one now at Barnum's being the only trained one in the business at present, is worth	1,000

The last few years have dissipated certain ideas formerly universally prevalent about certain animals which were notably the hyena, zebra, rhinoceros, gnu, or horned horse, and one or two of the minor animals not usually considered worthy the trouble of training. The first, and indeed we believe the only rhinoceros tamed, was broken by Dan Rice, when he was a circus proprietor. He broke the unwieldy brute to run around the ring backwards and forwards, being always controlled by a long ring-rein fastened to an iron ring in his nose. This was all the sulky beast could be compelled to do. He would learn no trick, and was always dangerous.

The first hyena ever trained, or whose supposed fierce nature was overcome so as to submit to being handled by man, was one which was experimented on in 1854 by Charles White in Brooklyn. He was five or six years old, full-grown, and as full of vice as all of his grave-robbing fraternity are reported to be. The first time the daring trainer ventured into the cage, Mr. Hyena came at him, mouth wide open, tusks protruding, screaming like an angry horse. It was evidently to be a sharp fight between the man and the brute. Mr. White, with a huge club in his hands, awaited the coming of the amiable Mr. H. As soon as Mr. H. got near enough, Mr. White prostrated him with the club. This was repeated again and again, till at length he needed no more club, and from this time was as docile as any untrained animal, and needed no more and no severer correction than does a young lion or leopard.

One large show in London had several hyenas trained to do tricks—they were performed by a stalwart negro, who, among other feats, fastened an iron belt around his waist, upon which were a number of hooks arranged like those we see in butcher's shop. On these steel hooks were stuck pieces of raw and bloody meat, which the animals were permitted to take off with their teeth when they had done their tricks. Their performances were similar to those of other animals, consisting of various leaps over the keeper's back, over bars, through rings, and over banners, together with taking part in sundry posturing and grouping, of which the man is always the central figure.

Zebras have been so often broken to harness within the past ten or a dozen years, that the old notion of their untamable nature has about faded out of recollection. It is by no means uncommon to see zebras driven about the ring in harness by circus managers.

The gnu, or horned horse, formerly thought to be the unicorn of the Bible, is another of the so-called untamable. He has, however, been subdued to about the same extent as Dan Rice's rhinoceros—that is, simply to leading, and that, too, with the greatest precaution.

Bears, those which are so tame as to walk the street comparatively unguarded, with the organ grinders, are easily taught. Bruin is simply a great, good-natured pig, rather disinclined to active exertion of all sorts. Having a particularly sensitive spot in the instance of his nose, he is comparatively easy to manage. His intelligence is nearly equal to that of the dog, and were it not for his unwieldy shape and his great weight and tendency to corpulency could easily be brought to do all the jumps and rollings-over and other feats of agility in which the dog so much excels. The most that is required of him, however, is to climb poles and posts, to pass around a tin cup for pennies, to go through various semi-military maneuvers with a stick in imitation of a gun, and occasionally to take part in a simulated sparring match, in which, slow as he is, he is certain to win. Sometimes poor bruin will perform a peculiar slow series of steps, which is called a dance, and a well trained bear will even waltz with his master.

Beyond the rough training elephants receive in the countries where they are caught, which teaches them to mind the words of the keeper, and to submit to its necessary bonds, it has to undergo a special education to enable it to go through its many tricks in the broad arena of the circus. Being more intelligent than a dog, as tractable as a horse, as full of pride and vanity as a woman, and quite as willing to learn as his master is to have him, his teaching is a matter of but short time. He learns by imitation, and will adopt a new trick from seeing another animal perform it far more readily than a dog will.—New York Mercury.

Frightful Suicide.

A Baltimore paper of a recent date has the following account of the frightful suicide of a love-sick man in that city: Mount Vernon place, and in fact the whole city, as soon as it was noised around, was startled this afternoon by the announcement that a man had been dashed from the parapet of the Washington monument to the ground below, a distance of nearly 150 feet. A more desperate deed could hardly be imagined, the mere thought of which is calculated to curdle the blood in one's veins. About half-past 3 o'clock in the afternoon, a heavy thud as of something falling over his head, was heard by the young man who had charge of the door of the monument, and going out to ascertain the cause he discovered on the top of the marble base a shapeless mass of human flesh and bones. The front of the base of the monument and the pavement were bespattered with blood and brains. A crowd soon gathered, but so shocking was the spectacle that it was some time before any step was taken to report the horrible affair to the proper authorities. Coroner Walker held an inquest, the jury returning a formal verdict. The only article found on the body was the following note, written in lead pencil, on a scrap of paper:

Now, Miss Cobb, I leave thee in these words, hoping to hear from you. Fare thee well, still forever, still forever fare thee well. Even though unforgiven, never against thee shall my heart rebel.

There was nothing to indicate who the unfortunate man was. He looked to be about 30 years of age, and was genteely but plainly dressed. The keeper of the monument recognized the deceased as the same man who, during the morning, had visited the place; and the supposition is that his courage failed him then, and he returned again to carry out his design, if it was a case of suicide. A lady and gentleman were going up to the top of the monument just as the desperate descent was being made from the outside. The lady, not knowing of the occurrence, looked over the parapet and saw the body lying below, and was so startled at the ghastly sight that she fainted and fell into the arms of the gentleman accompanying her. Mr. Faust, a bricklayer, happened to be passing along the street and was a witness of the fearful fall, a sight, he says, he will not likely forget as long as he lives. Every bone in the unfortunate man's body was broken and the back part of his skull, from the terrible manner in which it was crushed, is supposed to have been the first part that struck the stone work. The monument was erected fifty years ago, the shaft being the highest in the country.

News from the Far East.

By the arrival of the steamer Colorado at San Francisco, we get the following interesting budget of news from China and Japan:

Hostile feeling has been manifested by the Chinese in the north for some months, and seems to be extending, venting itself in the mobbing of foreigners when opportunity offers.

The steamer Gwalior broke down 150 miles from Hong Kong, was unable to sail, and drifted down to Hainan, where she anchored. A boat, sent in charge of the second officer to Macao for assistance, was overhauled and robbed by pirates on the way, but was allowed to proceed, and eventually reached her destination.

In Japan, a sharp earthquake shock was felt at Nigasaki on the 25th. A heavy typhoon visited Kobe on the 9th.

Several prosecutions have taken place under the new press law.

The government is actively constructing new roads.

Rumors as to the visit of the Mikado to England are said to be premature.

Notes of hand, payable on demand, having been issued by Mr. Blakeston, of Hakodadi, their circulation has been forbidden by the government.

The Coreans are still reported as disinclined to enter into diplomatic relations with Japan. One alleged reason is the adoption by the Japanese of European clothing.

The Russian Commission for the exchange of Saghalien having arrived, it is expected the matter will shortly be concluded.

Torture will, it is said, be very shortly abolished in the Japanese courts.

The Tokashama mines are gradually being extended and worked under the foreign system.

Old Aunty Stewart turned her hundred and eleventh birthday a few days since at Liberty, Ind., and toddled around among her neighbors smoking her pipe as though nothing had happened. She recollects seeing G. W. when he crossed the Delaware, and happened to be in Yorktown when Cornwallis surrendered. She is as spry as a grasshopper, and will go to the Centennial next year if nothing happens and the weather is pleasant; but no one can bet on a woman at 111.

A simple stone is to commemorate the spot at Ems where, in July, 1870, the German Emperor told the French Ambassador, Benedetti, to go about his business.

WAR ON THE BANKS.

The Democratic Programme, as Mapped Out by One of Those Wise Washington Correspondents.

Among the important questions bound to occupy a considerable share of the attention of the Democratic House of Representatives, says the Washington correspondent of the Chicago Times, is the status of the national banks. An examination of the official record of Congress, since the war, shows that, in the last ten years, a remarkably small proportion of Democratic votes have been cast on any question affecting the currency which could, by implication even, be considered as favoring the national bank system in any respect. There is scarcely a leading Democratic politician, in or out of Congress, who has not taken the occasion, whenever offered, to denounce the national banks as a monopoly. Such men as Senator Bayard have never remitted in the effort to remove the restrictions placed upon State banks. This opposition to the national bank system does not involve at all the question of inflation, for upon it both hard and soft-money Democrats are very generally united. It is expected that before many weeks of the next session have passed an onslaught on the national banks will be actively inaugurated in the House, and the best informed politicians here expect to see opposition to the national banks made a leading feature of the National Democratic Congress. Whatever adverse action to the banks may be taken would, as a matter of course, be entirely inoperative while a Republican President and a Republican Senate remain in power. In addition to this, it is not certain, even if the Democrats had entire possession of the government, whether they would agree on the details of legislation concerning the finances which would have to follow, necessarily a wiping out of the present system. The soft-money Democrats have always pressed for the substitution of greenbacks for national bank notes. The hard-money Democrats are willing to compel the banks to withdraw their notes, but they are inflexibly opposed to any further issues of greenbacks. So far as taking away the privilege of issuing notes is concerned, it is a question whether the banks will care very much about it; but the rag-money people will certainly hold on to the bank-notes if they can't get greenbacks for them. The great probability is, therefore, that the national banks will, even in the event of entire Democratic success, not be materially interfered with, at least for a long time to come. They don't appear to be satisfied with this, but show evident alarm by the decided manner in which their influence and their money is always arrayed against Democratic candidates, as much in the East as in the West. If the bank circulation was entirely withdrawn, the whole labor of resumption would fall upon the government.

The Condition of Workingmen.

Mr. Edward Young, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, has published the concluding portion of his special report on labor in Europe and America, and it comes to us in a very interesting pamphlet of a hundred pages. The information furnished by the work is most valuable and interesting, but the tables are so extended that it is difficult to condense any of them into the limits of a newspaper article. Only a few general facts can be given. The average of workmen's wages in the United States, excluding the Pacific coast, is as follows, varying greatly, of course, according to locality:

Farm laborers	$1.26
Common laborers	1.36
Female domestics (with board)	.46
Blacksmiths	2.79
Masons and bricklayers	3.33
Cabinetmakers	1.82
Coopers	2.81
Carpenters	2.69
Painters	2.66
Plasterers	3.14
Shoemakers	2.25
Stonecutters	3.26
Tailors	2.57

The average weekly expenses of workmen and their families in the New England States run from $8.23 to $13; in the Middle States from $9.62 to $15; in the Western States from $7.97 to $23.59; in the Southern States from $8.15 to $11 80.

One very interesting table is that showing the yearly expenditures and earnings of 124 skilled workmen in the State of Massachusetts for the year 1874. We extract from each of the most prominent trades one as an example, choosing for this purpose the person receiving about the average wages:

No. 1, Bricklayer—Earnings, $810; expenses, $810; has four rooms in house; pays $204 rent; five persons in family; has parlor and piano.

No. 2, Carpenter—Earnings, $720; has four rooms; pays $100 rent; four in family; has parlor and organ; total expenses, $720.

No. 3, Mason—Earnings, $800; five persons in family; occupies five rooms, all carpeted; pays $192 rent; has parlor and piano; total expenses, $778.45.

No. 4, Painter—Earnings, $818; five rooms, all carpeted; rent, $175; has parlor; four in family; total expenses, $770.09.

No. 5, Shoemaker—Earnings, $561; four rooms; rent, $150; parlor; four in family; expenses, $561.

No. 6, Blacksmith—Earnings, $797; five rooms; rent, $132; five in family; parlor; total expenses, $797.

No. 7, Machinist—Earnings, $720; five rooms; rent, $150; four in family; parlor and piano; expenses, $720.

No. 8, Cabinetmaker—Earnings, $880; four rooms; rent, $192; four in family; parlor and piano; expenses, $820.82.

Nearly all these, and they are a fair average of the whole 124, have sewing machines, and a large proportion of them are regular attendants at church. The rent paid runs from $50 to $400 per year.

An Interesting Case.

An interesting suit, involving some old political history, is soon to be tried at Washington. The retrocession suit, involving the validity of the act of Congress of 1846, retroceding the town and county of Alexandria to Virginia, is on the calendar of the Supreme Court of the United States, and will be reached about the middle of January. Phillips, who had paid taxes under protest to Payne, the State Collector, sues Payne to receive back the tax-money on the ground that the State of Virginia has no right to collect taxes in Alexandria. The case was decided, as a matter of form, in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, against the plaintiff, in order that an appeal might be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States. The grounds on which the plaintiff proceeds are: First, that Congress had no power to make the cession, and, second, that even admitting the power to cede, the act of retrocession was invalid, for its operation was made to depend on its acceptance by a majority of the voters of Alexandria, and that Congress had no authority thus to delegate its power, and that such delegation was void. It is understood that should the Supreme Court determine the retrocession unconstitutional, the formal announcement of the decision will be postponed until such action is taken in Congress as will avoid all trouble in regard to conflicting jurisdictions, and will make valid all acts done in pursuance of the State law while Alexandria remained a portion of Virginia.

THE PRESS.

Brief History of American Journalism, by George Alfred Townsend.

American journalism is 135 years old, next year it will be older than our National Centennial by 86 years. The head of the press was Benjamin Harris, of Boston. His paper was entitled Publick Occurrences. Franklin's brother, early James, came in second, and afterward fourth. In 1722 Benjamin became a live editor, and considering his times he was the greatest editor humanity has produced. In our period such a man would be a vast advance upon any known editor. How he found so much leisure for social and political life and science is a marvel. We look with sympathy upon the Philadelphia editor of the present day when we remember Franklin—his library, his hospital, his streets and railroads, his fire buckets and his kite. And yet the old rascal had an illegitimate son and married the grass-widow of a tinker, and he was the great-great-great-grandfather of Dick Irwin, who lobbied the Pacific Mail subsidy through Congress.

New York journalism began six years after Philadelphia and thirty-five years after Boston. Wm. Bradford, at the age of 70, started the New York Gazette, in 1725, under Gov. Fletcher's patronage, and so virtuous was the business in those days that he lived to 92. Go over the Trinity churchyard and see his gravestone, itself 123 years old, and reflect that if the old chap had lived in these days he would have been called a political stipendiary and his paper a kitchen organ. The fourth city to have a press was Annapolis, Md., in 1727, and the fifth Newport, in 1732, James Franklin, before referred to, founding it. The first newspaper in the South was published at Charleston, 1731, five years before Virginia had a press at Williamsburg. Connecticut had a newspaper at New Haven in 1755, Delaware one at Wilmington in 1761, New Jersey the first in 1777. There were forty-three papers in America at the date King George acknowledged our independence. The first regular daily in America was issued in 1784 by Franklin's grandson, Bache—the Philadelphia Advertiser. The next year New York had a daily issued by Childs (not G. W.), also called the Advertiser. The first Western daily paper was the Cincinnati Gazette, issued in 1827, after twenty-one years of hebdomadal existence. The St. Louis Republican followed in 1828. The Charleston Courier, started by a Massachusetts Yankee more than seventy years ago, disposed of its files in 150 volumes last year for the sum of $2,250—a remarkably low price, as there is no duplicate of them. Albany had her first daily in 1824, the News. The New York daily press of the present day dates as follows: Sun, 1833; Herald, 1835; Tribune, 1841; Times, 1851; World, 1859. The great names in journalism are Franklin, Gales, Bryant, Greeley, Morse and Hoe. There are about 550 daily newspapers in America now, with a combined circulation of less than 3,000,000, or one newspaper to every twelve souls. No country in the world approaches this standard of circulation; no other form of government could stimulate it. The press owes everything to the republic; the republic too often gets scant encouragement from the press. To-day in France the editors are petitioning the government for liberty; in San Francisco the editors are outraging the distinguished dead. Rochefort is banished to New Caledonia, but men like Story live without challenge while challenging everything.

A Word for the Women.

We do not hesitate to say that the average woman, educated in the better class of schools in this country, is a better scholar, and a more capable and accomplished person, than the average college graduate of the other sex. What we want is cheaper schools of equal excellence. The farmer's boy goes to college, finds cheap tuition, wins a scholarship perhaps, boards in commons, earns money during vacation, and gets through, while his sister stays at home, because the only places where she can get an equal education are expensive beyond her means. There is no college that needs to be so richly endowed as a woman's college. Women are not men, quarrel with that fact as we may, and they cannot get along so cheaply and with such helpfulness as men while going through the processes of their education. If we are to have women's colleges, we must have well-paid professors, philosophical apparatus, cabinets, collections, art-galleries, laboratories, and they must be provided for by private munificence. Provision should be made for the poor, so that high education shall come within the reach of all. There is not a woman's college, or an advanced public institution for the education of women that is not to-day in need of large endowments for the purpose of bringing its advantages within the reach of those whose means are small.

Now we commend this matter particularly to rich women. There are many, scattered up and down the country, who are wondering what they shall do with their money when, and even before, they die. To all these we beg the privilege of commending this great object. Let the boys alone. They have been pretty well taken care of already, and the men will look after them. It is for you, as women wishing well to your sex, and anxious for its elevation in all possible ways, to endow these institutions that are springing up about the country in its interest, so that the poor shall have an equal chance with the rich. You can greatly help to give the young women of all classes as good a chance as their brothers enjoy, and you can hardly claim a great deal of womanly feeling if you do not do it.—Dr. J. G. Holland, in Scribner for October.

THE STRAY DONKEY.

BY JOHN G. SAXE.

Once on a time—the tale is told
In a rare volume, quaint and old—
A farmer's ass, one summer's day,
Broke from his fold, and went astray.
The owner searched for miles around,
But nowhere could the ass be found;
On market day he tries again
His anxious quest—but all in vain;
Then in the neighboring town he sought
The truant beast—but all for nought;
Next to the bellman he applied
And paid to have his donkey cried;
Poor Hodge had better spared the cost;
'Twas merely time and money lost.
At last, when he was on the brink
Of grim despair, he chanced to think
It might be wise—although 'twas hard—
To name some suitable reward;
And so he bade the bellman say
A good fat pig should be the pay
Of him who found the said estray.
At this, the crier—a wag profest,
Who dearly loved a merry jest—
Took off his hat, politely bowed,
And thus addressed the gaping crowd:
"If any person here today
Will, on his sacred honor, say
That never yet his heart inclined
In loving wise tow'rd womankind,
To him I promise to accord
A good fat pig as his reward!"
At this, a coxcomb in the crowd,
In quick response, exclaimed aloud:
"The pig is mine! in all my life
I never loved maid, widow, wife,
Or aught that wears a petticoat;
Now, if you please, I'll take the shoat!"
"Here, Hodge!" the bellman cried, "look here
(Seizing the dandy by the ear)
Bring on your pig—the ass is found!
And here you have him safe and sound!"

A Spunky Hen.

The San Francisco Post says Mr. Stirling, the sexton of Cavalry Church, is the possessor of a remarkable hen, and relates the following incident in the life of that sagacious fowl. She brought out a brood of chickens the other day, which event created considerable excitement and festivity in a colony of rats, who at once commenced a system of plunder, contenting themselves with a chick and a half for dinner daily. The hen stood this massacre of the innocents for a day or two, but yesterday morning, as a sleek rat skulked along in the neighborhood of a chicken which was carelessly trifling with a crust of breed, the wrath of the mother was aroused. She flew at the rat, caught him by the back, and carrying the robber to a tub full of water, dropped him into it with a revengeful "cluck." The rat was drowned, and the brood has since been free from the raids of surviving rodents.

The Indian Problem.

The savages on the Sioux Indian Reservation, says the Chicago Journal, will discover soon that they have much offended the kind hand at Washington which has for so many years supplied their every need. These Indians would not listen to the proposition of the government for a new treaty, neither treat the Commission with proper respect. The immediate result of this conduct will be a thorough overhauling of Indian matters, and the introduction of a firmer course of action toward the unreasonable reds. As a first step, the acting Secretary of the Interior has sent dispatches to all the agents on the Sioux Reservation, imperatively ordering them not to issue any more annuities to the tribe until the Indians come in and undergo a new counting and registering. The latitude heretofore granted the Indians in this respect has been of much profit to them, but they have forfeited all claims to mild treatment, and must expect to get along on strict "stick measure" hereafter.

How Jackson Green Deceived His Grandfather.

Jackson Green is 14 years old, and he lives on Sixth street. The other day, while reading a dime novel, his grandfather came in with the paper, and asked him to read the President's message. It irritated Jackson to break off his story just where the trapper was going to be scalped, so he made up his mind to have revenge on his grandfather. He took up the paper and started off as follows:

The business of the Patent Office shows a steady increase. Since 1836 over 155,000 patents have been issued. Officer Deck, of the station-house, wants it distinctly understood that he is not the Deck confined there a few days since as a lunatic.

"What!" exclaimed the old man, "is that in the message?"

"Right here, every word of it," replied Jackson; and he continued:

The business of the Agricultural Bureau is rapidly growing, and the Department grounds are being enlarged, and the highest prize in a Chinese lottery is twenty-nine cents, and the man who draws it has his name in the paper, and is looked upon as a heap of a man.

"What! What is that?" roared the old man. "I never heard of such a message as that!"

"I can't help it," replied Jackson. "You asked me to read the message, and I am reading it." And he went on:

During the year, 5,758 new applications for army invalid pensions were allowed, at an aggregate annual rate of $89,332; and kerosene oil is the best furniture oil; it cleanses, adds a polish, and preserves from the ravages of insects.

"Lor' save me! but I never heard of the likes before!" exclaimed the old man. "I've read every President's message since Jackson's time, but I never saw anything like this!"

During the year 3,164,314 acres of public domain were certified to railroads, against 6,000,000 acres the preceding year, and you will save money by buying your Christmas presents in the brick block; fine toys of every description at reduced prices.

"Jackson Green, does that message read that way?" asked the old man.

"You don't suppose I'd lie to you?" inquired Jackson, putting on an injured look.

"Well, it seems singular," mused the old man. "I shouldn't wonder if Grant was tired when he wrote that."

Jackson went on:

There are 17,620 survivors of the war of 1812 on the pension rolls, at a total annual rate of $1,691,520, and still another lot of those $1 felt skirts; they go like hot cakes on a cold morning.

"Hold on, Jackson—stop right there!" said the old man, as he rose up. "You needn't read another word of that message. If Gen. Grant thinks he can insult the American people with impunity, he will find himself mistaken. You may throw that paper in the stove, Jackson, and let this be an awful example to you never to taste intoxicating drinks."

Jackson tossed the paper and resumed his dime novel, while the old gent leaned back and pondered upon the degradation of men in high places.—New Orleans Picayune.

Fly-Catching Rats.

Mr. C. B. Odell, at his hotel on Front street, is the happy owner of a fly-exterminator, which for thorough work is unsurpassed by anything we have ever seen. In one of the windows fronting on Front street, where samples of his wares are occasionally shown, a rat began several weeks since to make sly visits, and secure a good meal as often as he came, by catching the many flies which are on the panes of glass. He grew very expert at it, and though at first quite shy, soon became emboldened when he found he was not disturbed in his foraging expeditions, and would pursue his business not in the least intimidated by spectators, who were only separated from him by a pane of glass. He obtained entrance to this window by gnawing a hole through the wooden base, coming from below. For weeks he has pursued his fly-hunting business undisturbed. One Sunday one of the waiters discovered him in the act of introducing a friend or member of his family to his foraging ground. The new-comer was very shy, and only put his head through while the old habitue tried to coax him in the window. He would catch a fly, gravely hand it to his friend, who would as gravely eat it, and look for more. By degrees he lost a little of his fear, walked out, and soon became an expert in the new business. Either one or both may be seen almost any day by any one who may be patient enough to wait for their appearance a short time.—Newburg (N. Y.) Telegraph.

A Prehistoric Road.

Several years ago portions of an old macadamized road were discovered on the bank of the Monongahela river, near Fairmount, in West Virginia, and a recent examination of the place by a government surveying party, has resulted in tracing the road for nearly eleven miles along the bottom land between the hills and the river, though in some places it has been washed away. The stone with which it was constructed appears to have been burnt, and the material employed was composed of boulders of red sandstone, which must have been brought from a distance, there being few if any boulders in the river or adjacent country. It is supposed that they were broken into pieces by first heating and then throwing cold water upon them. The width of the road is about fifteen feet; in depth the broken stone varies from six to eighteen inches, while it is generally covered by from two to five feet of alluvial soil. At the crossings of streams there are no traces of bridge abutments, or piers, which leads to the conclusion that the streams were crossed on wooden bridges. At many points the road is covered with trees over 150 years old, which shows that it must have been made previous to the advent of the white men in this country. Probably the road was the work of the prehistoric race known as the mound-builders.

"On which side of the platform is my train?" asked a stranger in a Jersey City depot, the other day. "Well, my friend," replied a gentleman, passing, "If you take the left, you'll be right, if you take the right, you'll be left."

Cabinet or Parlor Organs.

These have become the most popular of large musical instruments. There are now about two hundred and fifty makers of them in the United States, who produce more than forty thousand organs per annum. Most of these are very poor instruments. This is naturally so, because there are few articles in the manufacture of which so much saving can be made by the use of inferior, improperly prepared material, and inferior workmanship, and yet which, when finished, show so little difference to the average purchaser. The important parts of an organ, made as well as they can be, cost two or three times as much as if made as low as possible. Yet, when the organ is done, it is not easy from casual hearings to tell the difference between the best and a very poor one. Especially when shown by one who knows how to cover up defects, to one who has not special skill in such matters, it is not difficult to make a poor organ appear a good one.

The temptation to makers, then, to produce, at a fraction of the cost, an organ which will sell almost as well as a good one, is almost irresistible. Hence the fact that so few good organs are made and so many poor ones, and that the country is flooded with peddlers and dealers selling these poor organs, which pay such large profits. The buyer of the poor organ does not fail to find out his mistake after a while. The thin, reedy tone of his cheap organ soon becomes offensive; it works noisily and roughly, is constantly out of order, and becomes useless by the time a really good instrument would have been getting into its prime. A good organ ought to last a generation, at least; a poor one may last five years, with considerable tinkering, or may break down much sooner.

There is one safe way. Get a genuine production of one of the very best makers and you cannot go astray. Among these undoubtedly stands pre-eminent the Mason & Hamlin Organ Co., whose organs are so well known that other makers are generally content to claim that they can make as good an organ as the Mason & Hamlin. They invented and introduced the Cabinet or Parlor Organ in its improved form, started with and have always closely adhered to the policy of making only the best work, have shown such skill as has given their organs the highest reputation, not only in this country but also in Europe. At the Great Exposition at Vienna, in competition with eighty of the best makers in the world they obtained the highest medals. To enumerate the competitions at which they have received similar honors would be to give a list of the fairs at which they have exhibited; and to mention the prominent musicians who recommend their organs as unequaled would really be to give a very good list of the most illustrious musical names in the country, with a good representation in Europe.

One who obtains a Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organ need have no doubt that he has the best instrument of its class which can be made.—New York Independent.

China's Population.

The Shanghai Courier, which ought to know something about it, says the population of China is a Sphynx-like riddle. The population is said to be immense, and that word seems to be the limit of what can be said about it. All the figures about millions are evasive, and nobody knows anything about it, even the oldest inhabitant hesitating to express an opinion upon the subject. The intelligent natives know nothing about it, and if there be a death rate there is no record of it. Even in small towns the numbers of families are unknown, and whatever figures are given, whether they be in the hundred thousands or millions, they must be qualified with the words "more or less."

CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED.

SCHENCK'S PULMONIC SYRUP,
SCHENCK'S SEA WEED TONIC,
SCHENCK'S MANDRAKE PILLS,

Are the only medicines that will cure Pulmonary Consumption.

Frequently medicines that will stop a cough will occasion the death of the patient; they lock up the liver, stop the circulation of the blood, hemorrhage follows, and, in fact, they clog the action of the very organs that caused the cough.

Liver Complaint and Dyspepsia are the causes of two-thirds of the cases of Consumption. Many persons complain of a dull pain in the side, constipation, coated tongue, pain in the shoulder-blade, feelings of drowsiness and restlessness, the food lying heavily on the stomach, accompanied with acidity and belching up of wind.

These symptoms usually originate from a disordered condition of the stomach or a torpid liver.

Persons so affected, if they take one or two heavy colds, and if the cough in these cases be suddenly checked, will find the stomach and liver clogged, remaining torpid and inactive, and almost before they are aware the lungs are a mass of sores and ulcerated, the result of which is death.

Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup is an expectorant which does not contain opium or anything calculated to check a cough suddenly.

Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic dissolves the food, mixes with the gastric juices of the stomach, aids digestion, and creates a ravenous appetite.

When the bowels are costive, skin sallow, or the symptoms otherwise of a bilious tendency, Schenck's Mandrake Pills are required.

These medicines are prepared only by
J. H. SCHENCK & SON,
N. E. corner Sixth and Arch Streets, Phila.
And are for sale by all druggists and dealers.

1. Good spirits, disappearance of weakness, languor, melancholy; increase and hardness of flesh and muscles, etc.

2. Strength increases, appetite improves, relish for food, no more sour eructations or waterbrash, good digestion, calm and undisturbed sleep, awaken fresh and vigorous.

3. Disappearance of spots, blotches, pimples; the skin looks clear and healthy, the urine changed from its turbid and cloudy appearance to a clear sherry or amber color; water passes freely from the bladder through the urethra without pain or scalding, little or no sediment; no pain or weakness.

4. Marked diminution of quantity and frequency of involuntary weakening discharges (if afflicted that way), with certainty of permanent cure. Increased strength exhibited in the secreting glands, and functional harmony restored to the several organs.

5. Yellow tinge on the white of the eyes, and the swarthy, saffron appearance of the skin changed to a clear, lively and healthy color.

6. Those suffering from weak or ulcerated lungs or tubercles will realize great benefit in expectorating freely the tough phlegm or mucus from the lungs, air cells, bronchi or windpipe, throat or head; diminishing of the frequency of cough; general increase of strength throughout the system; stoppage of night sweats and pains and feeling of weakness around the ankles, legs, shoulders, etc.; cessation of cold and chills, sense of suffocation; hard breathing and paroxysms of cough on lying down or arising in the morning. All these distressing symptoms gradually and surely disappear.

7. As day after day the SARSAPARILLIAN is taken, new signs of returning health will appear; as the blood improves in strength and purity, disease will diminish, and all foreign and impure deposits, nodes, tumors, cancers, hard lumps, etc., be resolved away and the unsound made sound and healthy; ulcers, fever sores, syphilitic sores, chronic skin diseases gradually disappear.

8. In cases where the system has been salivated, and Mercury, Quicksilver, Corrosive Sublimate, (the principal constituent in the advertised Sarsaparillas, associated in some cases with Hyd. of Potassa) have accumulated and become deposited in the bones, joints, etc., causing caries of the bones, rickets, spinal curvatures, contortions, white swellings, varicose veins, etc., the SARSAPARILLIAN will resolve away these deposits and exterminate the virus of the disease from the system.

9. If those who are taking these medicines for the cure of Chronic, Scrofulous or Syphilitic diseases, however slow may be the cure "feel better," and find their general health improving, their flesh and weight increasing, or even keeping its own, it is a sure sign that the cure is progressing. In these diseases the patient either gets better or worse—the virus of the disease is not inactive; if not arrested and driven from the blood, it will spread and continue to undermine the constitution. As soon as the SARSAPARILLIAN makes the patient "feel better," every hour you will grow better and increase in health, strength and flesh.

The great power of this remedy is in diseases that threaten death—as in Consumption of the Lungs and Tuberculous Phthisis, Scrofula, Syphiloid Diseases, Wasting, Degeneration, and Ulceration of the Kidneys, Diabetes, Stoppage of Water (instantaneous relief afforded where catheters have to be used, thus doing away with the painful operation of using these instruments), dissolving stone in the bladder, and in all cases of Inflammation of the Bladder and Kidneys, in Chronic cases of Leucorrhea and Uterine diseases.

In tumors, nodes, hard lumps and syphiloid ulcers; in dropsy and venereal sore throat, ulcers, and in tubercle of the lungs; in gout, dyspepsia, rheumatism, rickets in mercurial deposits—it is in these terrible forms of disease, where the human body has become a complete wreck, and where every hour of existence is torture wherein this great remedy challenges the astonishment and admiration of the sick. It is in such cases, where all the pleasures of existence appear cut off from the unfortunate, and by its wonderful, almost supernatural agency, it restores the hopeless to a new life and new existence where this great remedy stands alone in its might and power.

In the ordinary skin diseases that every one is more or less troubled with, a few doses will in most cases, and a few bottles in the more aggravated forms, work a permanent cure.

Those afflicted with chronic diseases should purchase a package containing one dozen bottles. Price $10 per dozen, or $5 per half dozen bottles, or $1 per bottle. Sold by druggists.

TEAS—Our Tea trade is the wonder of the country. No one ever dreamt such a trade could be built up. We sell more chests daily than some houses do pounds, and still our trade is increasing. It is a uncommon thing for us to purchase two hundred chests at a time, and here is the great element of our success. As by purchasing such larger quantities direct of the Importers we save our consumer, at least the three extra profits of jobbers, speculator and wholesale grocer, who make 10 to 20 cents per pound. This our customers get the benefit of. No middle men with us. As with teas, so with sugar coffee, syrup and all other goods. No secret—it is simply in purchasing all our goods at first hands and re-selling direct to our customers at small margin, and save them at least 20 to 40 cents a pound on tea and 20 per cent on all other goods.

It may be converted into a single delivery machine. It has a simple and steady means of taking up the wear on the plunger head and sides of the chamber, thus preventing all leakage of mud, and adding years of service to the machine. It makes from 400 to 700 rods of tile per day. It is fully warranted. It may readily be adapted to Steam Power. The dies are finished with much care. Dealers and Founders at moderate prices.

JOHN L. DAVIS,

Railroad Service Reform

The following special rules have been unanimously adopted by the bummers at Curlie's Lunch Room, Garrett City, Indiana.

No engineer will be allowed on the road, who did not loose two or more limbs in the late war, can run a sewing machine, dance the "Boston Dip," construct a balloon, file a meat saw, jump an engine and train of cars over a thirty foot gap, without winking or swallowing his cud of tobacco.

No fireman shall be allowed on the road, who has voted a straight Republican ticket twice, 'at least,' understands short hand, has visited the Holy land, flirt with the gals and wear a diamond pin in his shirt bosom.

Brakemen are required to believe in the two meal system lavender kid gloves patent leather boots, part their hair in the middle in first class order, announce the names of stations in seven different languages without giving them the usual twang, and have an unmarried sister.

Conductors must wear corsets, swallow-tail coats and four button, white kid gloves, speak English, Irish, German and Unitedstates, use a gold pencil, wear two diamond pines, be familiar with all the current gossip and assist lady passengers on and off the cars, while they quote from "Byron," "Shelley" or the "Arabian Nights."

Baggage Masters must be capable of loading a car with large size saratogas in five minutes without starting a tack or bruising a corner, or use any words not to be found in the moral law.

Station Agents, switch tenders and gravel train, men are not allowed more than four hours sleep out of twenty-four, must wear ruffed bosom shirts, belong to a base ball club, the sons of temperance or the millitary, carry a smeling bottle, eat oysters on the half shell, and send one tenth of their earnings to the heathens.

Upon entering the car, each passenger will be supplied with a dressing gown, pair of slippers, Websters unabridged dictionary, a nut cracker, stick of chewing gum, and a patent medicine almanac.

Boys with roman noses, and open worked stockings, will pass through the [illegible] with soda and mineral water, hand glasses, tooth pi[illegible] false curls, peaches, cigars and fashion plates [illegible] latest styles of baby carriages, and bonnets for ladies and infants.

Each sleeping car will be supplied with colored boys with palm leaf fans to keep the flies from disturbing passengers, Porous plasters, jamaica ginger a dentist, corn doctor, newspaper reporter, a clergyman and a band of music.

Trains will run sixty times an hour, and no extra train will be put on without an order from the president written in blood from his own arm on gilt edge paper.

The road bed will be watered by a patent process owned and controlled exclusively by this road, and any passenger receiving a cinder in the eye will be handed a hundred dollar bill with a written apology from the board of directors.

Presidents and Ex-Presidents of the United States, foreign ministers, poets, corpse and other dignitaries will travel for half fare, if accompanied by a lady.

Should any of the boys who supply passengers with eatables, drinks, opera glasses or court plasters or those who solicit orders for thorough bred horses, mules, wild-colts, force pumps, stove pipe or marriage certificates or any employee act otherwise than gentlemanly, they will be thrown from the train by masked giants into burning chaldrons built expressly for their reception.

Newspaper boys not having the latest edition of all papers including insane asylum reports and almanacs published in the United States, Japan and England will receive a coat of tar and feathers and then be wasted in the fire box.

All trains will be supplied with bath room billiard tables, perfumery, dispensing-fountains, hammocks, rocking horses, rubber-rings, soothing syrup and all other articles to be found in the city auction room.

Children will be allowed to stand on the platform, pull the bell rope, eat crackers in the conductors lap, and throw marbles or nursing bottles at the windows and looking glasses.

"Yes, sir" promptly replied the boy as the grocer asked him if he wanted anything. "I want two ounces of ki and two ounces of pepper." "Ki? Ki?" inquired the astonished man. "Yes sir; mother told me to get ki and pepper here and some corset strings on the coner." It was a good while before the grocer got hold of the article he wanted—Detroit Free Press

"Pa," said a little boy, "does God know everything?" "Yes, my son; but why do you ask that quesion?" "Because, said the boy, "our minister prays so long telling him everything, that I thought perhaps he wasn't posted."

The Chicago & North Western R. R.

The Chicago & North-Western Railway embraces several distinct lines radiating from Chicago, West, north west, and north. It is the pioneer road of the West, and from the single line that forty years ago pushed its way over the uninhabited prairies of Northern Illinois to Galena, it has grown to be a mighty system traversing the great State of Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Michigan and Dakota—the garden of the nation, and laying the rich harvests of millions of broad acres in the lap of Chicago. The magnitude of this vast corporation can hardly be grasped by a mere showing of the statistics of its business but the fact that the combined extent of its various divisions would make a continuous line of over 2,000 miles in length, gives a faint idea of the immense amount of capital necessarily involved in its management. An exact statement we cannot give but it will approximate $72,000,000. The Company has 9,130 cars, 369 locomotives, employs 15,000 men, and its monthly expenses average about $800,000. The lines owned and operated entirely, or mainly by the Chicago & North Western Railway are as follows:

CONCLUDING REMARKS.

All the lines of the Chicago and North Western Railway system pass through the very best known farming lands in the world. Nowhere upon the globe does the harvest yield more bountifully than in Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota and Michigan. The very best portions of these great States are reached by the Nort-Western. Every mile of every land operated by the Company is first class. The rich copper and silver deposits of Michigan and Northern Wisconsin are also tributary to this road, as are the lead mines of Southern Wisconsin and Illinois, and the coal deposits of Iowa. The North Western is also favored in its connections. A large share of the freightage and traffic of the pacific Coast, of the Westren Territories, of the British possessions, and of the lands beyond the Pacific, have necessarily to pass over some one of the lines of the Chicago & North Westren Railway on their way to the Atlantic seaboard.

A word as to the managment and equipment of the road. The best evidence of the [illegible] of its trains are always on time, and its cars well filled, and as to the equipment, the many unsolicited kindly expressions which the road has ever received and is continuing to receive regarding the smoothness of track, the superior construction and elegance of the cars, is a fair indication of the drift of public opinion. One of the most important features connected with comfortable taveling is the establishing of good eating-houses at convenient distances along the line This fact which many railroad companies have entirely overlooked. the North Western Company evidently fully understood, for no other road in the West, long or shot can compare with the North-Western in this respect. Any one who has done much traveling in the West will assuredly bear out the writer in this assertion.

I will agree to send President Grant a present. I have no money, but on my grange, on the Miami, I have a herd of fine fast-trotting colts—their tails so full of burs that they stick out like hand spikes. The line of conduct chosen by a boy during the five years from fifteen to twenty will, in almost every instance, determine his character for life as he is then careful or careles, prudent or imprupent, industrious, or indolent, truthful or dissimulating, intelligent or ignorant, temperate or dissolute, so will he be in after yeares, and it needs no prophet to cast his horoscope or calculate his chances.

House Cleaning.

A Woman feels as if she had missed her destiny in some way if she has not arranged the cleaning season so as to take in one wet, miserable sunday.

There is not a woman living who has the honesty to admit she likes to clean house. She realizes just how despicable it is, just how much misery it inflicts on those about her. That is the reason she dare not come out openly before the world and boldly confess what is really the fact.

No stove is to be put up until the house is cleaned. It is immaterial what the weather is; and in the week the rejuvenating is going on a man has more misery thrust upon him, and driven into him, and filtered through him, than would seem possible for one human being to hold.

What strikes a man as being almost supernaturally remarkable is the fact that house-cleaning and the line-storm invariably strike the earth at one and the same time. He can't very well protest against the heavens, and he well knows there is no use arguing the matter with his wife.

It has been satisfactorily demonstrated that when a man steps on a bar of soap which has been left on the top step, it will start down stairs with him, and though having much the best start, will yet be overtaken and passed by him before it gets half way down. This sounds almost like an Eastern allegory, but every married man knows it is true.

There is a fire in the kitchen—a good fire. If the man of the house feels cold, why don't he go in there? It is a good place in the kitchen. Every fly in the family is in there to receive him, and prance around with him. The table is loaded with fly-specked dishes, and there is a four gallon pail of boiling water on the stove and mop-cloths and white wash pails and tinware on the floor, with a poorly discriminating girl with red arms diving to and fro with a pan of hot water in her hands. It is a little singular that the half-frozen and wholy crazed man does not take to the kitchen for comfort

Scribners' Monthly for 1876.

The publishers invite attention to the following list of some of the attractive articles secured for Scribners' Monthly, for the coming year. In the field of fiction, besides numerous novelties and shorter stories, there will be TWO REMARKABLE SERIAL STORIES by AMERICAN AUTHORS.

The first of these now complete in our hands, "GABRIEL CONROY" by BRET HARTE. Begins in the November number, and will run for twelve months. This is Mr. Hearte's first extended work The scenes and characters which the author has chosen from his favorite field, California, are painted with characteristics vivedness and power; and the work is without doubt the most graphic record of early California life that has yet appeared. We shall also begin in the January number "PHILIP NOLAN'S FRIENDS, or, SHOW YOUR PASSPORT," by EDWARD EVERETT HALE.

The scene of this story is laid in the Southwestern territory, now forming the states of Louisana and Texas at the time of Aron Burr's treason. The characters lived in a section which was now American, now French and now Spanish and this record of their adventurous lives makes a story of intense and unflagging interest throughout

A SECOND FARMER'S VACATION, by Col. Geo E. Waring, J. Col. Waring is now in Europe, visiting in a row-boat ride of two hundred and fifty miles, one of the most fertile and interesting of the vine-growing valleys of Euope. This second series of papers promises to be even more interesting than with which our readers are already familiar.

CENTENNIAL LETTERS, Edited by John Vance Cheney. A rare collection of revolutionary letters mainly from stores in the hands of the descendants of Col. Joseph Ward. They are full of interest and will be read with a rare relish in connection with the Centennial celebration of the year.

Brilliantly illustrated articles on "AMERICAN COLLEGES." Written respectively by their friends, will appear during the year. The revived interest in college life makes these papers especially timely, and will secure for them unusual attention.

OLD NEW YORK. Elegantly illustrated articles on Old New York by John F. Mines will appear at once and will attract the attention of all in city or country who make with interest the development of the great metropolis and affectionately remember the quaint peculiarities of its olden time.

Every number if profusely illustrated, thus enabling us to give to our descriptive and narative articles, an interest and permanent value never attained in a non illustrated periodical. Under its accustomed management the magazine will in the future be devoted, as it has been in the past to sound literature and christian progress.

The editorial departments occupy over twenty pages of each number and contain Dr. Holland's vigorous and timely editorials, as well as reviews, of the latest works in art literature and science.

THE PARADOX OF TIME.

Time goes, you say?—Ah no!
Alas, time stays—we go:
  Or else, were this not so,
What need to chain the hours,
For youth were always ours?
  Time goes, you say?—Ah no!

Ours is the eyes' deceit
Of men whose flying feet
  Lead through some landscape low;
We pass, and think we see
The earth's fixed surface flee;
  Alas, time stays—we go!

Once, in the days of old,
Your locks were curling gold,
  And mine had shamed the crow.
Now in the self-same stage,
We've reached the silver age;
  Time goes, you say?—Ah no!

Once when my voice was strong,
I filled the woods with song,
  To praise your "rose" and "snow";
My bird, that sang, is dead;
Where are your roses fled?
  Alas, time stays—we go!

See, in what traversed ways,
What backward fate delays
  The hopes we used to know;
Where are our old desires—
Ah, where those vanished fires?
  Time goes, you say?—Ah no!

How far, how far, O Sweet,
The past behind our feet
  Lies in the even-glow!
Now, on the forward way,
Let us fold hands and pray;
  Alas, time stays—we go!

RANK IMPOSES OBLIGATION.

"Hang Miss Ashurst!"

"Oh, Phil!"

"Well, I can't help it. Why does she come to spoil everything? Don't I know how it will be?—always Miss Ashurst to be considered, taken about, included in everything. No more drives and boat-rows, just you and me, Amy; no more evenings on the door-step. I declare I've a great mind to go over to Uncle Phil's at Goshen for a month."

"Now, Phil, please (coaxingly). "It won't be so bad as you think. Besides, you may like her very much. Mother says her mother was the greatest beauty in Connecticut."

"She isn't a beauty, though; I'll bet on that. A talking, writing, society woman—I hate the kind. Amy, will you go out for a row? We'll have one more while the boat is all our own."

This confabulation was held on either side of the Widow Mauran's garden gate—a model gate for purposes of conversation, just high enough and wide enough to accommodate two pairs of elbows, and allow the owners of the elbows to look easily into each other's eyes. Phil smiled into Amy's as he swung wide the barrier. He offered his arm, she took it, and they sauntered down to the shore. They were a picturesque couple to look at. Tall Phil, in spite of his momentary ill-temper, possessed a frank, handsome face, lit with fine eyes and the sweetest of smiles; while little Amy's modest, wild-flower beauty was exquisite in its way. Second cousins, intimate friends, all but declared lovers, it was a pleasant matter of course that they should be always together; and in spite of Amy's disclaimers, she was at the bottom of her heart as sorry as Phil at this interruption to their tete-a-tete—as sorry or sorrier; for blended with her regret was the instinctive apprehension of a girlish heart, which, pledged in fact though not in name, grieves with the unspoken dread that some other woman may yet pass by to snatch from her very lips the coveted untasted cup in whose depth lies, or seems to lie, all the best sweetness of coming life. It was a comfort to have Philip so cross about it, however; and in the effort to soothe him, she, woman-like, forgot her own annoyance. So the evening ended happily.

Next day brought the expected guest. Amy's first glance sent her heart to quaking again. Never had she seen a woman in the least like this. Rose Ashurst was one of those born enchantresses who reign not only by intention, but by right. Her beauty would have been remarkable had not her charm been more remarkable. Her wit and talent were balanced by a sweet humor which pervaded every word and act, and flavored all with fascination. Tact, culture, the perfect self-possession which verges upon self-forgetfulness, lent their aid to complete her attraction. And all was real. There was no pretense about Miss Ashurst. The kind looks which beamed from her beautiful eyes sprung from a kind heart. She threw herself into the interest of every human creature who approached her with a warmth born of true sympathy. No wonder she was popular. Popularity hardly spoiled her. She received her daily ovations as a matter of course, half indifferently, half gratefully, but always with a modest grace which enhanced her effect. A dangerous woman this to bring into propinquity with susceptible youths. Poor Amy!

But Amy, too, felt the charm. The dazzling brown eyes which had bewitched so many hearts worked their spell upon her's at once, and she lent delighted aid in settling the new comer and her belongings. This month in Pemigewasset was a sudden whim of Miss Ashurst's. She wanted quiet and a place to write in, and the old homestead in which her great-grandmother was born seeming to meet these conditions, she wrote to offer herself as an inmate; and Mrs. Mauran, who was glad to add to her small income by an occasional boarder, gave pleased consent. All manner of pretty things came out of the trunks to adorn the simple chamber. Miss Ashurst could not live without artistic surroundings, and traveled always with photographs, sketches, books, small articles of virtu, and bits of bright color in this or that. These disposed on walls and table, with daintily frilled and embroidered covers laid over the old-fashioned pillows, an easel with its canvases and oil-tubes in one corner (Miss Ashurst painted pictures), a writing-table exquisitely arranged drawn into the window (Miss Ashurst wrote books), a sweet-faced Madonna painted on ivory, a few flowers grouped in a classic vase, made the homely keeping-room chamber over into a bower of romance, simple Amy thought. She stood as in a dream, inhaling the perfume of a wide luxurious life, of a whole world of sensations and sights unknown till now, and scarcely comprehended.

"There!" said Miss Ashurst, giving the last touch to her vase of clematis and roses, "now I shall do beautifully. What a pleasant room this is! The very exposure I like best, and such a sweet view! It is just the room to work in. I am glad your mother let me come, Amy. I may call you Amy, may I not? We are relatives, you know—far away, but still relatives."

"Oh yes, please do," cried Amy. "Every one calls me so."

"How lovely she is!" was her soliloquy as she went down stairs. "I wonder what Phil will think of her! He will be surprised, I'm sure, but he must admire her; he can't help it."

She watched the expression of his eyes at tea-time, but it told her nothing. Phil scarcely spoke. He looked at Miss Ashurst a great deal, but Amy could only guess what the looks meant.

"Well!" she said, interrogatively, as they met on the door-steps after tea.

"Well," responded Phil.

"What do you think? Isn't she pretty?"

"Pretty!" with an indignant inflection.

"Why, Phil, how can you help thinking so?"

"Pretty is not the word at all. She is superb—beautiful."

"I thought you would think so," said Amy, cheerfully, but with a little stricture at her heart.

"Yes. She's not my style, of course; but she is a woman in a thousand. No wonder she has been such a belle all her life."

"I'm so glad you admire her. Now you won't mind her being here, and you'll be polite to her, won't you, Phil?"

"Oh, yes; I'll do whatever you wish," replied Phil, with a carelessness which was half affected.

"She's not Philip's style," whispered Amy to her pillow that night, and fell asleep with the talismanic sentence on her lips.

> "Alas, how easily things go wrong!
> A word too much, or a kiss too long,
> And there follows a mist and a blinding rain,
> And life is never the same again," sings George Macdonald. Things went "wrong" in little Amy's world during the next fortnight. Was it only the prescience of coming mists which darkened the blue, and made the days sad? Was it only foolish jealousy, or was it something tangible? She made herself miserable over these questions. She scolded herself, but scolding did no good; the wrung, hurt feeling would not leave her. And yet why was she hurt? Was it not natural and right that Philip should be attentive to their guest, who had on him, as on her, the claim of kindred blood—this guest who was so charming? For Amy never denied the charm; she felt it herself too strongly. Was it not the very thing she had asked him to do? Yes; but yet—but yet—All these reflections ended by deepening the vague unhappiness. Night after night she sat alone on the door-step and watched the boat glide off into the moonlight; Phil at the oars, Miss Ashurst with the tiller ropes in her white hands. "Come with us," they always said; but when she murmured an excuse, they passed on cheerfully without her. Yes, it had come to that: Philip went without her, and liked it just as well! The world—her world—had changed. Would it ever be "the same again?"

Philip was in a temporary dazzle of admiration; he neither reasoned nor reflected. But for Miss Ashurst, no slightest glimpse of the truth had crossed her mind. She thought Amy a sweet, pretty child, but shy, and busy with household matters, as the only daughter of a widow in poor circumstances must naturally be. For Phil, he was charming; she liked him best when alone—the truth being that a slight uneasy consciousness made him awkward when in company with the old love, with whom he was somehow a little "off," and the new, with whom he was not fairly "on." So Miss Ashurst was not sorry when Amy refused to join in the moonlight rows, and knowing nothing of what had gone before, it did not strike her as unusual or make her question. He and Amy were as brother and sister, she reflected. So her eyes being sealed by ignorance, and Phil's blinded as by a sudden spell, Amy's pale cheeks and woful looks passed unheeded, except by one pair of eyes which were not sealed, namely, her mother's.

Mrs. Mauran was a quiet person; but her quiet concealed strength and a power reading character. Instinctively she "took stock" of all persons with whom she came into contact, and her instinct rarely failed. A bitter experience had taught her how "easy things go wrong" in this world of ours, and though she "hated to meddle," and was sorry to lose her boarder, she resolved to appeal to the sweetness and nobility which she felt were the underlying stratum of Miss Ashurst's nature. It was in this wise that she accomplished her purpose:

Miss Ashurst and Phil had been off on a drive prolonged into late twilight. Tea was over. Phil had strolled down to the village after the mail, and Mrs. Mauran sat beside her guest in the shaded porch.

"Where is Amy?" asked Miss Ashurst.

"Gone to bed with a bad headache," said Mrs. Mauran.

"A headache! I am so sorry! Isn't there something out of my medicine case which would relieve her?—pulsatilla, perhaps, or iris." Miss Ashurst was a devoted homeopath.

"I think there is something. Not out of your case, however," replied Mrs. Mauran, quietly.

"What can you mean?"

"My dear Miss Ashurst, may I speak frankly to you about something that is on my mind? And will you not think me unkind or impertinent?"

"I am quite sure you could be neither."

"I want to tell you a little story which concerns Phil and Amy."

"Phil and Amy!"

"Yes. They are second cousins, as you know. Phil's father was my most intimate friend, and the children were naturally brought up together. Last spring Phil, who trusts me as if I were his mother, begged my leave to ask Amy to be his wife." She paused a moment. Miss Ashurst said nothing, only leaned forward a little and listened. "I told him that Amy was so young that he had better wait a few months before he said anything. I wish I hadn't."

"Why?"

"I don't know why. It might have been better. Since that time Phil has seen a woman a little older, far more beautiful, than my little girl, richer in all that life has to give, but not richer as far as he is concerned, for she has no love to give him, and Amy has. If she had, if she could, I should not speak. If I did not know that she is as true and as good as she is beautiful, I should not speak. As it is, I do."

There was another pause.

"My dear Mrs. Mauran—thank you," said Miss Ashurst, at last. "You were right to speak. I have made mischief, but without knowing it. You are sure of that, I hope."

"I am sure of it."

"Phil is a charming person. I like him extremely; and of course I saw that he—liked me. But I never thought of it as a serious thing. A great many other people have felt the same, and have gotten over it."

"Phil will get over it also. He has loved you but three weeks, and Amy three years. It is a glamour, which will wear off."

Miss Ashurst smiled still, but less brightly. It is not pleasant to be agreed with so cordially in matters of this kind.

"Yes," she said; "it is, as you say, a glamour. It will disappear as I disappear. And the sooner that disappearance takes place the better. I shall have a letter this evening which will oblige me to leave you day after to-morrow. Will that do?"

"My dear Miss Ashurst, my dear kinswoman, believe me when I say that I am truly sorry that anything must make you go. You are what I thought, what I trusted, and I thank you with all my heart."

"And I thank you for trusting me," replied Miss Ashurst.

But after she went up-stairs her face changed. Long she stood at the window looking out at the dim-tinted sea.

"It has been very nice," she whispered to herself at last. "But this is foolish. I must go to bed."

Miss Ashurst's letter of recall came, and on the day fixed she left. Amy, dazed, as it were, by this sudden departure, reproached herself heartily for feeling glad. This reproach deepened into remorse when, the farewells spoken and the beautiful radiant presence vanished, she found her walls and table ornamented with good-by gifts. There were the photographs she had most admired, the books, even the Madonna, ivory-painted and velvet-swung, all left for her by her sweet-hearted rival. A mist of penitent tears dimmed her eyes; but in spite of penitence and of tears, she was glad. For Phil, the rattle of the wheels which bore his charmer away was like the sound which breaks sharply into some fantastic dream.

Metaphorically speaking, he rubbed his eyes. For a day or two he hung about, vacant and listless; then he roused, as desirous to pick up dropped threads again. Somehow Amy was more difficult of approach than of yore. A little veil rested between them. She was not always to be had when wanted. We value what we work for, what we hold with some trembling sense of insecurity. As weeks went on, Phil grew to prize Amy more than ever. The knowledge that he had half lost her intensified his love. It required months to win his way back to the old place. But at last—

"And you are quite, quite sure that you care most for me?" whispered Amy, saucily, the night after their engagement.

"Most? Altogether, you mean. There is no other."

"Not even Miss Ashurst?"

"Not even Miss Ashurst; though"—and Phil lifted his cap as before a queen—"she is a stunner, a real lady, every inch of her, and as good as she is beautiful. Bless her!"

And bless her, say we.

Our Great Poets.

Mr. Ralph Waldo Emerson has been talking with a correspondent of the Concord Monitor about the habits of his poetical friends. "Holmes," said he, "is so full that he can write at any time. Lowell broods over his subject for a time, and then composes with great swiftness. He does not like to write to order, though desirous of employing the stimulus of great occasions. We asked him to read a poem at Concord on the one-hundredth anniversary of the fight, but he said he could not. His wife, a day or two before, wrote to me saying, 'I cannot speak for James, yet I think you may expect a poem from him on the 19th. He has been going about for some time in that peculiar way which is a promise of something,' and on the 19th Lowell was on the ground with his poem—and a grand one it was. Longfellow prepares his poems to be read on any great occasion, as a minister who lives near Boston prepares his sermons, nearly a year ahead. He wrote the poem read at Bowdoin College last summer early in the fall of the preceding year, and well it was he did so, for the months intervening have been fruitless as far as literary labor is concerned, owing to physical prostration. He is, happily, better now."

The Deciding Game.

As Mr. Peter Cudlip, of Chicago, was dozing in his sitting-room, the other day, he was suddenly aroused by a fearful crash of glass at the back of the house and a tremendous tug at the front door-bell. Answering it in person and a rage, he discovered a small boy, who would have been much smaller had he been washed, and grasping the bell-pull and about a fathom of wire in his hand. Round the corner could be seen the heads of about seven other boys, prepared to return or to run, as occasion might dictate. The small boy said: "Please, mister, they had three men on bases, and four to tie, and the striker he hit a hot one to third, and third muffed it, and she's in your green-house. Lemme go'n get her, 'cause this is the decidin' game," and, while Mr. Cudlip was speechless, he slipped past and out into the back premises. After tramping over, through and about all of Mr. Cudlip's horticultural products, the boy returned, and remarking, "She's in the next yard, cully," departed gratefully.

It appears by the returns of one of the principal railways in England for the last year, that their locomotives average a run of about 15,000 miles a year, and that the usual term of service of a set of chilled wheels is about seven years, or a run of some 105,000 miles, being a little more than four times round the world. Passenger cars, it is stated, traverse about three times the distance, each month or year, that an engine does. First-class cars are not subjected to such continuous wear as is the case with inferior ones; more rest is given to the wheels. Such cars are heavier, and consequently bear harder on the axles, and hence are more liable to heat.

THE BRAIN.

Vagaries and Peculiarities of that Delicate Organ.

Unsoundness of brain, says Harper's Bazar, is often known only to its possessor. There is a stage of consciousness in which a person may be incessantly at war with himself, and with the promptings of a double, urging him to do and say things abhorred by his better self. "I am not conscious of the decay," wrote a patient to his adviser, "or suspension of any of the powers of the mind. I am as well able as ever I was to attend to my business. My family suppose me in health, yet the horrors of a mad-house are staring me in the face. I am a martyr to a species of persecution from within, which is becoming intolerable. I am urged to say the most shocking blasphemies, and obscene words are ever on my tongue. Thank God, I have been able to resist; but I often think I must yield at last, and then I shall be disgraced and ruined." The famous Bishop Butler is said to have been engaged in such a conflict for the greater part of his life. Akin to this phase of unsoundness is the desire so commonly felt to throw one's self from a height, or to give utterance at inappropriate times, as when Charles Lamb burst out laughing at a funeral. In such moments of temptation the mastery of the reason over the inclination distinguishes the sane from the insane, and it is only the sustained eccentricity of thought and mode of life which points to a condition of the brain betokening insanity. Very noteworthy are some of the early symptoms of disorder. Of one of these, the undue exaltation of the senses, an instance is given, where the patient felt such an extraordinary acuteness of hearing that he heard the least sound at the bottom of his house, and was able to tell the hour by his watch at a distance at which he could not ordinarily see the hands. Sometimes incipient disease is indicated by a perversion of the sense of touch, as in the case of a patient who, from the fancy that everything he touched was greasy, was continually washing his hands. Other well-marked symptoms are the loss of memory, deterioration in handwriting, the use of wrong words in conversation and double vision. Kleptomania, the habit of secretly purloining articles, is now a recognized form of brain disease. Of another more terrible form of madness, dipsomania, it is curious to read that its victims will drink shoe-blacking, turpentine and hair wash, when they can get nothing else to satisfy the demon that possesses them. Sometimes these two forms of mania are seen co-existent in the same person under very odd circumstances. Thus it is recorded of one man that when drunk he always stole Bibles; of another, spades; while a third individual invariably purloined a tub.

Delicate as the organization of the brain must be, it is surprising to read of the hard knocks it can bear, not only without injury, but even to its advantage. One man who lost half his brain through suppuration of the skull, preserved his intellectual faculties to the day of his death; and the brains of soldiers have been known to carry bullets without apparent inconvenience, and to undergo operation for the extraction of the foreign bodies without loss of power. A physician who was afflicted with an abnormal cerebral growth which pressed upon the cavities of the brain, so as to paralyze one side of his body and render him speechless, retained possession of his reasoning and calculating powers until he died. One of three brothers, all idiots, after receiving a severe injury on the head, gained his senses, and lived to be a clever barrister. A stable boy of dull capacity, and subject to fits, had his wits sharpened by the kick of a horse, which necessitated the abstraction of a portion of his brain; and no less a personage than Pope Clement VI. owed the improvement of his memory to a slight concussion of the brain.

A Father Kills His Two Sons and Commits Suicide.

The killing of two children by their father, at Hackettstown, N. J., on Saturday, was one of the most heartless and cold-blooded murders that ever occurred in that State. The perpetrator of the crime is a German house and sign painter named John Rutter about 45 years of age. Ten years ago he married a woman living in Scranton, Pa., and she bore him the two children who died by his hand on Saturday. They were both handsome little boys, the elder aged 7 and the younger 4 years. Mrs. Rutter is represented by her neighbors as not being true to her husband, and rumors of this reaching his ears, angered and excited him. Frequent and bitter quarrels were the result; and more than once the woman was compelled to ask the intervention of the town authorities to save her from her husband's violence. He finally carried his abuse to such an extreme that the wife decided to remain with him no longer, and taking her two little sons with her, she repaired to the home of her parents in Scranton. Rutter followed her thither, and succeeded in taking the children away. His wife went back to their house in Hackettstown and demanded their return. The husband refused to deliver them, and the mother in order to be with them, was persuaded to take up her residence with her husband again. On Saturday, about 12 o'clock, Mrs. Rutter went over the way to visit a neighbor, leaving her two little boys playing on the floor in the room facing the street. While she was there Rutter went in to get his dinner. He called to his wife to come over, but she did not seem to hear him, and he then fired a pistol out of the window, apparently to attract her attention. He then deliberately walked to the place where his little boys were playing, and placing his pistol behind the left ear of the elder fired, killing him instantly. The younger boy, frightened at what had happened, started for the door. His father caught him on the threshold and lifted him in his arms. The boy exclaimed, "Don't! papa, don't!" but Rutter paid no heed to his entreaties, and, placing the pistol against his forehead, sent a bullet into his brain. Laying the body carefully by the side of that of the other child, he then tried to shoot his wife, who just then rushed into the house. She avoided the fate which her boys had suffered by running over the street, and Rutter then shot himself twice, the first ball striking him on the side of the head, and glancing off, leaving only a scalp wound. The second shot lodged a ball in his neck, near the base of the skull. When the neighbors entered the house the bodies of the children were found near the center of the room, their father lying near them in an insensible condition. On the wall opposite the window from which the pistol had first been fired, were inscribed, in his handwriting, some German words, which, translated, read: "My wife and Fred Smeat's wife are the cause of my death and my children's." Rutter was removed to the jail at Belvidere, the county seat of Warren county, where he is receiving medical treatment. His wounds are not thought to be necessarily fatal.—New York Herald.

Crazy and in Love.

Philip Standermann, who shot and killed Louisa Sidenbaum in Chatham street, New York, on the evening of the 19th of April, was put on trial last week, and the fact that the plea of insanity was to be the defense led to much delay in getting a jury. Three-fourths of the panel summoned stated that they had objections against insanity as a plea in trials for murder, and one of the number said that one kind of insanity begins an instant before a murder and ends an instant after it. When Standermann was called to plead he looked more like an idiot than a lunatic. He had a shoe shop in Chatham street before his crime. Miss Sidenbaum lived in City Hall place. He sought the girl's hand in marriage; but when he talked with her parents about it they plainly told him that such a marriage was impossible. The girl was young, pretty, educated, and in all ways, socially and mentally, far above him. The rest of the story was told by the witnesses for the prosecution. Isaac J. Brown testified that, on the evening of April 19, 1875, he started with Miss Sidenbaum and Miss Annie Thomas to go to a German festival. They waited in Chatham street for a car; and as he stepped off the sidewalk to see whether a car was coming, he was startled by the flash and report of a pistol. He turned back, and saw the prisoner holding a pistol close to Miss Sidenbaum's face. Policeman Malloy described the capture of Standermann, which was effected within a block of the place of the shooting, and said that, when the prisoner was asked in the police station why he had done the deed, he answered, "She fooled me. She wouldn't marry me, and so I shot her." Ludwig Fealk testified that, a year before the murder, Standermann said to him, "I asked Mr. Sidenbaum to let me marry his daughter, and he refused. I swore I would have revenge. I will have her, or her life." The jury, after hearing all the evidence, brought in a verdict of guilty, and the prisoner was sentenced to be hanged on the 10th of December, the Judge, in passing the sentence, characterizing the plea set up by the defense—"insanity, excited by passion"—as a "flimsy pretext."

Eight Miles Walked in Less Than One Hour.

The latest mail advices from England bring the intelligence that W. Perkins, on Monday, Sept. 20, performed the feat of fairly walking eight miles in one hour. It was accomplished over the Lillie-bridge ground, London, in the presence of 5,000 spectators, and was to decide a wager of £100 that it could not be done. For many years it has been the ambition of rapid walkers to make this record, and numbers have attempted the task but failed. Twice before Perkins has made unsuccessful attempts, but he had long been considered the most likely man for such a performance, and, being determined to try it again, was given a chance by his friends. So far back as 1857 the late C. Westhall completed seven miles and a half in 56 minutes and 25 seconds, on the turnpike road at Slough, and to the present time this remains unequaled, except, of course, on an inclosed ground. It was not until George Toply came out that Westhall's time was beaten, and that on Old Brompton grounds, where both Toply and W. Spencer defeated it; but their styles were not at all to be compared with that of the present day, and those performances cannot be recognized. In December, 1869, George Davidson created a sensation by walking twenty-one miles in three hours, and during the first hour he covered seven miles 1,380 yards, this being the nearest approach to the "eight miles in one hour" previous to Perkins' walk.

American Fiction.

It seems as if American readers must be tired by this time of the ordinary English society novel, procurable in any quantity at a cheap rate. It has to do with a form of social life more conventional than our own, with scenery less grand and attractive, with personalities more feebly individualized, and with events and incidents as much less interesting than those of American life as the conditions of English life are more artificial than our. Men may talk as they choose, or, as they believe, about age as being necessary to the creation of an atmosphere of romance. We do not agree with them. A child's age of romance is its own childhood. The life it lives, and the things it sees about it, form its romantic realm; and the childhood of a nation is peculiarly its romantic age, not only to the age which succeeds it, but to itself. There is nothing more interesting to an American than a good story, either of his own time or of the time which has hardly retired from his personal memory.—Dr. J. G. Holland, in Scribner for November.

Jersey Justice.

New Jersey is a hard State for the owner of fast horses, as Mr. Carman, of Morgansville, has found out to his cost. Mr. Carman entered a pair of trotters at the Waverly Park races and won one of the races. One of his horses became overheated, and while in that condition received a wetting from a passing shower. The result was a severe cold, and subsequently death. This was in itself a severe loss, as the horse was valued at $25,000; but the authorities have added to Mr. Carman's burden by prosecuting him for cruelty to animals in overdriving the horse. When the suit is concluded Mr. Carman will probably take the surviving horse into some other State.

Disappearance of Oak Timber.

From statistics recently published it appears that oak timber especially is rapidly disappearing from Europe, although half of the area of Sweden, one-fourth of Norway, one-sixth that of Switzerland, and 780,000 square miles in Russia are said to be yet in forest. The consumption of oak in France has doubled during the last fifty years; she requires 15,000,000 cubic feet yearly for wine casks alone, 75,000 for building purposes, 600,000 cubic feet for her fleet, and 150,000 cubic feet for railway carriages; £800,000 worth of staves were imported in 1852; £5,000,000 worth are now needed. Since losing Alsace and Lorraine, France contains 150,000,000 acres; 20,000,000 of this surface is covered with forest. Holland and Belgium are nearly denuded of timber, and are large importers. North Germany is rich in forest, but within half a century has commenced to cut down young trees. Austria has sold her forests since railroads have been introduced. In Italy no forests remain. Spain and Greece are almost woodless. The southern coast of the Mediterranean is almost forestless.

How to Select Flour.

First look at the color. If it is white, with a slight yellow or straw-colored tint, buy it. If it is very white, with a bluish cast, or with white specks in it, refuse it. Second, examine its adhesiveness. Wet and knead a little of it between your fingers. If it works soft and sticky, it is poor. Third, throw a little lump of dry flour against a smooth, perpendicular surface; if it falls like powder, it is bad. Fourth, squeeze some of the flour in your hand; if it retains the shape given by the pressure, that too is a good sign. Flour that will stand these tests, it is safe to buy. These modes are given by our flour dealers, and they pertain to a matter that concerns everybody, namely, the staff of life.

THE VISIBLE PLANETS.

[illegible] and [illegible] of the Present Time.

MERCURY

is now rapidly approaching the sun, and will soon become invisible. The planet can be distinguished from a fixed star only by its bright red color and the fluctuating light which seems to be peculiar to this planet. When near the horizon it generally keeps up a continuous "twinkling," not unlike that of the stellar orbs. Several eminent astronomers never saw this planet, and Copernicus himself is said to have lamented in his dying moments that he was never able to obtain a glimpse at Mercury. For many evenings the planet Mercury may be seen after sunset in the western heavens, low down toward the horizon.

VENUS,

which has been visible in our morning sky for several months past, will soon make her appearance as an "evening star." On Thursday, Sept. 26, Venus was situated in her superior conjunction with the sun. This planet is now gradually receding from that luminary toward the east, and will soon present a magnificent appearance in our evening twilight.

MARS

Is now the most conspicuous planet in the heavens. About 9 o'clock in the evening he may be seen upon the southern heavens in the beautiful constellation Sagittarius. His motion is toward the east or direct, and he may be easily recognized by the reddish light with which he shines. Mars is now plainly visible throughout the entire night.

JUPITER.

The "giant planet" Jupiter is at present very unfavorably situated for observation. Friday, November 5th, Jupiter will be situated in conjunction with the sun, after which he will become visible upon our eastern sky as a "morning star."

SATURN.

What has been said of Mars will apply to the planet Saturn, as they are situated only a short distance from each other, Saturn being in Capricornus, the next constellation east from Sagittarius. Saturn shines with a pale white light, and will not be mistaken for a fixed star. The rings of Saturn may be perceived through an ordinary astronomical telescope.

URANUS

is now in the constellation of Leo, in good position for telescopic observation, but cannot be perceived by the naked eye unless its exact situation is known. When seen through an instrument of sufficient power the planet will show a sensible disc. It shines like a star of the sixth magnitude, with pale blue light.

NEPTUNE.

This far off sentinel of the planetary system cannot be seen with the naked eye. Even by using good telescopes no satisfactory observations can be made on this planet at present. It appears as a star of the eighth magnitude, and one can recognize this orb only by detecting its motion, which is very slow.

Sinks of Disease and Their Drains.

In many of our country homes all the dirty water, dish-water, soapsuds, and sometimes the urine from the chambers, are poured upon the earth a few feet from the door, and allowed to soak away into the soil or rise in vapor into the air. In others these filthy liquids are conducted away in drains to some convenient point, and there deposited in a closed well, or allowed to escape into the open air not far from the dwelling. The upper end of this drain usually opens into the kitchen, or near the outside door. In either case the foul waters are, or may be, a source of evil. When poured upon the surface, those waters may find a way into the well, or beneath the house; or the vapors, under certain circumstances, may arise and fill the dwelling. If through a drain they are led into a covered well, then there will soon be a constant stream of gas and foul air rising into the kitchen, and extending throughout the dwelling. If the outlet of the drain be into the open air, then a pool will be formed, from which the vapors will be wafted to the dwelling; or, if the waters escape into a brook, or small river, they will contaminate the same far below. Thus, beyond a reasonable doubt, typhoid fever has been communicated along the borders of a small stream.

All these drains, as usually found in our farmhouse, are constructed of small stones loosely laid, flat stones being placed below and above. In them are no traps, or any contrivances to prevent the return of gas and foul air into the house. These drains are often sources of evil and danger. Being covered, the water cannot escape by evaporation, nor can the foul matters become oxygenated by contact with pure air. Hence these waters can only ferment and send off foul air and gas, which follow up the drain to fill the dwelling and poison its inmates. These drains are worse than none. The only safe drain is one of cement, made water and air tight, with trap near the inlet and outlet. But few of our farmers and villagers can have such drains, on account of cost and difficulty of keeping them in thorough repair.—New York Tribune.

Honesty.

We have somehow learned to make a difference between those obligations which we owe to one another as men, and those which we owe to the government and to corporations. These ideas are not a whit more prevalent among office-holders and directors than they are among voters and stockholders. Men are not materially changed by being clothed with office and power. The radically honest man is just as honest in office as he is out of it. Corrupt men are the offspring of a corrupt society. We all need straightening up. The lines of our morality all need to be drawn tighter. There is not a man who is willing to smuggle, and to see customs officers betray their trust while he does it; willing to receive the results of the sharp practice of directors of corporations in which he has an interest; willing to receive the patronage of the government in the execution of schemes not based in absolute necessity; willing to take an exorbitant price for a piece of property sold to the government or to a corporation, who is fit to be trusted with office. When we have said this we have given the explanation of all our public and corporate corruption, and shown why it is so difficult to get any great trust managed honestly. All this official corruption is based on popular corruption, [illegible] ideas of [illegible] they are [illegible] by the popular [illegible] and we can [illegible] no [illegible] are [illegible] principles of equity and right-doing. If we would have the stream clear we must cleanse the fountain.—Dr. J. G. Holland, in Scribner for November.

The Potato.

The potato, says the Troy Times more important as a variety of human food than any other root we cultivate, and is remarkable for being grown over a greater range of latitude than any other cultivated plant.

The potato was scarcely known until the seventeenth century, and was not extensively cultivated before the middle of the eighteenth. The potato plant is a native of South America, and its native soil is Chili, where it is called maglia, and Humboldt affirms that it was unknown in Mexico until after the Spanish conquest.

It has been stated, and is believed by many, that the first potatoes grown in Europe were planted in Walter Raleigh's garden in Ireland, but this is erroneous. At Offenburgh, near Baden, in South Germany, there is a monument to Sir Francis Drake, as "The first introducer of the potato in Europe." By the way, it may be mentioned that Frederick the Great had to compel his subjects to plant it before he could get it into much use, and the use of this invaluable plant was vehemently opposed in France. At last Louis XV wore a bunch of its flowers in the midst of his courtiers, and the consumption of the root became universal.

In point of fact, the potato entered Europe by two different routes. It was carried from Peru to Spain, and thence into Italy and Germany, where laws were passed to enforce its cultivation. It is probable that when Raleigh came from his American voyage of 1589 he brought tobacco and the potato with him.

Drake visited Virginia a few years later, and brought over the sweet potato, which abounded in Virginia and North Carolina, and was used in England as a delicacy long before the potato which we ordinarily have was known.

Sir Francis Drake returned from navigating the globe, in which he visited Chili, in 1570, full seven years before Raleigh landed on the Atlantic coast, and it is quite certain that he brought over the potato.

A legend in regard to the origin of roasted potatoes runs that Raleigh planted some of the tubers in his garden in Ireland, just as he had seen it done in Virginia, and had to return to England before the plant had reached maturity. His Irish retainers, left in charge of his house and garden, noticed the seed-apples which in due season the plant produced, tasted them, and pronounced them unfit for use by man or beast. At that time the process of "burning the grafts," or weeds, was practiced in Ireland. It was used by Raleigh's servants to clear his garden of the withered stalks of the potato plants. In this burning, the ground became heated, and the gardener, turning the earth up with his spade, found the tubers cooked and pleasant to the taste. Roasted potatoes got wind, and most every person in Ireland planted potatoes.

The manufacture of sugar from potatoes is carried on to a great extent in some parts of England, and it is stated by practical men that three tons of the raw material will produce one ton of the manufactured article.

In March, 1851, the Legislature of Massachusetts offered a premium of $10,000 to any person within the Commonwealth who should satisfy the Governor and his Council that by a test of five years he had discovered a sure and practical remedy for the potato rot. Thereupon a multitude of letters poured into the public office—many of them containing valuable hints, facts or reasonings; and the Council ordered the Secretary, Mr. Walker, to prepare a digest of the information placed at its disposal by the several correspondents. The conclusions to which all the facts of the case, as they are here gathered, have appeared to lead are these:

1. That the disease bears a striking resemblance to cholera, and probably exists in the atmosphere.

2. That it is doubtful if any specific cure has been, or will ever be, discovered.

3. But, as in cholera, certain preventives are well ascertained, by the application of which the liabilities to disease may be greatly lessened.

4. That by obtaining the soundest seed, by planting in the most favorable soils, and by using the most suitable manures, we may have a good degree of confidence in the successful cultivation of this useful vegetable.

5. That we may expect that, like the cholera, the potato-rot will become less and less formidable every year, and eventually subside into a mild and manageable epidemic.

The Boys' Room.

In Scribner for November, in the "Home and Society" department, we find the following:

"We wish especially to urge upon mothers the propriety of giving up to the boys, as soon as they reach the age of 12 or 14, one room (not a bedchamber), for whose (reasonably) good order they shall be responsible, and which they shall consider wholly their own. The floor should be uncarpeted, of oiled wood; the furniture of the same material. Let it be papered, curtained, decorated according to the boys' own fancy; if the taste is bad, they will be interested after a while in correcting it. There should be plain book-cases, a big solid table in the center, by all means an open fire, and room after that for Joe's printing press, or Charley's box of tools, or Sam's cabinet of minerals; for chess and checker-boards, or any other game which is deemed proper. To this room the boys should be allowed to invite their friends, and learn how to be hospitable hosts even to the extent of an innocent little feast now and then. Father, mother and sisters should refrain from entering it except as guests; and our word for it, they will be doubly honored and welcomed when they do come."

A Remarkable Shot.

Mr. William Vie, an Englishman residing on Mullanphy street, and well known to sportsmen in this city as one of the most successful of their number, with dog and gun, accomplished, a day or two ago, one of the most remarkable shots on record. In company with two other gentlemen, Mr. Vie was shooting over the prairie on the Illinois side of the river, when he came upon an immense flock of blackbirds, and obtained a fair opportunity. The result of a single discharge of fine shot among the birds was the killing of 106. The shot is probably the greatest on record. The number of birds stated was actually picked up, and Mr. Vie will be pleased to cite to doubters the gentlemen who witnessed the shot, and who were not more astonished than he at the result. It is estimated that at least one bird was secured for every single shot in the gun—and not much of a day for shooting, either.—St. Louis Republican.

Look Out for Colds.

About this time look out for colds. The change of weather, when it comes, is likely to be sudden, and there will be much unhealthy exposure. Colds have an unusual tendency this season to result in pneumonia or inflammation of the lungs, a disease that has carried off a great many, who, but for a slight cold, might yet have enjoyed life and good health for many years. There is no specific rule for guarding against this dangerous disease, but the exercise of good common sense will do much to prevent taking cold. Wet feet, going from a warm room into the chilly air, laying off wrappings after a brisk walk in a room insufficiently heated, sleeping in a damp or cold bed, or going to bed before the body and feet have become sufficiently warm, are among the most common methods of exposure.

CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED.

SCHENCK'S PULMONIC SYRUP,
SCHENCK'S SEA WEED TONIC,
SCHENCK'S MANDRAKE PILLS,

Are the only medicines that will cure Pulmonary Consumption.

Frequently medicines that will stop a cough will occasion the death of the patient; they lock up the liver, stop the circulation of the blood, hemorrhage follows, and, in fact, they clog the action of the very organs that caused the cough.

Liver Complaint and Dyspepsia are the causes of two-thirds of the cases of Consumption. Many persons complain of a dull pain in the side, constipation, coated tongue, pain in the shoulder-blade, feelings of drowsiness and restlessness, the food lying heavily on the stomach, accompanied with acidity and belching up of wind.

These symptoms usually originate from a disordered condition of the stomach or a torpid liver.

Persons so affected, if they take one or two heavy colds, and if the cough in these cases be suddenly checked, will find the stomach and liver clogged, remaining torpid and inactive, and almost before they are aware the lungs are a mass of sores and ulcerated, the result of which is death.

Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup is an expectorant which does not contain opium or anything calculated to check a cough suddenly.

Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic dissolves the food, mixes with the gastric juices of the stomach, aids digestion, and creates a ravenous appetite.

When the bowels are costive, skin sallow, or the symptoms otherwise of a bilious tendency, Schenck's Mandrake Pills are required.

These medicines are prepared only by

THE BEST EVIDENCE.

THE following letter, from REV. E. S. BEST, Pastor M. E. Church, Natick, Mass., will be read with interest by many physicians. Also those suffering from the same disease as afflicted the son of the Rev. E. S. Best. No person can doubt this testimony, and there is no doubt about the curative powers of VEGETINE:

NATICK, Mass., Jan. 1, 1872.

Mr. H. R. STEVENS:

Dear Sir—We have good reason for regarding your VEGETINE a medicine of the greatest value. We feel assured that it has been the means of saving our son's life. He is now seventeen years of age; for the last two years he has suffered from necrosis of his leg, caused by scrofulous affection, and was so far reduced that nearly all who saw him thought his recovery impossible. A council of able physicians could give us but the faintest hope of his ever rallying, two of the number declaring that he was beyond the reach of human remedies, that even amputation could not save him, as he did not vigor enough to endure the operation. Just then we commenced giving him VEGETINE, and from that time to the present he has been continuously improving. He has lately resumed his studies, thrown away crutches and cane, and walks about cheerful and strong.

Though there is still some discharge from the opening where his limb was lanced, we have the fullest confidence that in a little time he will be perfectly cured.

He has taken about three dozen bottles of VEGETINE, but lately uses but little, as he declares that he is too well to be taking medicine.

Respectfully yours,
E. S. BEST,
MRS. L. C. F. BEST.

The range of disorders which yield to the influence of this medicine, and the number of defined diseases which it never fails to cure, are greater than any other single medicine has hitherto been even recommended for, by any other than the proprietors of some quack nostrum. These diseases are Scrofula and all Eruptive diseases and Tumors, Rheumatism, Gout, Neuralgia and Spinal complaints, and all Inflammatory symptoms, Ulcers, all Syphilitic diseases, Kidney and Bladder diseases, Dropsy, the whole train of painful disorders which so generally afflict American women, and which carry annually thousands of them to premature graves; Dyspepsia, that universal curse of American manhood; Heartburn, Piles, Constipation, Nervousness, inability to sleep, and impure blood.

This is a formidable list of human ailments for any single medicine to successfully attack, and it is not probable that any one article before the public has the power to cure the quarter of them excepting the VEGETINE. It lays the ax at the root of the tree of disease by first eliminating every impurity from the blood, promoting the secretions, opening the pores—the great escape valves of the system—invigorating the liver to its full and natural action, cleansing the stomach and strengthening digestion. This much accomplished, the speedy and the permanent cure of not only the diseases we have enumerated, but likewise the whole train of chronic and constitutional disorders, is certain to follow. This is precisely what VEGETINE does, and it does it so quickly and so easily that it is an accomplished fact almost before the patient is aware of it himself.

New and Beautiful Instrument.
THE PIANO-HARP CABINET ORGAN,
An exquisite combination adding to the capacity of the organ much of that of the piano-forte and harp. With a double-reed organ, complete and perfect in every respect, is combined a new instrument, the PIANO-HARP, the tones of which are produced by steel tongues or bars rigidly set in steel plates affixed to a sounding-box, and struck by hammers, as in the piano-forte. The tones are of a pure, silvery, bell-like quality, very beautiful in combination or alternation with the organ tones. The organ may be used alone, and is in every respect as complete and perfect an organ as without the PIANO-HARP, or may be used with the PIANO-HARP, the latter may be used separately or in combination with any or all the stops of the organ, to which it adds greatly in vivacity, life and variety, adapting it to a much wider range of music.
Upon its invention and introduction, about a year since, this new instrument was received with so much favor that the demand greatly exceeded the manufacturers' utmost ability to supply; so that they have had no occasion to advertise it extensively. Having now perfected facilities for a large supply, they offer it to the public with confidence.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN INDIANA, NOV., 4, 1875

The probabilities are that we have not carried all the States which held elections last Tuesday.

"There is no contraction," shouted Hayes, yet Soule Bros., of New York suspended soon after.

The Ames plow Co., of New York, have tasted the sweets of contraction, They failed Saturday.

Hayes didn't bust, but his policy did the business for Warren & Wyman book dealers, New York Saturday.

Hayes got over 5000 majority, yet Tilton & Co., of Cavendish Vermont went under by a much larger majorty.

Hayes was pushed through, but Joachin Davis, lumber merchant New York couldn't pull through, and he suspended Saturday.

Elect Hayes and business will revive was the cry of the Republican orators, yet Hoffman & Co., of New York went under last Saturday,

'Rah for Hayes. "His election will revive business," but the Tawas Mill Co., of East Tawas Mich. didn't derive any benefits from his election, and they suspended

"No more inflation," was the Republican war cry in Ohio, yet they could not save the firms of C. H. Ward, J. Fuller, and Irvin Minor; of New York, and they all failed last week

"To revive business kill the rag baby," bellowed the Republicans. The baby was pounded but the business of C. G. White of New York, didn't revive and he went under the other day

Only twelve suspensions were reported on Saturday last, mostly from New York. yet the Republicans demand more contraction.—

The late decision of the Supreme Court of this State, that all officers are presumed to know what an unconstitutional act is, and must suffer the consequences if they do not, is, to say the least, peculiar. When a constable or petty officer gets to know as much as a judge of the Supreme Court, then this may be surmised

The New York World compares Senator Morton to Caliph Omer who, when reproached for waiting on himself, replied, "I arose, and was Omer. I returned, and am Omer." So our Senator can say, "I went for contraction, but I was Morton. I turned inflationists but remained Morton. I crawled back to the specie basis on crutches and with a bloody shirt, but I am Morton still"

Col. I. B. McDonald

The eloquent orator, and ever reliabl democrat, Col. I. B. McDonald of Columbia City, Indiana, former member of the Legislature and perminent candidate for Lieutenant Govenor of that State, gave the Democracy of Ohio a helping hand during the late hotly contested canvass in this State. Especially were his eloquent appeals in favor of labor and the Democratic platform heard in "Old Waynd" where the Democracy won one of the most brilliant victories since the war.

Long will the Democracy of Moreland Maysville, Fredericksburg and elsewhere in this part of the State, remember this talented gentleman's solid and effective arguments. While we earnestly thank him for his kindly and efficient aid, we know that his reward will be realized in the consciousness of duty well performed. —Wooster, O., Democrat,

There are two Democratic (?) papers in Northern Indiana which deserve well at the hands of the Republican party in the late Ohio contest. They have been fiercer and more vehement in their denunciations of the Democratic platform and ticket than any of their Republican co laborers in the Buckeye state. We hope the laurels the Ligonier Banner and Fort Wayne Sentinel won in the service of the Republican cause, in the cause of the capitalist against the poor man, in the cause of the bondholder against the plowholder, may be well worn. But the Democratic party in Ohio which has been beaten by a combination of influences seldom brought to bear in a State campaign, will rise again when the machinations of money lenders and Federal shop-keepers may quiet themselves if they would be wise. Till then we shall have to submit to a bought verdict—Warsaw Union.

Retirement of J. R. Lanning

J. R. Lanning, Esq., Clerk of this County for the past eight years, retired from that office last Monday, G. H. K. Moss, Esq., succeeding him in this important position.

Mr. Lanning has been assiduous in the discharge of his official duties. He has proved one of the most efficient and attentive clerk the county has ever had, and an honest and faithful discharge of his duties has endeared him to the people generally. He has especially been attentive to his office, seldom absenting himself from the post of duty. Possessing fine abilities, and being naturally polite and accommodating, he has filled the office in a manner alike creditable to his party and his friends.

In the discharge of his duties he recognized no politics, treating all alike, and favoring one no more than another No party can suffer by official records like his, and people will remember them many days hence.

We trust Mr. Moss, his successor, will prove as acceptable to the people.— Though politically an opponent, we have no desire to see him other than an efficient and successful clerk. He has the ability and will no doubt make an excellent record

From Angola.

ANGOLA, Nov. 1st 1875.

—Winter has returned and so has skating on the sidewalks.

—Two weeks more ends the present term of school. It will be somewhat lonesome during vacation.

—DIED—Simeon Taylor, after a few days illness of leprosy, on Wednesday, Oct. 27th, 1875. A well-to-do farmer, living 3 miles N. E. of Angola, leaving a wife and children to mourn his loss.

—Last Friday evening about 9:15 o'c'k we was visited by a most terrible hurricane coming directly from the S. W. and going due N. E. Its width was only about eight rods, tearing down and demolishing everything in its course. The first thing that it came in contact with was the engine house, which was torn all to pieces and scatter for 50 or 60 rods The engine Reading was in at the time and received but slight damage. The wiper was underneath the engine wiping at the time, escaping injury, but was terribly frightened, as anyone would be, to see the house entirely carried away almost as quick as gun shot. I next broke down a telegraph-pole and hurled the apple barrels in every direction, thence to the brick machine shop, bursting open the large double doors in west end, passed out through the north side taking out about 35 feet of wall, Passed over to the lumber kiln and sheds of Austin's, demolishing them, mixing up the shingles, lath and lumber terribly. Joining immediately east is Johnson's lumber yard, serving him in like manner, except his office, which was badly battered by flying lumber—almost a total ruin. The west end of Arnolds barn looks as if it had withstood a bombardment, from the number of holes knocked through it by flying lumber, &c. The baseboards were torn off of Arnold's fence. Large and small trees were twisted off, apparently with ease. It seemed to raise at it crossed Maumee-st., striking the east of the Disciple's church, lifting the roof on the west side, tore down one chimney, unroofed the belfrey doing material damage. It done no further injury until about a half mile out There it struck a frame house only partly finished, making it a total wreck, leaving nothing to mark its former resting place. This is far as heard from yet. Last Friday morning during the thunder storm the telegraph wire was struck by lightning. The electricity passed into the office and set fire to some papers on the table. No one happened to be in the office at the time, but there was some of the R. R. hands near by who got in and extinguished the fire.

—Of all my acquaintances, I don't know of one first Republican who takes a Democratic paper. They are so prejudiced they can't read anything but Republicanism. Nearly all the Democrats takes a Republican paper. Its singular they are so prejudiced against Democracy and whisky, is'nt it?

—There is a rooster hailing from Waterloo, who will get his comb froze off soon if he persists in coming to Angola much oftener. Should Westley Jackman come across him his phrenology and drugs will be of but little consequence to him hereafter.

ANGOLA.

New Baltimore—hic—fasht mail—hic—train took breath—hic—all out of me, said a Jackson street man as he stumbled into bed with his boots on, last night, and then there arose beside him a tall, white form and a bootjack, and the job left unfinished by that fast mail was completed by an angry female.

Somebody has put us under a lasting obligation. A dog in the south part of town has been making night hideous, with his bark for some time past. But we heard a shot the other night when everything was still but the dog, and now he's still, at least we have not heard him since the memorable night. Every dog has his day.

Garrett City now enjoys the luxury of a Democratic paper, the "News," the first number of which was issued last week by C. W. Wing & Co. We doubt the expediency of putting in a paper there just now, but if Wing & Co., can stand it, we can. We hope it will escape the usual vicissitudes of a new paper, and improve in appearance.

John Treesh has sold out his interest in the bakery and grocery store on Main street, and has opened a new meat market in Markel's old stand, where he desires to see all those who want a good article of fresh meet. We're 'going home to die no more, is what a couple of gents thought joing down Jackson street behind a pair of frightened ponnies, last Sunday. They were stopped at the end of the street by Mr. Tefft. The buggy jumped out of one of the gentleman and hurt itself a trifle. The damage was small, breaking one wheel of the horse and the hind leg of the buggy.

We object to any two cent paper copying items from the COURIER, without giving the proper credit. We don't care so much about our prose items, but when original poems contributed by our local talent to these columns are copied entire, without so much as intimating where they sprang from, it is more than our patience can stand. The Ft. Wayne "News" will please take notice.

A fellow went into Davis' ware-house, the other day, and laid down "for to snooze," and snooze he did. The ware-house was locked up. About 12 o'clock his stomach said, "I quess I will," and after pawing around awhile he thought different. Some boys were passing and then he brawled out, fire, murder, &c. to attract their attention. He got out after one of the boys went several squares and got the key.

This good little boy was sitting on the front steps whittling up his sister's embroidery frames and muttering to himself, "This ain't no good world to live in unless a feller is his father's and mothers' only orphan boy. What makes me git so mad is to have my sister go and take all my ripe peaches to give to that big loafer of a sweetheart of hers that come round here seven nights in a week to git a square meal, and makes out as if he wanted to talk politics with the old man. I wish they'd marry and go to Texas, I do!" And then he threw the remnants of the frames in the treet and seemed lighter hearted.

The most popular cigar in town, is the "Fancy," kept by Davenport.

The Rifle Team contest at Pleasant Lake last, Wednesday, Oct 27th, between Chicago, Jackson and Ft. Wayne was quite an interesting affair. In the 200 yard range, Chicago and Jackson were a tie. In the 500 yards, Ft. Wayne was far ahead, but darkness came on before it was finished, and it was postponed until the 10th of this month at Jackson. The team should commence where they left off. Mr. Simmons made things pleasant and agreeable at the lake during the stay of his quests.

The new jail edifice and Sheriff's residene will be ready for occupancy in a few days. Without doubt it is one of the best constructed buildings in the country, for the money invested. Messrs Crane & Duncan, the contractors, can rest from their labors with the conviction that they have given the people full value for the price they have received for their work. It is a most substantial and well built structure, neat and handsome in workmanship, strong and durable in its material. We can challenge the country for a better. The jail part is particularly a success. With cells as though hewn in the solid rock, promises a safe and sure retreat for those who ignore the law, and with care there will be no escapades to chronicle, or battered Sheriff's to relate the desparate attempts of wicked men.

Bret Harte's new novel, "Gabriel Conroy," which is at last completed, and carfully guarded in the publishers' safe, calls forth the highest anticipations in literary circles. It will be begun as a serial in the November number of Scribner's Magazine, without illustrations, for it is said to be graphic beyond need of them, and full of incident. The story takes its title, "Gabriel Conroy," from its hero, a simple, good-hearted, honest old miner, of a type somewhat different from that of his illustrious predecessors in Mr. Harte's writings. Several familiar friends, nevertheless, renew old acquaintance, among them Col. Starbottle The story is wholy in Mr. Harte's original field, and is said to fulfill, as a novel the promise of his very best tales. The opening is pronounced by critics who have had access to the manuscript, to be very powerful; it is a terrible picture of a starving camp, and from this start the story is said to hold the reader with almost uncomfortable grip, seeing that he has to wait month after month. —[New York Tribune,

The evening was devoted to listening to an address from Mr. W. Bell. The speaker took for his theme, the "Home and the School," and handled the subject in the most thorough manner. The hall was densely packed with an interested audience, in becoming necessary to bring extra seats. At the conclusion of Mr. B's remarks, he made appeal in behalf of the Educational Department of the Centennial exposition.

At the conclusion of the address of Mr. Bell, Mr. Cyrus Smith was called out and entertained the audience for a few minutes.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

Institute convened at 9 o'clock a. m. Followed by an exercise of one half hour in music.

At 10 ten Mr. Merica called his class in Arithmetic, taking up the subject of the "Least Common Multiple." The subject was practically and thoroughly discussed. Followed by a class in History, by the Superintendant, on the Ptesidents of the Republic before the Constitution was adopted. Followed by a recitation in Grammar by Prof. Record, of Auburn. BUTLER ITEMS.

—Slight snow on Saturday night.

School out last Friday; vacation four weeks.

—Don't forget the Temperance Drama Thursday and Friday nights. A large attendance is expected.

—I see several Ohio citisens sojourning in Butler while court is in session there. Wonder why?

—Mr. S. L. Ball and Miss Ruhama Burrell were married on Wednesday October 27th.

—Monday morning every man you met was smoking a cigar—reason why E. Ocker and Mrs Mary Keefer were married. The wedding took place at the residence of Squire Fay Saturday evening Oct. 30th.

—Dr. Hoopingarner's building on the corner of Broadway and North St—formerly used for drugs—is being remodeled into a first-class boarding house. Mrs. Rice will conduct it.

—W. E. Sargent has sold his new hotel, previously called "Eel River House" but lately re-christened 'Sargent House' to Mr. Green [not of the "Waverly House"] It is understood that Mr. Sargent will move with his family to Chicago.

—A. J. Sternberg is about retiring from the "Butler House." Mr. Shutt from Spencerville will take his place.—Mr. Corser, owner of the building, has decided to add another story to and otherwise improve it. Whether he will do it this fall or not I am not informed.

—We have a very wicked young man in Butler. One day last week, he called on two young ladies, and told them that it was his farewell call, as he had just received a message and he must go. Of course they thought he meant he must go to Europe, and were affected accordingly. After having discoursed at some length on his regret at being obliged to leave he arose, kissed M——affectionately, C——ditto, remarking that he never felt more grieved for anything in his life. Then C——asked him where he was going. "I must go up the store" he said, and got out of the door as quickly as he could.

"LENA."

AUBURN COURIER

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1875.

GOSSIP OF THE DAY.

THE Prohibition candidate for Governor of Iowa, at the recent election, received less than 200 votes.

MARSHAL MACMAHON has refused the ex-Empress Eugenie permission to pass twenty-four hours incognita in Paris.

METEOROLOGISTS note the fact that the past summer was cooler by five degrees than the average seasons for eighty years.

THE yield of precious metals in the United States, which has for some time fluctuated from $60,000,000 to $70,000,000 per year, will, it is estimated, in 1875 aggregate very nearly $100,000,000.

WE read in an Eastern paper that two men near Troy have averaged $400 a month during the past summer, catching frogs and selling them in the New York market at 30 cents a pound. And it hasn't been a good season for frogs either.

JOHN J. GEGHAN, the author of the famous "Geghan bill" that passed the last Ohio Legislature, and the man who was responsible for the introduction of the religious issue into the late canvass, was defeated for a re-election, receiving the lowest vote of any candidate on the Democratic ticket in Cincinnati.

IT is stated that Jewell and Bristow both strenuously opposed the appointment of Mr. Chandler as Secretary of the Interior, and some Washington correspondents are predicting that there will be trouble between Bristow and Chandler, as both are bluff, headstrong men who like to have their own way.

THE overworked bakers of New York clamor for less work and more pay. They allege that they are compelled to work eighteen hours daily, with no respite on the Sabbath, for which they receive on an average but $11 per week. At some establishments they are paid $6 per week, with board—two meals a day, mainly of bread and coffee.

HERE is a warning to artists. A painting on exhibition in the hall of the House of Representatives at Washington, which the Appropriation Committee was recommended to purchase, and representing "Abraham Lincoln's First Earnings," has been mutilated by some vandal who cut out of the canvas the representation of a silver half dollar in Uncle Abe's hand.

H. S. HOWE, a citizen of Chicago, who had refused to put his fare in the box of a bob-tail car, or to pay it except to an authorized conductor, was ejected by a special policeman, and charged with disorderly conduct, in that his refusal to pay fare was a breach of the peace. Mr. Howe was acquitted, and now several counter-suits are to be instituted against the street-car company.

SENATOR HAMLIN, of Maine, explains now that the newspapers were included in the increase under the Postal law for which he stood sponsor, "by inadvertence." In other words, the Senator was in so great haste to oblige his clients, the opponents of cheap postage, that he hadn't time to see how the change they wanted would affect the public. The Senator proposes to have the law amended when Congress meets, but he hardly need trouble himself. The matter will be promptly attended to, whether he takes any action or not.

MR. CHARLES COLLINS, editor of the Sioux City Times, in a letter to his paper from Washington, says there is no doubt that a general Indian war will be inaugurated this fall. The Indians, he states, are generally dissatisfied with the way the Black Hills treaty terminated, and it is a matter of regret with them that they did not commence then by killing the Commissioners. Mr. Collins says Gen. Crook, commander of the Department of the Platte, has for some time been preparing for a conflict with the Indians, and will be ready when the necessity arises.

A LIVELY battle between college boys and Odd Fellows—who proved themselves to be fighting fellows as well—occurred at New Haven, Ct., the other day. A procession of the order was marching by the classic precincts of Yale, when the students, moved by a spirit of deviltry, commenced pelting them with stones. The Odds retaliated by charging upon the collegians with drawn swords, which they used to some effect, as we are told that several of the students were wounded. The latter, who have been accustomed to riding rough-shod over everybody and everything, were somewhat astonished at the vigorous manner in which the members of the mystic order met and repelled their attack. It is hoped the youngsters will profit by the lesson taught them.

THE Indians of the Creek Nation are taking steps to rid themselves of the worthless and rascally pale-faces who have taken up their abode in that country. Through their National Council they have enacted a law forbidding citizens of the nation, under penalty of $300 fine, to give employment to emigrants from the States. The class of people seeking a temporary hiding place, from the surrounding States, to avoid arrest from the authories in those States, has long been a matter of complaint to the Creeks, and it is supposed they will be obliged to leave if they are not allowed to work for their board, as many have done heretofore, for a few days in a place, then steal a horse and leave.

THOSE fast railway trains bowling over the country at almost lightning speed are very nice things to look upon, and very nice things to travel on for people who have a fancy for rapid traveling; but there is danger in them, nevertheless. This mile-a-minute travel will be the death of somebody yet, an affirmation which finds ample corroboration in the hair-breadth escape which a directors' train on the New York Central had the other day. The train referred to was made up of a locomotive and palace car, the latter containing William H. Vanderbilt and several other railroad magnates. At one of the stations on the road one of the switches had been inadvertently left open and they were thrown over to the branch. At the extravagant rate at which they were going it was impossible to remedy the mistake or slacken the speed, and it was almost a miracle that they were not thrown from the track and dashed to pieces. The only thing that saved them from such a fate was the fortunate fact that at the other end of the branch the switch, although open, was supplied with a patent self-adjusting arrangement calculated to set the switch in an emergency. Although considered unreliable, often failing to work satisfactorily, in this instance it did its duty well. As the train struck the switch it was lifted to the main track and the danger escaped. The concussion ejected all the passengers in the coach from their chairs, barking shins and smashing decanters, dishes, etc., but occasioning no serious injuries. Had the switch been such as are in common use on the line, or had the patent "frog" failed to operate, the result would certainly have been most disastrous.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

THE District Attorney of Brooklyn has entered nolle prosequis in all the suits growing out of the Beecher-Tilton scandal, and there is little probability that the great scandal will ever come prominently before the public again.... Damaging evidence has been discovered against La Page, the French Canadian arrested at Pembroke, N. H., for the horrible murder of Miss Josie Langmaid.

A SAD fate befell Mr. and Mrs. Murray, a newly-married couple, at Cheshire, Ct., the other day. The house in which they had taken rooms was destroyed by fire, and they perished in the flames.... A shocking domestic tragedy is reported from Mercer, Me. Greenleaf Tracy murdered the divorced wife of Hiram Walton, who had been living with Tracy, but who had been pardoned and returned to Walton, by shooting her with a shot-gun. He then fled to the woods and took his own life. Cause, jealousy.

W. J. ANDERSON, until recently business manager and Treasurer of the Hartford (Ct.) Evening Post, has been discovered to be a defaulter to the concern to the amount of $20,000.... The large dry goods house of Morgan Bros., in Montreal, was entered by burglars, a few nights ago, and robbed of $20,000 worth of goods.... A disease similar to the epizootic is making sad havoc with the cattle of several counties on the Pennsylvania side of the Delaware river.

A MEMBER of the Order of United Irishmen has been tried by a court-martial of his fellows, at New York, for betraying the secrets of the order, and sentenced to die the death of a traitor.

JOHN DOLAN, who was arrested at New York, about two weeks ago, on suspicion of murdering Mr. James H. Noe in his store last summer has just been tried, convicted of murder in the first degree, and sentenced to death. The evidence was purely circumstantial, but very strong.

WILLIAM THOMPSON and William Ellis, both colored, have been sentenced to death at New York, for the murder of Abram Weisburg, a Jew peddler, near that city in September last.

THE WEST.

ELMER WASHBURN, Chief of the United States Detective Service Bureau, has succeeded in breaking up a formidable band of counterfeiters whose headquarters were at Centralia, Ill. Six boxes of the queer were unearthed in the woods, aggregating some $150,000 in fifty-cent fractional currency and $5 national bank notes, and $1,000 in $50 national bank notes. The $5 notes were on the Traders' National Bank of Chicago, First National Banks of Peru and Aurora, and the Paxton and Canton National Banks of Illinois. Several of the counterfeiters were arrested. They had been living a quiet life in Centralia, having excited no attention or suspicion from the citizens.

THE biggest blow which the whisky ring has received was struck the other day, at St. Louis, in the conviction of Col. John A. Joyce, late Revenue Agent, upon an indictment for frauds in the Revenue Department. The verdict fell upon Joyce and his friends like a thunderbolt, and has caused the utmost consternation among the members of the ring all over the West.... In a quarrel, near Clearwater, Wright county, Minn., last week, Nathan Laughton shot and instantly killed his brother Orrin.... Six colored persons were drowned at St. Louis, a few days ago, by the capsizing of a boat.... The St. Louis Journal, of a recent date, says that the great bridge across the Mississippi at that place, from which the people expected so much in breaking down oppressive monopolies, is not only a grinding monopoly itself, but is in league with other great monopolies for oppressing the people. Recently the Bridge Company refused to give permission to the Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph Company to cross the bridge with their wires. The telegraph company, however, believing themselves right, laid their wires, which were torn town by the bridge monopolists, and the Journal thinks the Bridge Company is working in the interests of the Western Union Telegraph Company to prevent cheaper telegraph rates.

VIRGINIA CITY, Nev., has been visited by a most disastrous conflagration, which laid waste a large portion of the most important part of the city. The fire began at daylight on the morning of Oct. 26, in a private dwelling on A street, and in a very short time extended to C street, destroying the county building, the International Hotel, and several other prominent structures in its course, and soon the whole business portion of C street from the Odd Fellows' building south was a mass of flames, with no adequate means at hand for checking the fire. The offices of the Territorial Enterprise, the Evening Chronicle, and the Footlight were totally destroyed. From C street the fire spread across to Piper's Opera-House and the adjoining buildings on D street to the railroad depot and the Consolidated Virginia mine. The depot succumbed, and in a few minutes the hoisting works of the Consolidated Virginia, together with the large 60-stamp mill and the stamp department of the California mine were destroyed. The Ophir mine works, which had just been completed, were the finest on the Comstock lode, and were totally destroyed. Both the Ophir and the Consolidated Virginia shafts were bulkheaded, so that the fire was kept out of the mines. The fire continued to rage during the entire morning, all efforts to stop its course proving futile. There was a poor supply of water and the fire-engines seemed to have no effect on the driving element. Street after street was swept away, and families rendered houseless, huddled in the streets, shivering with cold and terror. Houses on every side of the burning district were blown up with giant powder, the authorities hoping to arrest the flames in this manner, but a piercing October wind, what they call in that country a "Washoe zephyr," was blowing, and flaming embers were carried rods away, lighting on the houses which had not already been attacked. It was 3 o'clock in the afternoon before the fire was finally subdued. At that time the district burned over was three-quarters of a mile long by one-half a mile wide, embracing the finest part of Virginia City. Ten thousand persons were rendered homeless, and upward of $3,000,000 worth of property has been destroyed.

A SHOCKING tragedy is reported from St. Louis. A young man named Robert Fogg shot his betrothed, Miss Pauline Flochman, a beautiful girl of 17, inflicting a dangerous wound, and then plunged a knife three times into his breast, and died in a few minutes. Both belonged to wealthy and respectable families.... Mrs. Stoddard, of Eaton county, Mich., recently gave birth to five children at one time. Once before she had three of a kind. Mother and children are said to be doing well.... A dispatch from Virginia City, Nev., dated Oct. 27, says: "At present it is impossible to state the loss of life by the late fire. Two men were killed on C street by a falling wall. There are numberless rumors of other casualties. Hundreds of families are homeless and hungry. The school houses, the only public buildings left, are open to them, but if immediate relief is not extended great suffering will ensue. Utter demoralization reigns in the city. Men, women and children wander about the desolate streets seeking shelter. The surrounding hills are dotted with camp fires. Few saloons remain, but the supplies of liquor have not been lacking, and the streets are alive with a drunken mob. The military is patroling the city for the protection of property. The best business men estimate the loss at $7,500,000, one-third being insured in foreign companies and the rest in local companies. A large number of women and children have been sent to Carson, Gold Hill, Reno, and California. There are fully 3,000 people without food, beds, roofs, or money. Of these fully 500 are without necessary clothes. Should harsh weather soon set in much suffering must ensue. The people are in good spirits, and, while terribly afflicted, are the pluckiest, bravest lot I ever had to do with. Hundreds are too proud to say they need help, and ladies go out and find women and children needing food but ashamed to beg it. The feeling is relaxing, however, under the kind offices of the Relief Committee, which is already partly organized. Some shanties are already being put up."

AT a State oratorical contest at Des Moines, Iowa, last week, the first prize was won by a woman—Miss Evelyn M. Chapman, of Simpson College.

THE SOUTH.

GEORGE C. PICKETT, a prominent General in the rebel army, died recently at his home in Norfolk, Va.... Louisville is making it hot for the gamblers which have so long pestered the city.

MOSES P. HANDY and Charles J. Jones, late of the editorial staff of the New York Tribune, and James H. Beale, Jr., late of the Boston Post, have purchased the Richmond (Va.) Enquirer.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI and West Tennessee experienced a severe earthquake shock, accompanied by a rumbling noise, on the evening of Oct. 27.

FOUR men were killed in a coal mine near Richmond, Va., last week, by an explosion of fire-damp.... Five persons were killed and several severely injured, at Lomax, Ark., last week, by the explosion of the boiler of a saw mill.

WASHINGTON.

GOV. AMES has written a letter to Attorney-General Pierrepont congratulating him for his successful efforts in bringing about a peaceable condition of affairs in Mississippi.... The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has decided that weiss beer is taxable like any other fermented liquor.... A shawl valued at $1,000 was stolen from Mrs. Robeson, wife of the Secretary of the Navy, while on a visit to Baltimore, the other day.... The Postoffice Department has decided to order the railway postal-car service between the cities of Pittsburgh and St. Louis, via the Pan-Handle and Vandalia route, passing through Indianapolis. By this means it is calculated that the present postal facilities of a very large portion of the Ohio and Mississippi River Valleys will be greatly augmented and improved.

THE Commissioner of Pensions has concluded his annual report. The invalid army-roll is 105,478, at an annual cost of $16,961,218. The invalid navy-roll is 1,636, at a total annual rate of $183,613. The roll of army widows is 104,885, at an annual cost of $12,835,579. The survivors of the war of 1812 number 15,875, at a yearly rate of $1,524,000. The widows of the war of 1812 number 5,163, at a total annual cost of $495,648.... Washington dispatches deny the reports of dissensions in the Cabinet on account of the appointment of Chandler as Secretary of the Interior.... President Grant, accompanied by some members of the Cabinet and other friends, visited Baltimore the other day, and were entertained by John W. Garrett, President of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad.

DEPUTY SHERIFF JAMES KINNEHAN, a man well known by the sporting fraternity throughout the South and West, was last week shot and killed by a desperate man named Frank Flynn, at Hot Springs, Ark. Kinnehan, after he was shot, managed to rise and put one ball into Flynn. The trouble arose out of an article that appeared in a disreputable Chicago paper about Flynn's wife, he thinking that Kinnehan was responsible for it.

THE government appeal from the decision of the Court of Claims in the Union Pacific railroad case was argued in the Supreme Court last week, Attorney-General Pierrepont conducting the case for the government.... The President has issued his proclamation designating the 25th day of November as a day of thanksgiving and prayer throughout the United States.

GENERAL.

JAY GOULD wants to control a through road from New York to San Francisco. Some time ago he obtained possession of the Union Pacific, and since then has been steadily working to attain his object. He now holds the Kansas Pacific, and the Chicago and Northwestern, and all he needs is a line from Chicago and St. Louis to New York, which will be supplied by a new road to be called the Erie and Chicago railroad.

THE natives of Porto Rico in New York have organized themselves into an association, after the manner of the Cuban patriots, to assist their fellow-countrymen at home in casting off the Spanish yoke.... There are rumors at Washington that the $4,000,000 to be distributed among Americans under the Geneva award is being unfairly divided. Of this sum $3,000,000 is said to have passed into the hands of a ring of lawyers. The matter will be brought up when Congress meets.... A circular of one of the New York commercial agencies states that during the first nine months of 1875 there were 5,334 commercial failures in all the States and Territories of the United States, with aggregate liabilities of $132,151,568. The greatest number in any one State was in Massachusetts, viz., 297. In New York city alone there were 146 failures, with liabilities amounting to $31,000,000.

HALF a dozen failures are reported in New York, on Saturday of last week, the principal one being Hoffman & Co., dry goods dealers, liabilities amounting to $208,000. The Ames Plow Company at Chicopee, Mass., and Robert Tilton, woolen manufacturer, of Cavendish, Vt., have also suspended, the liabilities of the former being $216,347 and the latter $140,000. McDonald & Co., manufacturers of agricultural implements, Wooster, Ohio, made an assignment the same day. Their liabilities are $500,000; and 200 men are thrown out of employment.... The President of the Boston and Albany Railroad has notified the Postoffice Department that from the 1st of December next until spring he will withdraw the train from Boston which makes connection with the fast mail train west of Albany, on the ground that it does not pay.

THERE is general complaint throughout the country of the want of currency of the denomination of fifty cents. None has been printed for more than seven months, and the supply in the Treasury and throughout the country is entirely exhausted. It will be several months before orders can be filled.... During the last fiscal year Chicago sold postage stamps to the value of $903,000, and St. Louis to the value of $440,000.... A Montreal dispatch says Guibord is to buried on the 18th of November. Having died on that day, six years ago, the members of the Institute Canadienne have chosen the anniversary of his death for the day of his burial.

THE Agricultural Department crop returns for October show that the wheat crop of the present year is a short one, and that there is a marked deterioration in the quality. The average thus far reported is about 80 per cent. of last year's production. If this indicates the total depreciation, it amounts to nearly 62,000,000 bushels, and gives the crop at 246,000,000 bushels. In quality the crop averages 14 per cent. below a sound condition. The condition of the corn crop is exceptionally high. The product reported this year falls short of 1874 about 4 per cent. The oats product is 5 per cent. greater than last year. The potato crop promises to be extraordinary, both in yield and quality. Tobacco is 2 per cent. above the average. Barley is 87 per cent of last year's crop, and buckwheat not far from the average.

THE October report of the Department of Agriculture contains accounts from New Jersey, Wisconsin and Minnesota, showing a large decrease in the cranberry crop by insects and frost. The rice crop of the South is larger than usual. The sugar cane crop promises a poor yield. The sorghum crop is represented as generally fine. The hop crop is quite good. The hemp crop is very fine. The number of fattening cattle in the country is somewhat greater than last year.... The greatest loss by the Virginia City fire will be the stoppage of work. The destroyed machinery for crushing ore and separating dross from the precious metal cannot be replaced in less than four months. The gold product will be lessened thereby $1,000,000 per month, and the silver product $1,500,000 per month.... News has reached Boston that the crews of two vessels which left that city last summer have been killed and eaten by cannibals in the South Pacific Ocean. According to the story, the ill-fated vessels—the barks Jewess and Delia M. Long—became becalmed in the Auckland Islands, were boarded at night by hordes of cannibals, who overpowered the crews, plundered the ships, scuttled them, carried the prisoners ashore and had a big feast off them.

POLITICAL.

THE official vote of Ohio at the October election, as returned to the Secretary of State, shows the following results for Governor and Lieutenant-Governor: Governor — Hayes, 297,813; Allen, 292,264. Hayes' majority, 5,549. Lieutenant-Governor—Young, 297,931; Cary, 287,968. Young's majority, 9,963.

FOREIGN.

THE recent gale on the English coast proves to have been more destructive than first reports indicated. Many vessels were wrecked, and upward of a hundred lives lost.... The London Times, in chronicling the fact that a Manchester firm has begun to import calicoes from the United States, says: "The fact is significant, and, as importers say that the goods are of much better quality and appearance than ours, Manchester, it appears, has found a competitor at last, but that must depend upon the price."

KAISER WILLIAM, who has been hobnobbing with Victor Emanuel at Milan, Italy, has returned to Berlin.... It is again rumored that Bismarck contemplates retiring from official life, in consequence of ill-health.

THE Mark Lane Express, in a review of the grain trade, says of the European crop: "The more we know of the crop of 1875, the less satisfaction it gives.".... A new Ministry is to be formed in Spain, and King Alfonso is to join the Northern army. So says a Madrid telegram.... The extent of the destruction on land and sea caused by the recent storms in England and Scotland is even now but partially known, though the latest advices tell a fearful tale of flood and shipwreck. The floods in Lincoln county, England, are the most destructive known for years, the River Trent having overflowed its banks, washing away the railroad at that point and doing much other damage. Nineteen lives are known to have been lost by inundation at Nottingham and other towns in the Valley of the Trent, and it is feared that the worst has not been told. Over fifty lives were lost on the Scottish coast.

THE Prince of Wales embarked at Suez on the 26th of October, and immediately sailed for India.... The Servian Parliament has passed, by a vote of 64 to 42, a motion for war with Turkey.

ADVICES from Madrid deny the story of the love affair and assassination in which the King of Spain was represented as the principal actor.... A council of physicians has declared that Count Von Arnim is unable to bear the prolonged imprisonment to which he has been sentenced.... Emperor William, in a speech to the German Parliament the other day, said that "so far as human judgment can discern, peace is more assured than at any time during the twenty years preceding the reconstruction of the empire."

A LONDON paper, in an article on the cattle plague, says the number of cases in England for the quarter ending on the 16th of October was as follows: In Somersetshire, 88,000; Cheshire, 50,000; Dorsetshire, 48,000; Gloucestershire, 44,000; Oxfordshire, 39,000; Warwickshire, 33,000; Norfolk, 31,000; Cumberland, 23,000. Throughout England and Wales there were for some time over 500,000 cases. The money damage is estimated at $1,000,000.

Let Us Give Thanks.

The following proclamation has been issued by the President:

In accordance with a practice at once wise and beautiful, we have been accustomed, as the year is drawing to a close, to devote an occasion to an humble expression of thanks to Almighty God for ceaseless and distinguished benefits bestowed upon us as a nation, and for His mercies and protection during the coming year. Amid the rich and free enjoyment of all our advantages, we should not forget the source from which they are derived, and extend our obligation to the Father of All Mercies. We have full reason to renew our thanks to Almighty God for favors bestowed upon us during the past year. By His continuing mercy, civil and religious liberty has been maintained; peace has reigned within our borders; labor and enterprise have produced their merited rewards, and to His watchful providence we are indebted for security from pestilence and other national calamities. Apart from the other national blessings, each individual among us may thoughtfully recall and devoutly acknowledge the favors and protection which he has received.

Now, therefore, I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States, do recommend that on Thursday, the 25th day of November next, the people of the United States, from their accustomed vocations, do assemble in their respective places of worship, and in such form as may seem most appropriate in their own hearts, offer to Almighty God their acknowledgments and thanks for all His mercies, and their humble prayers for the continuance of His divine favor.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand, and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, this 27th day of October, in the year of our Lord 1875, and of the independence of the United States the one-hundredth.

U. S. GRANT, President.

EARTHQUAKES.

A Scientific Theory of their Cause—Some Interesting Facts About the Phenomena.

The Popular Science Monthly for October has an interesting and instructive paper on the phenomena of earthquakes, and the causes that produce them, from the pen of Prof. John J. Lake. The origin of earthquakes, says Mr. Lake, has been assigned to many causes, as the falling in of caverns, steam, the combustion of gases, volcanic and electric action.

Great subterranean noises and reports resembling thunder constitute the first features to be noticed concerning earthquakes. Father Kircher describes them as "a horrid sound resembling that of an infinite number of chariots driven fiercely forward, the wheels rattling, and the thongs of the whips cracking." At Colares, near Lisbon, in 1755 the sound of an earthquake is said to have been like "that of chariots, which increased till it equaled the roar of cannon." At Lisbon it resembled "a rattling of coaches in the street, with a frightful noise underground, resembling the rumbling of distant thunder." Various earthquakes have been said to resemble in sound empty carriages and the rolling of heavy vehicles.

A second feature of these phenomena is the upheaving of the ground during their prevalence, which is one cause of the sea retiring. During the great earthquake at Lisbon the bar at the mouth of the Tagus was laid bare. Other results of the upward movement were observed elsewhere. The water in a pond at Dunstal, in Suffolk, was jerked into the form of a pyramid. At some places the water was tossed out of the wells. At Loch Lomond, in Scotland, a large stone was forced out of the water, and at Riobamba, South America, on the 5th of January, 1797, the bodies of many of the inhabitants were thrown by this vertical action upon the hill of La Culla, which is several hundred feet high on the opposite side of the river.

A third peculiarity is the frequent horizontal and circular motion of the soil walls that had served to divide fields have been completely changed in direction, but without having been shattered or overthrown. Houses have also exchanged situations with each other.

It has been observed that clouds have become fixed or suspended over particular spots affected, or about to be affected, by earthquake, as in London in 1149.

Explosions of great violence frequently attend these convulsions, often with disastrous results. When Millitello was destroyed there was a great explosion heard in the fog that enveloped it. A similar explosion was heard in 1783, at Castel Nuovo, in Calabria, when that place was overwhelmed.

A further peculiarity is the exemption of certain spots, although the shocks were felt at all the surrounding neighborhood. Thus at Manchester, in 1777, St. Paul's Church and the Dissenting Chapel escaped.

Earthquakes are very frequently attended by thunder and lightning. At Munster, in 1612, thunder and lightning were heavy during an earthquake; and in Sicily, in 1693, it caused very great mischief. This conjunction of lightning with earthquake was noticed by Luke Howard, and constitutes what he designates "spurious earthquake." Peculiar rushing noises have also at times been perceived. These convulsions are attended by the disturbance of the magnetic needle, and compasses on board ship are for a long time useless.

The theory of the falling in of caverns being the cause of these phenomena cannot be maintained, and the hypothesis that they are caused by steam or the explosion of confined gases has scarcely a better foundation. The volcanic and igneous theory is not so easily to be disposed of, for it appears very clear that volcanic eruptions do produce earthquakes. Volcanoes produce these disturbances in two ways: 1. By their own direct motion. 2. By disturbing the electric equilibrium in their neighborhood. By far the most prominent agent seems to be electricity, and the Italians, who suffer so much from these calamities, consider it to be the only cause. On the 10th of January the castle of Augusta was blown up by the lightning firing the powder-magazine. At Minco, on the 11th, the shock was attended by "a mighty storm of lightning, thunder and hail that lasted six hours." The Archbishop's palace at Montreal was set on fire by the lightning. Ætna emitted great noises, flames and ashes during the shocks that overthrew Catania, but there does not appear to have been eruption. Furla, situated among limestone quarries, disappeared, and at several parts of the hill the rocks, which were previously almost as white as Geneva marble, had changed, and in the clefts made by the earthquake had become of a burnt color, as if fire and powder had been employed to rend them asunder. Millitello seems to have been destroyed before the 11th of January, for the country people, who dwelt on the neighboring ridge of mountains, affirmed that it was not to be seen on the morning of that day, to which time, from 12 o'clock on the 8th, it had been concealed in a thick fog. During the interval the mountain that lay on the north side of town had been split asunder—one portion overwhelming Millitello, so that not an inhabitant escaped. Francofonte, built chiefly of wood, escaped with little damage from the shocks, but was fired by lightning; the spire of the church—wood covered with lead—burnt down, and the nunnery of the Carmelites entirely destroyed so suddenly that five of the nuns were stifled in their beds. The largest part of the inhabitants of Lucchela escaped by flying from the town on the sudden disappearance of the castle, situated on rising ground. [illegible] experienced shocks on the 8th, with violent thunder and lightning. At Spezzano, on the 10th, "from morning till night there was [illegible] of thunder and [illegible] and earth had been [illegible] the town-house and [illegible] were destroyed [illegible] on the neighboring hills observed that this lightning had burnt the vines so that no crop could be expected for the season.

A Wonderful Column.

A correspondent with Prof. Jenney's Black Hills expedition gives the following description of "Bear Lodge," one of the most remarkable natural formations in that land of wonders:

The most remarkable object seen by the members of the expedition during the entire summer, is Bear Lodge itself. Seen at a distance, it resembles in outline an Indian lodge; but, upon a nearer approach, it proves to be a column of gray porphyry, that resembles granite in every particular, excepting the absence of mica. The column is composed of seventy-six smaller columns, that stand close together, as if quarried and carefully set upon its milk-white clay pedestal by a hand as strong and mighty as Jove's. The clay pedestal is about 1,500 feet in the diameter of its base, and rises 500 feet above the waters of the Belle Fourche, on the west bank of which it stands. Its sides slope with a handsomely-rounded curve that corresponds well with the broad base of the column that rests upon it. This column of rock, or rather this many-columned column of rock, is 900 feet across the base and 300 feet across its top, and rears its head 1,126 feet above the level of the Belle Fourche river. The topographers determined the measurement by triangulation, as, owing to its smooth and steep sides, not even a mountain sheep could have climbed it. Imagine this solitary column standing on the level plain, five miles from any elevation deserving the name, and it will be readily understood why the Indians call it the "Bare Lodge." Some of the Indians, however, say it means Bear Lodge, on account of the holes seen in the clay-pedestal, and the bear-tracks around its margin. Let this be as it may, I give such authority as I can find, and do not feel disposed to question its appropriateness; but upon one point all must agree, and that is the strangeness and the beauty of this natural pillar, that has stood a solitary watch over this distant plain for hundreds of centuries, braving a million wintry blasts, and defying the gnawing of seas, to be seen at last and admired by civilized mankind.

Coinage at Philadelphia.

The silver bullion which is now being received at the Philadelphia Mint for parting is mainly from the Consolidated Virginia Mine, in Nevada, and contains 40 per cent. of gold, 50 per cent. of silver, and 10 per cent. of base metal. The bullion is known as the dore, or silver containing gold. The Mint is supplied with bullion as rapidly as is required for coinage purposes. In addition, the Assay Office in New York supplies the Mint with fine silver sufficient to insure a coinage of $1,000,000 per month in subsidiary silver coin. The standard fineness of the coin is made of 900 parts of pure silver and 100 parts of pure copper alloy. The law of 1873 has somewhat increased the weight of the subsidiary coin, so that the coins at present issued are a trifle heavier than the coin issued prior to the 1st of April, 1873, and are made to correspond in weight with the French coin. At present the subsidiary coins now issued are the half-dollar, quarter-dollar, twenty-cent piece and dime. The half-dollar weighs 192.9 grains. This piece formerly weighed 192 grains. The quarter-dollar now weighs 96.45 grains; it formerly weighed 96 grains. The new twenty-cent piece weighs 77.16 grains, and the dime weighs 38.58 grains; the latter formerly weighed 38.4 grains. These are the only silver coins authorized, excepting the trade dollar, which is a commercial piece, and weighs 420 grains.—New York Times.

THANKS to King Alfonso the Spanish soldiers are now much better clad, fed and drilled than they were a few years ago. There is also a remarkable increase in intelligence and education.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Around the Farm.

Now is the time to be looking for next year's seed-corn.

Castor oil is said to be the best and most durable lubricator for buggy axles.

Glycerine is excellent to rub on chafes, burns or chapped hands or sun scalds.

Keep your boots well oiled in winter, and they will last longer, while your feet will be drier and warmer.

The average cost of fences in the State of Pennsylvania is $11.40 an acre. In Rhode Island it is $19.50 an acre.

White lead ground in oil is an excellent application for saddle chafes or harness or yoke galls on horses or cattle.

Beyond any sort of doubt, seeds soaked in weak camphor water will sprout and grow vigorously, when the same seeds not thus treated will refuse to show any signs whatever of vitality.

Do not allow trees to grow over and shade your dwelling. They are unhealthy. On the contrary, vines and creepers on the walls protect them, and make a house warmer and dryer, and also make it look much better.

England washes most of the manure made by her people into the ocean, and then hunts over the globe, from Egypt to Peru, for more to waste. The United States does no better. But the natives of China and Japan maintain the fertility of their soil by saving what those who pretend to be civilized throw away. They have no worn out abandoned fields.

Autumn is the proper season to prepare grafts and cuttings. Of the latter, cuttings of grapes, currants, quinces, gooseberries, poplar and many other plants, taken off in the fall and buried in the ground all winter, will grow with facility in the spring. Grafts should always be taken off in the fall and kept in moist sand or sawdust till ready to use.

Dr. Hull, a noted horticulturist of Illinois, says that his lime remedy for the codling moth has proved completely effectual. The lime is thrown into the trees when the dew is on, or just after a rain, and after the fruit is set. A dipper or large spoon may be used; or, best of all, a bellows made for the purpose. The insects "will not go where the lime is scattered," he remarks; "they go away."

Farmers will find the following profitable for house or fence paint: Skim milk, two quarts; fresh slacked lime, eight ounces; linseed oil, six ounces; white Burgundy pitch, two ounces; Spanish white, three pounds. The lime is to be slacked in water, exposed to the air, and then mixed with about one-fourth of the milk; the oil in which pitch is dissolved to be added, a little at the time, then the rest of the milk, and afterward the Spanish white. This for white paint. If desirable, any other color may be produced; thus, if a cream color is desired, in place of part of the Spanish white use the ocher alone.

About the House.

It is not coldslaugh, but coleslaugh, when cabbage is cut fine and served raw.

A really good cure for toothache: Cotton, saturated with a mixture of spirits of niter and alum, applied to a hollow tooth, is a good remedy.

Veal broth: Stew a small knuckle in about three quarts of water, two ounces of rice, a little salt, and a blade of mace, till the liquor is half wasted away.

The surplus heat wasted from a common stove will, if conducted through a drum into another room, warm the room as much as a stove would, and still compel the fuel to do double the duty and give double results.

Steamed Indian bread, extra: Three cups of buttermilk, three cups of sweet milk, three cups of meal, two cups of flour, one teaspoonful of salt, two teaspoonfuls of soda; put in a greased pan and steam three hours.

To Clean Soiled Ribbons.—Wash them in cold suds, with a little alcohol in the water. Rinse in clear water that a piece of gum arabic has been dissolved in. Wind around a glass can or bottle to dry. Do not iron.

The best way to keep apples through winter for daily use is on shelves, in a cement-bottomed basement room, whose temperature is kept as low as practicable without freezing. Spread the fruit only a few inches deep, that they may be readily picked over.

The brilliant colors of autumn leaves may be preserved by dipping the stems in melted yellow beeswax. The leaves should be well dried. By piercing the leaf near the stem with doubled thread wire, you can weave them on coarser wire, or on large cord, into any description of garlands.

To cleanse cotton goods: Add to hot rainwater an amount of wheat bran equal to one-eighth of the fabric to be cleansed, and, after stirring well for five minutes, add the goods; stir them about with a clean stick, and bring the whole to a boil. Allow the mixture to cool until the articles can be washed out, after which rinse them well.

A very good way to pack eggs, it is said, is to take the barrel or tub, and put a layer of plaster in the bottom; then set the eggs up on end, but do not let them strike each other. Add more plaster; then another layer of eggs, and so on until the vessel is full. Set them where they will keep dry, and in the spring you will have plenty of fresh eggs on hand.

Reforming on Spelling.

Gov. Ingersoll, of Connecticut, has appointed a committee to consider the advisability of using the "amended orthography" in publishing the official documents printed by the State. It consists of Senator W. W. Fowler, who introduced the resolution; Prof. W. D. Whitney, of Yale College; Dr. J. Hammond Trumbull, Prof. C. Van Benschoten, of Wesleyan University; Prof. B. G. Northrop, of the State Board of Education, and Prof. Samuel Hart, of Trinity College. The plan is only to put State documents into [illegible] orthography, [illegible] spelling.

The Arctic Expedition.

Scarcely has the news come to us of Stanley's remarkable explorations around the great Lake Victoria Niyanza, directly under the burning equator, before almost equally interesting news comes from the frozen Arctic regions, by the return of the little British vessel, the Pandora, which left England three months ago to try to make the Northwest Passage from Baffin's Bay to Behring's Straits, discovered by Sir John Franklin a quarter of a century ago, the attempt to follow which cost him his life. The record of this little vessel, of the dangers which she encountered and the manner in which she escaped them, reads almost like fiction. Although she was constantly among the ice-floes and exposed to danger, she met with no mishaps, made her passage with remarkable swiftness, and returned in safety to England. The object of her commander was not to reach the highest possible northern latitude, but to make the Northwest Passage, and this object he would probably have accomplished had he not found his further progress effectually stopped by a solid wall of ice across Bellot Strait, at the very point where McClintock, his old commander, was stopped at the time he discovered the Franklin relics. He took the same route as McClintock, crossing Melville Bay in safety after leaving Upernavik. Thence he entered Lancaster Sound, visited Beechy Island, where Ross' ill-fated vessel was lost twenty-five years ago, thence sailed through Peel Sound, and kept on to Bellot Strait, where he found the impassible icy barrier which induced him to return to England rather than winter there. Although foiled in his attempt to make the Northern Passage, he penetrated to the south along the coast of Prince of Wales' Land further than McClintock had done, and even reached King William's Land, where no vessel but Franklin's has ever been before. The details of the voyage, therefore, will be looked for with great interest, and may perhaps throw some further light upon the fate of Franklin. The indirect results of the expedition are even more interesting than the direct, since the Captain of the Pandora was successful in finding letters at a spot previously decided upon from the other two English vessels, the Alert and Discovery, which are in quest of the open Polar Sea. The news from them is highly encouraging. The two vessels arrived at the Carey Islands July 27, and then left for Smith's Sound. They left Upensk July 22 and Cape York July 25. The best news from them is that the season was an open one, and that all were well, so that if nothing adverse has overtaken them they are now far on their way to the North Pole. The great Polar mystery, therefore, may yet be solved by these daring English navigators.

Annexation of New Guinea.

Early in the sixteenth century the Portuguese discovered the Island of Papua, and named it New Guinea on account of the striking resemblance of its inhabitants to those of Guinea, in Africa. The island itself is probably the largest in the world, provided Australia is counted as a continent. Borneo has hitherto claimed a superiority in size, but New Guinea is generally admitted to excel it. Not long ago the authorities of New South Wales petitioned England to annex Papua. The idea has been received with the greatest favor throughout Australia—so much so, in fact, that every colony on that continent is understood to demand annexation. The main reason alleged for this desire is the fear that some foreign power will seize New Guinea, unless England does so. This seems rather fanciful, however, in view of the fact that the deadly climate of the island has driven out the only nation—the Dutch—which ever gained a foothold on Papuan soil. The only danger would be that of German colonization, and Germany has never shown any inclination to surround herself with distant dependencies. Bismarck seems to agree with Cobden's sweeping statement in Parliament: "You call the colonies England's strength; they are England's weakness." The real reason for Australian unanimity in demanding the annexation of the island is probably the wish to have New Guinea a member of the federated republic that will ultimately, and perhaps ere long, be formed of the different British colonies in that part of the world. New Guinea was once a part of Australia. The sea has washed away the isthmus that stretched between them. What God has put asunder physically, man now proposes to join together politically.

Phenomena in Plant Life.

To show still more impressively the peculiar powers of the wood and bark to conduct the crude and elaborated saps in either direction, and to act either as roots and branches, as circumstances require, we will describe an experiment performed by a French gardener, M. Clarillet, at Vincennes, in 1866 and 1867. He selected two dwarf pear-trees, grafted on quince roots, which were from four to five feet high. One of them was carefully dug up in April, 1866, and was fastened in an inverted position above the other. The leading shoots of the two trees were now flattened on the side with a knife, and the two surfaces firmly bound together in the usual manner of splice-grafting. The two shoots grew together, and in the course of the summer following a few leaves appeared on the main stem or the inverted pear-tree, and also on the main branches of the quince roots, which were entirely in the air, some eight or ten feet from the ground. The next spring scions from four different varieties of pear were set upon the four main branches of the quince roots, two of which lived, and grew several inches. Meanwhile the inverted pear tree bore two pears. Here, then, was a composite tree, consisting, first, of a root of quince, then a pear-tree, upon this an inverted pear-tree, which had branches consisting of inverted quince roots, and these were surmounted by pear-shoots, of two unlike kinds.—W. S. Clark.

MURDER AS A FINE ART.

Peculiarities of the Williamson County (Ill.) Vendetta—Some Queer Revelations.

If De Quincey had written some years later and lived in this country, says the Chicago Tribune, a study of the Williamson county vendetta would have given him some choice ideas for the embellishment of his essay on "Murder as a Fine Art." For deliberate and cold-blooded conception and artistic execution, the Williamson county murders stand alone. There has been a vast improvement upon the original Corsican notion of the vendetta. The family feuds of Corsica became a national passion, and the sentiment of revenge would not have been satisfied if any of the incidental murders had been committed by proxy. A Corsican, in pursuit of some traditional enemy, would probably have regarded it as a personal offense, combining insult and injury, if anybody else had taken up his quarrel and killed his man. To have hired an assassin for that purpose would have been to pay out money to deprive himself of one of the most exquisite of earthly enjoyments—the pleasure of doing the killing himself. But the chiefs in the Williamson county vendetta are a more refined sort of assassins. The recent State's evidence given by a couple of the murderous employes reveals the new order of things. It is not necessary in Williamson county that the chiefs on either side should use their own $40 shot-guns, nor undergo the personal discomfort of prowling around nights, nor offend their delicate senses by witnessing the gushing of human blood and the scattering of brains. They have a more modern and business-like way of disposing of their enemies. One set of hired assassins serves both. It seems that Sam Musick and Marshall Crain, the two fellows who have given evidence for the State, earned their living in this new branch of industry. It would appear from their testimony that their gang worked impartially for the Bulliners and the Pleasants—opposing factions. The difference in the scale of prices might have induced the professional assassins to favor one side over the other had there not been other compensatory circumstances. Thus, Dave Pleasants or Jeff Russell was willing to pay $600 apiece to have the Bulliners killed, while the Bulliners fixed only $200 a head on the persons they wanted put out of the way. But the Bulliners wanted more men killed than their opponents, and this about equalized the compensation. It is another instance of the economical principle that low prices increase business. The hired murderers would earn as much at $200 a head on one side as they could at $600 a head on the other side.

It is not likely that all the fine-art qualities of the Williamson county vendetta will ever come to light, but the perfect disinterestedness of the paid murderers, and their uniform and conscientious observance of the railroad law against discrimination, can scarcely fail to command the admiration of timid people who have been accustomed to regard murder as a rather startling, not to say shocking, occurrence. Once in a while humanity would get the better of these cool and impartial men, and they would permit their prejudices and preferences to assert themselves. Thus Musick says he wanted "to kill Sisney," and the reason he wanted to kill Sisney was because he thought "Sisney needed killing." This was certainly an excellent reason, but it showed some personal feeling which distracts from the admirable imperturbability and Spartan fairness which generally characterizes the Williamson county murders. There seems also to have been a brief difference of opinion between Bulliner and Crain as to whether young or old Sisney should be killed first; but this was not material. They stood not upon the order of their killing, and it happened that old Sisney was the first to go. It appears, according to Musick's testimony, that Crain complained a little bit about the trouble he had in killing the old man—not that there was any resistance or danger, but "he had a rough time of it on account of the rain and mud." It may be, however, that Crain only mentioned this personal inconvenience to convince his employer that he earned his $200, so that the latter would not refuse payment in some easier case when there might be no "rain and mud." The "rain and mud," however, did not appear to make much impression on the assassin's employer, as the latter only paid him $15 down, and made up the rest in promises. "There is $15 for killing old George," he said, "and I will pay you the balance when I sell my wheat." Whether the balance was ever settled does not appear from the evidence, but it was probably paid if he ever hired the same man to do more murder.

Big Salaries.

The raising of Beecher's salary to $100,000 a year gives him the largest compensation in the Union. But one salary in the world transcends it—that of the Viceroy of India, which is £50,000, or $250,000 a year, though it is possible the salary of Lord Dufferin, as Governor-General of Canada, is £30,000, or $150,000 a year. The ambassadors of Great Britain at Paris and Vienna receive but $50,000 a year. We are told that H. B. Claflin pays his "credit-man," formerly President of the Bank of North America, Mr. Donaldson, $100,000 a year on account of his unprecedented knowledge of credits. The firm do a business of $70,000,000 a year, and this business is entirely a credit one; therefore a skillful knowledge of the buyers, their standing and personal habits, is of more value than ten per cent. upon this amount—in other words, it is profitable to Claflin to pay less than two per cent. upon his sales to Mr. Donaldson. There are many salesmen in the leading houses in New York with salaries reaching as high as $30,000, while the leading journalist must content himself with $10,000.

New York Statistics.

New York city has a population of 1,050,000 and a debt of $150,000,000—say $150 to each man, woman and child. Its real estate is worth about $1,250,000,000, and its personal estate say $400,000,000. For the privilege of being misgoverned it pays annually about $35,000,000, against $25,000,000 under the plundering reign of Tweed. Its public schools cost over $4,000,000, and its police over $3,000,000. It contains 30 religious denominations and about 350 churches. Its full voting capacity is close on 180,000. It has about 20 theaters and music halls, and enough rum shops to supply 10,000,000 people. It is a city of millionaires and paupers, a city of charities and of selfish money grubbing. The highest culture and the lowest degradation abound in it, the best social and moral material and the greatest rascality and vice.

National Finances.

A Washington dispatch says: "The call made July 28, 1870, for $14,894,200, which will mature Oct. 28, 1875, extinguishes the entire amount of the original loan of the five-twenties of 1862. The whole amount of bonds known as 'five-twenties of March, 1864,' have also been called, and will mature Nov. 13, 1875, after which date they will cease to draw interest. Of the bonds known as 'five-twenties of June, 1864,' $27,000,000 were called under dates of Aug. 13, Sept. 1 and 17, 1875, and it is presumed that for the purposes of the further conversion of 5-20's, and also for the requirements of the sinking fund, the entire balance of this loan will be soon exhausted in calls. Calls are now out for one-half of this amount, and the $22,000,000 of 5 per cents yet to issue to complete the $500,000,000 authorized will extinguish nearly the entire balance by Nov. 15, the date upon which the option of the Syndicate will expire. By the 1st of March next the 5-20's of 1862 and 1864, which originally amounted to $644,443,800 will be extinguished. The next bonds that will be called for conversion into the new fives are the 5-20's of 1865, under the act of March 3, 1865. Of these bonds, $203,327,250 have been issued. The amount now outstanding is $152,534,350. All but about $35,000,000 of the new fives authorized by Congress have been issued. Of these bonds there are now outstanding $437,956,450. The Syndicate option expires Nov. 15 next, by which time there is no doubt they will have taken the remaining $35,000,000. The conversion of the 5-20's into this loan will save the government annually in interest $5,000,000, and during the past five years, while the conversion has been progressing, the actual saving to the government has been about $12,000,000."

The Home Doctor.

To cure a ringworm, paint it with iodine a few times and it will entirely destroy every vestige of it.

As soon as a boil becomes hard and inflamed paint it with iodine. The poison will not be scattered, but will be absorbed by it.

Rubbing warts, night and morning, with a moistened piece of muriate of ammonia is said to cause their disappearance without pain or scar.

Croup can be cured in one minute, and the remedy is simply alum and sugar. The way to accomplish the deed is to take a knife or grater and shave off, in small particles, about a teaspoonful of alum; then mix with about twice its quantity of sugar to make it palatable, and administer as quickly as possible. Almost instantaneous relief will follow.

To prevent chills and fever, avoid exposure to the damp air of the early morning, except when exercising, and then do not remain in the open air to cool off. Avoid great fatigue; sleep eight hours of the twenty-four. Be sure that the water used for drinking and cooking is perfectly pure. Wear flannel underclothing at all seasons. Keep the feet dry and warm.

Animal charcoal, or boneblack, is an excellent antidote to the poisonous effects of phosphorus. A number of experiments warrant the belief that it is far more efficacious than the oil of turpentine, which, although valuable for the purpose, frequently produces severe headaches. The boneblack is administered in the form of pills made with gum tragacanth or other mucilaginous substance.

Eat Slowly.—Many a man has been choked to death in attempting to swallow his food before he had chewed it long enough. Food in the stomach, surrounded with its juices, is like pieces of ice in a glass of water; for as the ice melts from without inward, so the stomach juices dissolve the bits of food from without inward; and as the smaller the pieces of ice, the sooner are they melted, so the smaller the bits of food, the sooner are they dissolved, and pass out of the stomach, to be distributed to the system, giving it light, and warmth, and vigor. But if the pieces of food are large, they begin to rot before they are melted, causing heaviness, belching, nausea, or other discomforts. These make bad blood, contaminating the breath, sending dullness to the head, depression to the spirits, and a universal feeling of unwellness, lasting sometimes for half a day or a whole night. Therefore eat slowly, with deliberation; talk a great deal at meals; cultivate cheerful conversation, and let any man or woman be considered a domestic enemy and pest who says or does anything at the table calculated to cause a single unpleasant sensation in any one present.—Hall's Journal of Health.

How Monkeys Are Captured.

How are monkeys caught. The ape family resembles man. Their vices are human. They love liquor, and fall. In Darfour and Senor the natives make a fermented beer, of which the monkeys are passionately fond. Aware of this, the natives go to the parts of the forest frequented by the monkeys, and set on the ground calabashes full of the enticing liquor. As soon as the monkey sees and tastes it he utters loud cries of joy, that soon attract his comrades. Then an orgie begins, and then in a short time they show all degrees of intoxication. Then the negroes appear. The few who came too late to get fuddled escape. The drinkers are too far gone to distrust the negroes, but apparently take them for larger species of their own genus. The negroes take some up, and these begin to weep and cover them with maudlin kisses. When a negro takes one by the hand to lead him off, the nearest monkey will cling to the one who thus finds a support, and endeavor to go on also. Another will grasp at him, and so on until the negro leads a staggering line of ten or a dozen tipsy monkeys. When finally brought to the village they are securely caged and gradually sobered down; but for two or three days a gradually diminishing supply of liquor is given them, so as to reconcile them by degrees to their state of captivity.

INDIANA ITEMS.

Reynolds has put in a bid for the removal of the county seat of White county to that town.

William Garrett, of Waldron, Shelby county, is 95 years old, but cuts his cord of wood each day.

Stephen Kirkpatrick, of Cass county, has found on his farm a deposit of marble of superior quality.

A wedding took place in Delaware county, a few days ago, in which the bridegroom was 93 years old, and the bride 58.

Jacob Augsberger, a gunsmith apprentice at Decatur, placed the butt end of a gun barrel in the fire and received a ball in his thigh.

A one-armed employe at the Jeffersonville car-works has invented a combination knife and fork for the use of one-armed people.

Fifty fat hogs belonging to a farmer near Centerville were recently killed by some unknown person who fed them corn-meal in which pounded glass had been mixed.

Mrs. Hacker, of Morgan county, visiting her mother near Marco, gave her two children what was supposed to be quinine, which proved to be strychnine. Both died in an hour.

The Bloomington Progress makes mention of a sale of one bunch of fat cattle to a New York dealer by a Monroe county shipper, which aggregated the handsome sum of $12,000.

The Wabash Plaindealer says: "Pat Ivory raised one hundred and fifty bushels of the Irishest kind of Irish potatoes this year on two city lots—less than two-fifths of an acre."

A four-year-old daughter of Michael Mooney, of New Albany, leaped from the arms of her mother, last Sunday, while near a railroad track, and was crushed to death by a passing train before the parent could rescue her.

A boy named George Harris, about 16 years of age, while gathering beech-nuts near Walton, recently, fell from the top of a large beech tree, his head striking a snag, which was driven through the skull, inflicting a wound from the effects of which he died in five hours. One leg and an arm were also broken by the fall.

A terrible cutting affray took place at North Manchester one day last week, between John Clark and Samuel Fanning, resulting in the former being stabbed several times, so deeply that his recovery is almost impossible. The parties are brothers-in-law, and the trouble was about Clark correcting Fanning's child.

Maj. M. A. Malott, father of Judge Newton Malott, of Vincennes, died at his home in Bedford last week. He had been a resident of Lawrence county about fifty years, and had represented the county in both branches of the Legislature. He was, at the time of his death, President of the First National Bank of Bedford.

Union Mills, a small place a few miles south of Laporte, was the scene of a crusaders' raid last Sunday. About forty ladies, with axes, hatchets and crowbars, burst open the saloon and utterly demolished the contents. The bar, glasses, pictures, windows, and liquor, suffered alike, and the saloon at Union Mills is now a thing of the past.

The Hon. Will Cumback, of this field burg, will re-enter the lecture Greensseason under very flattering and favorable auspices. He now has four lectures, entitled, "The American Citizen," "The Invisible Some People," "Popular Opinion," and "Ridiculous Humanity." The latter two are entirely new, and prepared especially for this year.

Last Saturday evening a stabbing affray occurred at Warsaw, between Solomon Mackuber and Fred. Conner, originating from an old grudge. Mackuber was intoxicated, and abused Conner, which finally became unbearable, and Conner knocked him down, whereupon Mackuber drew a knife and cut several large gashes in Conner's face, arms and shoulders. The wounds will probably not prove fatal, but Conner will lose an arm.

James H. Stewart, of Madison, has been appointed Superintendent of the C., L. and C. R. R., to succeed E. H. Waldron, who resigned to take the position of General Superintendent of the Ohio and Mississippi railroad. Mr. Stewart was at one time a resident of Lafayette, moving to Sandusky as Superintendent of the Sandusky, Mansfield and Newark railroad, and more recently has been Superintendent of the Winona and St. Peters railroad, in Minnesota.

Tipton township, Cass county, has a case of haunted house. Some time ago the occupant of this house, a Mr. Helire, died after a long siege of ills. During the last few nights of his life his family were horrified by the noise of clanking chains, desperate struggles and wails of agony, which proceeded, apparently, from an empty and long disused room. Careful and repeated investigation failed to cast a ray of light upon the mystery, and at last, when Mr. Helire yielded up the ghost, his widow abandoned the house, leaving the mystery still unsolved.

The Supreme Court has rendered an opinion in the lottery case of Peterman vs. Rothrock, from Shelby county. Rothrock held one-tenth of a ticket, drawing the capital prize in the Louisville lottery in 1872, and sold one-tenth of his interest to Peterman. As soon as the drawing was announced, Rothrock drew the entire tenth from the bank, and Peterman sued to recover his $700. He obtained judgment below, but the Supreme Court held that the contract was illegal and void, and left Mr. Peterman to pay all the costs and lose his money besides.

The particulars of the murder of Miss Susan Vandermark, by a young man named Beckentheimer, near Warsaw, in July last, have probably not been forgotten by the reader. It will be remembered that Beckentheimer induced the young lady to take a buggy ride, and treated her to some wine which contained Spanish-fly, to excite her passions. The drug was too strong, it throwing her into convulsions, in one of which she died. The trial of the murderer, occupying two weeks, has been concluded at Warsaw. The jury, after being out twenty-four hours, brought in a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree, and he was sentenced to the Penitentiary for life.

The Dog Feast.

A correspondent at the Red Cloud Agency writes: On Saturday a friendly Indian who had conferred the pleasure upon me of smoking cigars quite generously invited me to come to his tepee, up the canon, that night, as he was going to have a feast, and he desired that Col. Beauvais and Capt. Ashby, of the Treaty Commission, should also come. Sword is the name of the entertaining party, and the "invite," while not presented on a salver, or even printed or written on tinted paper, was accepted, entirely for the novelty and not for the boiled dog. We were bid to come early, and at sundown were at Sword's canvas mansion. A multitude of children, with a double number of dogs, welcomed us in truly aboriginal fashion. Sword immediately designated to his squaw the particular dog that was his choice for the pot. The same was caught and tied by a short rope to a stake, and the female "went for" the dog with a club. Striking at the head, she missed and hit him on the nose. He filed his objection to that sort of treatment and raised a fearful howl. This brought out three other squaws with clubs and a dozen dogs, and from that on it was "nip and tuck" with the dogs and squaws in getting punishment in on that tied dog. Finally the clubs beat life out of it, and it was ready for the next step. It was thrown on a quick brush fire, which singed off all the hair. The squaws scraped it well, took out the entrails, cut the carcass to pieces, put it in a large camp-kettle, and set it "a bilin'." So far there had been lots of fun for the visitors. In about two hours the dog was pronounced done and the feast ready. Some twenty prominent Indians had been invited in—and they never go back on a feast. Each one of the visitors was seated on a robe between two Indians, and each man was furnished with a pan. Two Indian soldiers were detailed to "dish out" the dog, and I am confident that they did so. To Col. Beauvais, who is of St. Louis, was given the whole head, which set in his dish, grinning at him like—well, there is nothing so much on the grin as a dog's head boiled. Possibly your readers cannot obtain an adequate idea of such a sight save only in one way—boil a dog's head, set it in a pan, and gaze at it by the light of a pine-knot! I positively decline to state what your correspondent received in his dish, but Capt. Ashby, who is from Nebraska, had his pan garnished with an elegant hind leg and a few joints of tail. Bade to come to a feast, it must have been a grave breach of Indian hospitality not to partake, but Col. Beauvais, who is an old Indian trader, informed the whites that if they did not wish to eat that dog a release could be purchased. None of the visitors were hungry, and it took $20 to convince the Indians that they were not so. The dog was entirely eaten up, the bones being picked as clean as though flesh had never covered them.

Free Versus Slave Labor.

George W. Adair, of Atlanta, says: "Before the war I kept four negroes on my lot—Wash., a man-of-all-work, valued at $1,500; Sarah, a No. 1 cook, $1,400; Harriet, a house-girl, $1,200; and Nancy, a nurse, $900. The legal interest (seven per cent.) on the value of these slaves was $350 per annum, and I had to feed, clothe, pay doctors' bills, etc. Now I have the same service performed at $360 per annum. I feed these hired servants, but furnish no clothing nor pay doctors' bills, and get the same service per month for less than when I owned slaves, and if they die I lose nothing. Now, when I acquire my capital I can put it in other property, instead of locking it up in slaves. This, I think, illustrates the whole question. The landowner can avail himself of negro labor to-day at less cost than when he had to pay for the slave and take care of him. This labor cannot be controlled so absolutely as slave labor, and more or less irregularities grow out of it; still it is available and susceptible of being used to great profit by the landowner. Planters who owned slaves, who now remain upon their land and give personal attention to their crops, can make more clear money from the soil than under the old system. The South is becoming every year more familiar with free labor, and understands better how to manage it. She is becoming more self-reliant and self-sustaining."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

An Ignorant Boy.

Mr. Porter, of Baker street, has so many irons in the fire that he never has time to sit down and talk with his children and explain things. His son John traded a dog for a steel trap the other day, supposing it to be a rat trap. Then he set the trap on the front steps, supposing that to be the best place. If his father had been a different man the boy would have had more perception, but Mr. Porter never sat down, took the lad on his knee and pointed out the straight and narrow road which the successful rat-catcher must pursue. John was in bed and asleep, and his mother was sewing a three-cornered patch on his pants, when Mr. Porter came home and stepped into the trap as he unlocked the hall door. He yelled "git out!" and "murder!" for three straight minutes, and when the neighbors gathered and pried open the trap he went in and licked John until his arm was tired. The boy was yesterday packing up a collar box, a kite and a pair of stilts, intending to run away. He can't be blamed. Fathers should sit down and explain to their sons all about rat traps and all about the best place to catch rats.—Detroit Free Press.

Lotteries and Fools.

Alexandria, Va., is the last scene of one of those villainous schemes that take a man's money without giving him anything for it. Investigation shows that the drawing of the Montpelier Female Humane Association Lottery was a huge hoax. The managers were from New York, and of the half million dollars received from tickets, all but a few thousand were absorbed by sharpers. Not a dollar was drawn by a bona fide ticket holder. This is a fair specimen of all these swindles. And yet every loudly advertised game of this sort finds its dupes all over the land. Poor fools invest their last dollar with the hope of winning a big bonanza. As long as men do not believe in Horace Greeley's theory that the only way to get money is to honestly earn it, they must not complain when they are basely defrauded by gambling schemes.

THE PHŒNIX TILE MACHINE.

It is well adapted to the wants of Tile Makers. It is usually driven by the power of one horse. It delivers tile at the two opposite ends of the machine. It may be converted into a single delivery machine. It has a simple and ready means of taking up the wear on the plunger head and sides of the chamber, thus preventing all leakage of mud, and adding years of service to the machine. It makes from 200 to 300 rods of tile per day. It is fully warranted. It may readily be adapted to Steam Power. The dies are finished with much care. Boxes and Trucks at moderate prices.

It is believed that the following rules will assist in making the institute a success.

1. The teachers in whose district the first institue is held, shall preside at the first meeting; and after the election of a secretary and such other officers as shall be deemed necessary, he shall announce a programme previously prepared—calling on each teacher to take part in the institute work; and he shall conduct the exercises for that day.

2. At the close of the first half of each session, a president and secretary for the next meeting, shall be elected. The former shall before the close of the present meeting, prepare to announce a programme for the next institute, assigning duty to each one and each teacher must take the subject so selected unless permitted by the president to select and teach another.

3. The president and secretary shall each take charge of recitation, unless the time is fully taken charge of by others.

4. The secretary, shall within one week after each meeting, transmith to the County Superintendent, the name and recitation of each teacher in attendance, as well as the time during which each teacher was present at the institute The names of visiting teachers, and of those who have voluntary exercised, shall also be reported.

5. Each meeting shall be called to order at 10 o'clock a. m. A recess may be had at noon by a vote of the members.

6. An institute day shall be four hours exclusive of any recess, and any teacher shall have credit of only such part of a day as he may actually pass in the institute.

7. The County Superintendent or Township Trustee may, when present, take charge of the institute, conduct its exercises, and be allowed to vote on questions admitted to the meeting. The former shall teach at least a part of the time, and be allowed to choose his own subject.

The following subjets for institute work, are submitted, but teachers are at liberty to select any other they may deem appropriate.

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION.

How can we prevent tardiness? what method can we adopt to cause each member of the class to receive the full benefit of the recitation? What is the distinction between moral and religious training? what is the relation of the teacher to the state? What is the object in teaching children to analyze and parse?" How can we secure the desired information from pupils, and at the same time not encourage "tattling?" What is the difference between education and information? Arrangements for the Centennial.

The Act of Congress which provided for "celebrating the one hundreth Anniversary of American Independence, by holding an International Exhibition of Arts, manufacturies, and products of the soil and Maine," authorized the creation of the United States Centennial Commission, and entrusted to it the management Exhibition. This body is composed of two Commissioners from eadh State and Territory, nominated by the respective Governors, and commissioned by the president of the United States. The enterprise, therefore, is distinctly a national one, and not, as has sometimes been stated, the work of a private corporation.

The exibition will be opened on May 10th, 1876, and remain open every day except Sunday, until November 10th.—There will be a fixed price of 50 cents for admission to all the buildings and grounds.

The Centennial grounds are situated on the western bank of the Schuylkill River, and within Firmount Park, the largest public park in proximity to a great city in the world, and one of the most beautiful in the country. The Park contains 3160 acres, 450 of which have been enclosed for the exibition. Besides this tract, there will be a large yard near by for the exibition of stock and a farm of 42 acres has already been suitably planted for the tests of ploughs, mowers reapers, and other agricultural machinery.

The exibition buildings are approached by eight lines of street cars, which connect with all the other lines in the city, and by the Pennsyvania and Reading railroads, over the tracks of which trains also run from the North Pennsylvania and Philadelphia, Wilmington, and Baltimore railroads. Thus the Exhibition is in immediate connection with the entire railroad system of the country and any one within 90 miles of Philadelphia can visit it at no greater cost than that of carriage hire at the Paris or Vienna Exhibition.

The articles to be exhibited have been classified in seven departments, which, for the most part. will be located in appropriate buildings.

This provides nearly ten more acres for exhibiting space then there were at Vienna, the largest International Exhibition yet held. Yet the applications of exhibitors have been so numerous as to exhaust the space, and many important classes of objects must be provided for in special buildings.

An important special exhibition will be made by the United States Government, and is being prepared under the supervision of a Board of Officers representing the several Executive Departments of the Governement. A find building of 4¼ acres is provided for the purpose, space in which will be occupied by the war, Treasury Navy, Interior, post Office, and Agricultural Departments and the Smithsonian Institution.

The Women's Centennial Executive Committee, have raised $30,000 for the erection of a pavilson in which to exhibit every kind of women's work. To this collection, women of all nations are expected to contribute.

The list special buildings is constantly increasing, and present indications are that their total number will be from 200 to 250. Most of the important foreign nations—England, Germany Austria, France, Sweden, Egypt, Japan, and others—are putting up one or more structures each, for exhibiting purposes, or for the use of the commissioners, exhibitors and visitors. Offices and headquarters of this kind, usually of considerable architectural beauty, are porvided by the States of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, New Jersey, New York, Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Hampshire Missouri Kansas, Virginia, West Viaginia, Nevada, Wisconsin, Iowa, and Delaware; and it is likely that others will follow the example.

A number of Trade and Industrial Associations, which require large amounts of space, will be provided for in special buildings. Among these are the photographers, the carriage buiders the glass makers, the cracker bakers, the boot and shoe manufacturers, beside, quite a number of individual exhibitors, The great demands for space will probably render this course necessary to a considerable extent, especially for exhibitors who have been tardy in making their applications. In the Main Exhibition Building, for example, 333,300 squar feet of space had been applied for by the beginning of October by American exhibitors only; whereas, the aggregate space which it has been possible to reserve for the United States Department, is only 160,000 square feet, about one-third of which will be consumed by passage ways.

The machinery building, like the others, is already fully covered by applications. There are about 1000 American exhibitors in this department, 150 English, and 150 from other European countries—which is about 250 more than entered the Vienna machinery exhibition. Extra provision is being made for annexes to accommodate the hydaulic machinery, the steam hommers, forges, hoisting engines, boilers, plumbers, carpenters, etc.

Power in the machinery hall will be chiefly supplied by a pair of monster Corliss Engines.

For the Art Exhibition, the most eminent American artists are understood to be at work, and it may be cnfidently stated that, especially in the department of landscape painting the United States will present a finer display then the public has been led to expect.

The Secretary of the Nevy has arranged that a United States wor vessel shall call next Spring, at convenient European port to collect and transport hither to the Exhibition the works of American artists resident in Europe.

Mr Bell, the eminent English Sculptor, who designed the groups for the plinth for the great Albert Memorial in Hyde Park, London, is reproducing in terra cotta, at the celebrated word in Lambeth, the one which symbolizes America. The figures in this group are colossal, covering a ground space of 15 feet square. It will probably by placed in the great central gallery, opposite the principal entrance.

Scribners' Monthly for 1876.

The publishers invite attention to the following list of some of the attractive articles secured for Scribners' Monthly, for the coming year. In the field of fiction, besides numerous novelties and shorter stories, there will be TWO REMARKABLE SERIAL STORIES by AMERICAN AUTHORS.

The first of these now complete in our hands, "GABRIEL CONROY" by BERT HARTE. Begins in the November number, and will run for twelve months. This is Mr. Hearte's first extended work The scenes and charactors which the author has chosen from his favorite field, California, are painted with characteristics vivedness and power; and the work is without doubt the most graphic record of early California life that has yet appeared. We shall also begin in the January number "PHILIP NOLAN'S FRIENDS, or, SHOW YOUR PASSPORT," by EDWARD EVERETT HALE.

The scene of this story is laid in the Southwestern teritory, now forming the states of Louisana and Texas at the time of Aron Burr's treason. The characters lived in a section which was now American, now French and now Spanish and this record of their adventurous lives makes a story of intense and unflagging interest throughout

AWAKE!

Wake, my beloved, the young day is treading
Blushing and fair, over forest and lake,
Throwing life in its footsteps outspreading—
Wake, my beloved, awake!

Break the dull sleep; while love's spring-time is dawning,
Let us drink deep of its fleeting delight!
Under our feet at this moment is yawning
Dark, be compassionless night.

Love, with its turbulent, mighty pulsation,
Thrills through my veins like a quickening heat;
All my young life with its strong aspiration,
All have I thrown at thy feet.

If the wild vision of glory should blind me,
Reach me thy hand lest I stumble and fall;
Darkness before me and darkness behind me,
Thou art my life and my all.

Sweet 'tis to breathe in the balm of thy presence,
Sweeter to feel the warm gaze of thine eyes,
While the fleet moments with bright effervescence
Whisper their gladness and die.

Then in the depths of my soul as in slumber,
Hear I great voices of world-shaking deeds,
And the pale day, with its cares without number,
Far from my vision recedes.

Ere I had seen thee, how tardily flowing
Stole from my breast the faint notes of my song;
Now, like spring freshets, their gates overthrowing,
Roll the strong torrents along.

Pale was my life, and the white mists above me
Dimmed to my sight the soft splendor of May;
Now, but a glimpse of the hope that you love me
Lights and illumines my way.

Darkling I stood; and tumultuous fancies
Surged through my soul like black billows of night;
Now the wide future, in sun-lit expanses,
Radiant bursts on my sight.

Dost thou not see the dawn's beckoning finger
How the young light, like a full-swelling tide,
Breaks through its flood-gates? Oh, why dost thou linger?
Wake, my beloved, my bride!

A TEMPERANCE TRACT.

Some years ago a story, supposed to be one of those convenient, made-up stories which help to fill out the bottom of a newspaper column, went the rounds of the press, and died away at last in the extreme rural districts, about the spontaneous burning up of an old Tennessee toper. It was said that he put a coal of fire upon his pipe to light it, and while in the act of blowing the coal to ignite the tobacco his breath took fire, a kind of blue flame and dense smoke curled up, and in a minute or two the smoke cleared away, and all that was left of toper, pipe, breath and all was a heap of ashes.

Nobody seriously believed the story of the Tennessee toper, and yet when one comes to look into the matter he will find that in different parts of the civilized world cases of spontaneous combustion of the living human body are on record which are as well authenticated as the battle of Bunker Hill. Medical men have been acquainted with such facts for years. Moreover, cases in which persons have thus anticipated purgatory, and at the same time disposed of their bodies by involuntary self-cremation, are by no means so uncommon as one might suppose. Various medical books mention numbers and numbers of them, about which there can be no shadow of doubt.

The cause of such an extraordinary phenomenon as the spontaneous burning up of a live human being was at first an impenetrable mystery. Juries summoned in these cases readily arrived at the nearest and easiest way out of the difficulty, and decided that it came by a "visitation of God;" and even now, when visitations of God are not supposed to be so frequent as they used to be, the mystery of spontaneous combustion is not yet wholly solved by science. This much is certain, however: it occurs in elderly persons of intemperate habits. Both very lean and very fat drunkards are liable to be burnt up. Thirdly, women particularly are apt to be taken out of the world in this awful manner.

Death from spontaneous combustion, or, as it used to be called, "preternatural combustion by visitation of God," is almost instantaneous. One moment the unfortunate individual is a live human being; the next moment he is a heap of ashes and a bad smell, with perhaps an item or two of a half-consumed head or foot left to tell what had been. There is but one well-established instance in which the spontaneously consumed person lived long enough to narrate how he was attacked. That individual was a Roman Catholic priest, Father Bertholi.

Father Bertholi retired to bed one evening in the house of a relative. A few moments after, "a strange noise, mingled with cries, was heard from the room." The people of the house rushed in, and beheld Father Bertholi standing on the floor, surrounded by a strange, flickering flame, which receded as they came near, like a will-o'-the-wisp. A surgeon was called, who found the skin of the right arm and of the back loosened and hanging down.

The patient lived four days, and died in a most horrible manner, too horrible to describe. The only account he could give of the attack was that he had suddenly felt a blow upon the right arm, as if he had suddenly been struck with a club. On looking at his arm he saw a spark of fire hanging to his sleeve, which instantly was burnt off his arm. His cap was also burnt off, while his hair was not even scorched. In this case there was no fire or light in the room.

One case of "preternatural combustion," which occurred something over sixty years ago, served an excellent purpose to our good friends the Methodists, who printed it far and wide and made a truly awful example of it. The medical man who records this case is at pains to state in the beginning that he does not depend solely for his facts upon the Methodist Magazine, or even upon the Wesleyan minister who first told the story, but that it was confirmed from other sources. The story of this truly awful example is about thus:

Near 2 o'clock one night the keeper of an alms-house in Limerick was awakened by one of the inmates in great alarm. There was something fearful going on in his room, the person said. The keeper, Mr. O'Neil, hastened to the spot, and found lying in the middle of the floor a burning human body, which was all over of the color of a red-hot coal. In the ceiling just above was a large hole, on fire around the edges, through which it appeared that the fiery red-hot body had burned its way and dropped down into the room of the inmate below. The person occupying the room above was an old woman named Mrs. Peacocke, who was not only a hardened sinner, but an inveterate drunkard besides. Mr. O'Neil rushed up-stairs and burst open this hardened old sinner's door. In this room he found to his consternation no Mrs. Peacocke, but only a hole in the floor through which Mrs. Peacocke had burned her way to the nether regions.

What only added to this horror was that in Mrs. Peacocke's room there was found no sign of candle, candlestick or fire, except a few coals which had been raked together and covered with ashes, to keep in through the night, and which remained undisturbed and uncovered in the grate. It was clear as daylight that the fire could not have been communicated from these coals. What was it then? There was but one explanation. In the morning the Mayor of the city, several ministers and other honorable-standing and veracious gentlemen visited the scene and decided to the complete satisfaction of all parties that since there was no sign of her having caught fire from anything in her room, and "the extraordinary circumstance of no part of the room being burned except the center of it, through which she had fallen, added to the well authenticated circumstance of her recent diabolical imprecations and lies, obliged every observer to resolve so awful an event into the visitation of God's judgment in the punishment of a daring and persevering sinner."

When any flame is observed about these spontaneously burning human bodies, it appears like the flame of alcohol, blue, flickering, very difficult to extinguish by water, and not readily communicated to other bodies, even when they are inflammable. Often, indeed, extraordinary to relate, the person's clothing has been found wholly uninjured, while the person inside the clothing was burnt to a cinder. The body itself is usually entirely consumed, while the head and portions of the limbs are sometimes left untouched. The maid of Cornelia Bandi, an elderly Italian Countess, went into her mistress' room to wake her up, one morning. She found no mistress, but upon the floor, a little distance from the bed, lay a heap of ashes, and in this dreadful heap of ashes some little parts of the head, eyes and arms of the unhappy Countess. This lady had been constantly in the habit of bathing her body with camphorated spirit of wine.

All over the room and furniture where the Countess had been consumed, there was a greasy, sooty deposit. This moist, disagreeable deposit of soot, and an offensive odor of burnt meat, always attend and result from the spontaneous combustion of a human body. An examination of the blood of these unfortunates—that is, where there is any blood left to examine—shows that a considerable quantity is mingled with the watery part of the blood.

Rev. Mr. Ferguson, of Dublin, relates that in the family of one of his parishioners, resided an old woman who, with her daughter, was in the habit of going to bed in a state of intoxication every night. The two slept in the same bed. The old woman, for some days, had been drinking more ardent spirits than usual, when one morning the family were awakened by a horrible-smelling smoke. They hastened to the apartment of the two women, and found the body of the old woman black as a cinder, and smoking all over. She was quite dead when they reached her, and almost entirely consumed, while neither her daughter, who was beside her, nor any of the bed clothing was injured in the slightest degree.

One poor lady was awfully overtaken in the midst of a matrimonial squabble. One night her husband came home late from a party, and the two quarreled violently, both being in a state of intoxication. The wife insisted upon sitting up, the husband upon going to bed. She persisted in her determination, whereupon her husband vowed that if she would sit up, she should sit up in the dark, and so took her candle away and left her.

Next morning the maid-servant, opening the windows of the back parlor, perceived something in her mistress' arm chair. She thought at first it had been put there by her mistress' son, as a scare-crow to frighten her. Going nearer, however, she was suddenly horror-struck to find that this awful "something" was the remains of her hapless mistress. The trunk of her body was entirely consumed, while her upper and lower extremities were not injured. The trunkless head, with the hair in curl papers, was still leaning upon the right hand and against the wall. The face was slightly scorched; but neither the hair nor the curl-papers were burnt in the least. The room was full of the offensive burnt odor before mentioned. It was only with the greatest difficulty that the medical profession were able to reach the facts of this case, since the family of the dead woman used every means in their power to hush the affair up. No wonder!

When a human being takes fire inside and burns up of himself, how does he do it? The world, especially the medical part of it, having outgrown the theory of the visitation of God on this subject, it became necessary to account for spontaneous combustion on rational principles. This theory and that have been held by different persons, but the most plausible one seems to be that the combustion is caused by the explosion of inflammable gases generated in a diseased and depraved organization. The body of a patient who died in a hospital in France was examined, and when perforations were made in various parts of it, a gas issued therefrom which took fire from the flames of a candle.

The body of a living human being sometimes becomes so diseased that its natural secretions are depraved and perverted. In this state it is supposed that certain inflammable gases are generated, which, mingling with air and oxygen, form explosive mixtures inside the human body. The generation of these is attended with heat, and off your drunkard goes, pop! and nothing is left of him but a greasy smoke and a heap of ashes.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Department Expenses.

The Warrant Division of the Treasury Department has been ordered by Secretary Bristow to prepare, for the Centennial Exposition, a statement showing the expenses of each department of the government since its organization. This will involve great labor, and will not be completed until some time in June next. The showing for the Navy Department is the only one completed. From this it appears that the department has cost the government since its organization $1,000,000,000.

SAVED BY A DOG.

Thrilling Encounter Between a Bank Watchman and a Gang of Burglars.

Oxford (N. J.) correspondence of the New York Herald: A thrilling affair took place here this morning, shortly after 2 o'clock, in the office of the Oxford Iron Company, which was entered by a gang of burglars during the temporary absence of the night-watchman, William H. Searing, who had gone into the basement of the building, as was his custom, to see that all was right. On returning to the office he was startled to see crouching behind the safe a human figure peering intently in his direction through a mask, and apparently making ready to spring upon him. It was an awful moment. He was alone, and at once the thought flashed across his mind that a gang of burglars must be hidden around the office. He determined to sell his life dearly, if he must, and, drawing his revolver, he discharged it at the burglar beside the safe, and sent a ball whistling through his heart. A stifling cry of pain, and the thief, with a bound, leaped from his stooping posture and fell heavily on the floor, never to rise again. His three companions, seeing the tragic occurrence, leaped from their hiding-places, their faces being disguised by masks, and one of them, drawing a club, struck the brave watchman with it and knocked him down. Searing struggled with them for dear life, and twice again discharged his pistol, but the desperadoes at length disarmed him and got him completely in their power. Just as they were about to place a pair of manacles upon his wrists, a large dog, named Major, came bounding up the stairs, and seeing the situation leaped into the fray and fought furiously for his master. The struggle was a most desperate and sanguinary one; it was life for life, and for nearly a mortal hour it lasted, the men and the dog Major rolling up and down the office floor. The faithful dog did noble service, slashing about him with a will, and giving the burglars no quarter, until at length, feeling they had sufficient of his fangs, they fled in the most abject terror, leaving behind them the dead body of their miserable companion lying in his blood upon the floor. As may well be supposed, the watchman and dog were fairly fatigued, but, fearful lest another attack might be made before daybreak, they stood on guard. The thieves did not return, however. Later in the day, as soon as the community were astir, an alarm was given, and the route the thieves took was traced by a heavy trail of blood, which one of them, doubtless mortally wounded, marked in making his escape. About half a mile distant an old suit of clothes was discovered beside a pool of blood at the foot of a tree, where the bleeding burglar must have changed his apparel. On the railroad a valise was picked up containing a complete set of burglars' tools. The watchman did not identify any of the ruffians.

A Winter Indian Campaign.

Gen. Crook, Commander of the Department of the Platte, with headquarters at Omaha, says the Chicago Times, has for several months past foreshadowed an Indian war by the Sioux and other tribes the coming winter. In order to be properly prepared for the occasion, he has, during the past three months, collected upward of three hundred pack-jacks, with Mexican drivers. This new army of transportation has been in daily drill at Fort Russell, in Wyoming Territory, and has been a subject of much speculation, not only among citizens, but in military circles, as to the peculiar service in which they were to be employed, but the reticence, if not absolute refusal, of Gen. Crook to give any information on the subject, has caused many conjectures, chief among which was that the animals and their drivers were to be employed during the winter months transporting subsistence to the military camp at present in the Black Hills, in command of Capt. Pollock. A correspondent has unearthed the secret mission that this new transportation army is to be engaged in. As soon as the looked-for Indian outbreak or war commences, these pack-animals, being swift of foot, and less cumbersome than army-wagon transportation, are to be packed with supplies for a large body of cavalry that will be sent to chastise the Indians; each pack-animal, as soon as the pack-load has been used, is to be killed, the object of killing them being to prevent them falling into possession of the Indians. The cavalry are then to keep up a rapid pursuit of the Indians, and, when they can no longer obtain food, they are to kill a sufficient number of cavalry horses to furnish them with sustenance, the pursuit to be kept up until the warlike Indians are overtaken and thoroughly whipped. Gen. Crook made a brilliant record in Arizona as an Indian-fighter. Possessing a thorough knowledge of Indian character, he prefers to conduct a campaign against the red-skins in the winter months, when their facilities for subsisting off the game of the mountains and prairies is very limited, and when grass for their ponies cannot be had in sufficient quantities to make a successful or rapid retreat from the cavalry. The three companies of cavalry at present in the Black Hills are to be taken from there, and will form part of the army that is to take the war-path against the Indians.

Higher Railroad Freights.

During the past week a dark and threatening storm cloud has risen over the business and the financial interests of the West. On its black surface, drawn in the suggestive colors in which Mephisto delights to dwell, appears the form of Commodore Vanderbilt, his foot on the neck of poor John W. Garrett, of the Baltimore and Ohio, and his long, skinny fingers grasping at the splendid crop of the West. Avarice, ghastly and insatiable, gleams out in every feature; and yet a sardonic grin may be detected over the millions he hopes to extort from the hard earnings of the West by exorbitant freights on her products to the seaboard. It may be well to hint to this remorseless pirate, in the course of his life levying a more grinding tribute upon the commerce of the country than ever Lafitte did upon that of the Gulf of Mexico, that in the end his grasping avarice will be sure to defeat itself. For the last two years, through the competition of the Baltimore and Ohio railway, the people of the West have had reasonable freights. Under its healthy influence the Grangers went to sleep; but they are not dead, as Vanderbilt and his confederate sharks fondly hope. This proposed oppression will wake them into stronger and more desperate life than ever before. Five years ago they burnt corn within less than 200 miles of Chicago, because extortionate freights made it cheaper than coal. These railway magnates may as well know that the people will find a way to break through vested rights, backed even by a hundred Dartmouth College decisions, when exaction has reached the limit of endurance. Let them be wise while they may; be content with reasonable profits, and all will be well.

As these extortionate freights must virtually come in part out of every man's pocket at the West, be he banker, merchant, manufacturer, and even down to the hod-carrier—a multitude too numerous and too powerful to be successfully resisted—it is hoped the warning here given may have some effect even upon the selfish greed of Eastern railway managers.—Chicago Tribune.

The Williamson County (Ill.) Ku-Klux.

A letter from Marion, Williamson county, Ill., says: "The Circuit Court term, which commenced Oct. 14 and terminated the 21st, was the most important in its results ever held in this section of the country. A synopsis of what has been accomplished in the land of the vendetta is herewith appended. A nolle-pros. was entered in the case of Fielding Henderson, charged with the killing of Vincent Hinchcliffe, for lack of evidence. P. Henderson, convicted of malicious mischief, was sent to the Penitentiary for one year. Three charges of assault to kill Capt. George W. Sisney against Timothy Coyle were dismissed, the confession of Marshall Crain having exonerated him. Milton Baxter, charged with murdering Vincent Hinchcliffe, gave bail in the sum of $3,000, and had his case continued. In the case of the State vs. William J. Crain, alias "Big Jeff Crain," alias "Black Bill Crain," and Nash W. Crain, alias "Yellow Bill Crain," for the murder of William Spence, the first was granted a change of venue to Alexander county, and will be tried in January. "Yellow Bill" was admitted to bail in the sum of $5,000. Marshall Crain, who pleaded guilty to the murder of William Spence, and is now under sentence of death, has been very penitent, and his cries are constantly heard by those in proximity to his cell. He now entertains the hope that he can purify his soul by embracing religion. He held up with remarkable courage until Friday last, when he broke down completely, and confessed he was not only the assassin of William Spence but also of Capt. Sisney, and that he swore against Baker to save his own life. On the day mentioned he had George Sisney, Jr., called to his cell, and told him that he was the murderer of his father. He prostrated himself before the young man, and asked his forgiveness. Sisney replied that he could not forgive the murderer of his father, as forgiveness for such a crime would be unnatural. Crain remarked that he was not in his right mind when he committed the deed."

Whisky Made Old by Machinery.

There is a very nice case at present being argued before the Commissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington—one that possesses great interest to distillers. For a long time it has been quite an object to discover some way to age whisky—that is, to secure the evaporation of the fusel-oil in the natural whisky, so that the best grade of liquor could be reached. Under ordinary arrangements whisky requires an age of five years to lose all of its fusil-oil character. It has been discovered that the shipment of whisky by sea in a brief period accomplishes what time ordinarily is required to do. The constant motion imparted to the liquor by the motion of the ship has always had the effect of rapidly hastening the evaporation of the fusel oil, so that a brief voyage enhances the market value of whisky in a remarkable degree. An ingenious inventor, who has noted this effect, has patented a process for securing this motion to the whisky while lying at the distillery. He introduces a sort of churn into the barrels, leaves the bung out, while a bit of machinery propelled by steam animates the churns and imparts a continued stirring of the whisky. A short time of this process materially ages the whisky. Now, as the invention promises to be very popular among the distillers, a very nice question at once rose before the Internal Revenue people, and that was whether this process does not come under the head of rectifying. If it does, the whisky so "aged" by this rectifying process will have to go out on the market with a rectifier's stamp on it.

A Fatal Game of Croquet.

Mr. Reuben P. Benton and Mr. J. D. Strickland were engaged in a game of croquet on the grounds in the rear of the Warren and Venango passenger depot. Both gentlemen were on the most friendly terms, and they were in the habit of playing on these favorite grounds almost daily. Mr. Strickland made a misplay, and, as commonly occurs on such occasions among the boys, he peevishly attempted to throw his mallet after the ball. By some unforeseen chance the handle of the mallet caught in the sleeve of his coat, and it was hurled in the direction of his companion, striking him on the right temple, and felling him to the ground. The accident was witnessed by a number of bystanders, who, at the time, did not imagine that Mr. Benton was seriously injured. His prolonged insensibility, however, created considerable alarm, and restoratives were ineffectually applied. Mr. Strickland ran in haste for medical aid and a carriage, but before his return the unfortunate Benton was carried to his room in an insensible condition. Drs. Moody and Barr were on hand almost immediately upon his arrival, and made a searching examination of the wound. It appears that the blow, which was struck on the right temple, was not sufficient to cause a fracture of the skull at that point, but as is often the case, produced an effusion of blood at the base of the brain. Such an injury is almost inevitably fatal, and the patient lingered until 6 o'clock p. m., when he expired without recovering consciousness.—Titusville (Pa.) Herald.

Coffee.

The oldest mention of coffee that can anywhere be found does not go farther back than 800 years. Nobody knows when it was first used in the East. There is nothing to go upon, except a tradition that the angel Gabriel invented coffee for the especial behoof of Mahomet in his old age, to enable him to renew his youth, and be happy in his loves. Whether it had this effect we are not told, but it is to be supposed that Gabriel did his best for the prophet. In any case, it is certain that coffee is incomparable as a stimulant, and will even make up for the want of food. Rossini used to say that it could keep him up for a fortnight, the time he required for the composition of an opera. There is no other stimulant that can sustain such a pitch. Opium is wonderfully sustaining, but it has bad effects, and it tends too much to dreaminess, with a lack of concentration. Alcohol has a force of its own, as we all know; but it requires frequent renewal, and is too speedily followed by reaction and collapse. Tea comes nearest to the Arabian berry as a stimulant, but it often excites without invigorating. Coffee seems, while wakening up the brain, to make one, for the time at least, independent of food. It is, indeed, most enjoyed on short rations; and taken on a full stomach, as was pointed out, it neither pleases the palate, nor refreshes the system. Nor is it always quite harmless. Brillat Savarin gave up coffee because he found that it turned his head into a mill whirling round without ideas of grind. To some people it gives a shaking of the hands and a trembling of the knees. Stories are told of the people who have become cripples through excessive love of it; other stories of people who have become imbecile.

A Human Monster.

The Springfield (Mass.) Republican says: "LePage, the suspected murderer of Josie Longmaid, made another desperate effort to escape from the Concord Jail Saturday, and has been placed in irons. The accumulating evidence against him indicates that he is not only the guilty man, but is one of the most besotted monsters in the criminal record. According to his wife's account he used a mask when he attacked and outraged her sister in Canada five years ago. He was arrested, but escaped by desperate fighting while the officers were binding his legs, and for some time lived in the woods. Some two years ago he traveled fifty miles to the house of his cousin, and foully outraged her person, escaping with her horse. His wife says that he has made attempts to ravish his own daughter, fifteen years old, and that they have been afraid of their lives on account of his brutality. The murderer of the Ball girl is proved to have worn moccasins at the time of the crime, and it is known that LePage wore them that day, while it has been learned that a short time before the murder he inquired of a girl what road Miss Ball took in returning from school on Friday nights. The mask found near the body of Miss Ball has recently been examined, and proves to be fastened with birch withes, and withes were also found near the body of Miss Ball, while a birch withe was found tied around a pine tree close to where the body of the Longmaid girl lay. LePage is known to be an expert in making withes, even mending harness with them. A piece of cloth which looks as though bloody hands had been wiped on it has been found at LePage's house, and his wife says a shirt he wore on that day is missing. Three young girls have stated that they were chased in the woods by LePage previous to the Pembroke murder.

Nebraska's Big Corn Crop.

Lincoln (Neb.) correspondence of the Chicago Times: "The farmers of Nebraska are preparing to pull their coats to gather the heaviest corn crop ever raised in the State. The best of it stands from 10 to 15 feet high, and the ears measure from 12 to 18 inches in length. The yield will be all the way from 60 to 80 bushels per acre. A story, amply vouched for, came to me last week, that a farmer in Johnson county had gathered 108 bushels and 40 pounds from one acre of bottom land. The ground was accurately measured and the corn was accurately weighed by a committee of gentlemen appointed for that purpose. The measurement was made in a contest for a prize offered by an agricultural implement firm in Tecumseh, for the best acre of corn."

A Rhode Island Love Story.—At Pawtucket, R. I., Agnes Bosler hanged herself Wednesday evening. She and her sister lived in a tenement in Garden street, and worked in the Slater Cotton Mill. The sister was to be married to a young man with whom Agnes was deeply in love. The sisters reached home as usual on Tuesday evening, and Agnes went into the yard while the other was getting supper. After waiting a long while, the sister went to look for her, and found her suspended to a tree in the back yard. A corset lacing doubled two or three times had been used for a noose, and had cut deep into the flesh. From what was said by Agnes some days ago, it is informed that the act was prompted by jealousy.

Newspaper War.—There is a small newspaper war progressing in the Indian Territory. The laws regulating citizenship in that Territory forbid a citizen of the United States from holding property among the Indian natives, and, in accordance with this regulation, a Mr. Harris, who has been publishing a paper there, called the Indian Progress, is informed that his business must be discontinued. This order creates ill feeling, as it is claimed to be in the interest of a new sheet, shortly to be issued under the name of the Indian Herald, which will be owned by the Chief of the Cherokees, Mr. W. P. Ross, though really edited by white men.

By the recent death of Mr. David Steele, at Goffstown, N. H., Mr. Daniel Christie, of Dover, N. H., is left the sole survivor of the class of 1815 of Dartmouth College. The last reunion of the class occurred last summer, when Mr. Steele visited Mr. Christie.—New York Post.

BEAUTY FOR ASHES.

BY LOUISE CHANDLER MOULTON.

Beauty for ashes thou hast brought me, dear!
A time there was when all my soul lay waste,
As the earth dark before the dawning lies
Ere bursts the golden feet of morn make haste.

Like morn thou comest, gladness in thine eyes,
And gracious pity round thine ardent mouth—
Like rain of summer upon wasted lands,
Thy tender tears refreshed my spirit's drouth.

To-day is calm. Far off the tempest raves
That long ago swept dead men to the shore—
I can forget how those wild billows broke—
Against my hopes and me they break no more.

White butterflies flit shining in the sun—
Red roses burst to bloom upon the tree—
Birds call to birds till the glad day is done,
The day of beauty thou hast brought to me.

Shall I forget, O gentle heart and true,
How the fair dawn has risen on my night—
Turned dark to day all golden through and through—
From soil of grief won bloom of new delight?

Mushrooms and toadstools are very confusing objects in fields. It is important to know the difference between them, but it takes years to find out, and authorities differ. The only sure test is to eat one. If you die, it is a toadstool.

"We have a great many felt slippers, now-a-days," said a young lady to her octogenarian uncle. "You have, have you?" responded the old man, with great animation; "well, the slippers were felt in my young days, too, and no mistake."

We never knew a scolding person that was able to govern a family. What makes people scold? Because they cannot govern themselves. How can they govern others? Those who govern well, are generally calm. They are prompt and resolute, but steady and mild.

A tall, slim-waisted woman, aged 40, called at the Brighton House yesterday, and demanded to be registered as a voter. The boy looked the old man over, and after a long pause asked: "Well, was she as near-sighted then as she is now?"

RED LILIES.

Strike fuller chords, or let the music rest!
Of tender songs the world has yet no dearth,
Which scarce survive the moment of their birth:
Be thine in passionate cadences expressed,
And banish morning-glories from thy breast!
A purple dream-flower of the woods is worth
So little in the gardens of the earth;
If gift thou givest, give what we love best.
Since Life is sad with tears, and red with wrongs,
Let these red lilies typify thy songs,
If with full force thou would'st be comforted.
Since Life is red with wrongs, and wild with tears,
Oh move us, haunt us, kill our souls with fears,
And we will praise thee,—after thou art dead!

Troops Withdrawn from the Black Hills.

The military station at the Curtis Gulch, in the Black Hills, intended to keep the miners out, has been withdrawn. There is now neither let nor hindrance to those who are waiting to enter the hills. Daily it is reported there are parties leaving Cheyenne for the north, their destination the gold gulches. It would appear that now since the Indians would not accept a reasonable price for the Black Hills, they are liable to lose their hunting grounds and receive no compensation for them either.

THE CUBAN QUESTION.

Belligerent Rights of the Insurgents—What the President will Recommend in His Forthcoming Message.

The Washington correspondent of the Chicago Times writes: "The talk about the Cuban business has naturally awakened a desire to know what position will be assumed upon the matter by the President in his coming message to Congress. His views upon the subject and his often-expressed desire to see the belligerent rights of the Cuban insurgents recognized are sufficiently well known. However, it is not generally known how intensely the President's mind is worked up on this subject, and how vigorously he proposes to carry out his plans for the adjustment of the troubled affairs in the West India islands. In his coming message to Congress it is his intention to more fully discuss this matter than he has ever done before. He will try to make more clear his intentions when he advocated the acquisition of San Domingo. He has not hitherto cared to defend himself in this matter, but now, for some reason of his own, he desires the country to accept his explanation of the attempt to gain possession of this island. These reasons he gives with his customary brevity. He says that primarily his great object in acquiring San Domingo was to secure for the former slaves of the South a place of refuge where they could find labor and shelter when they were oppressed in the South. The possession of this island alone, he thinks, would have done more to settle the troubled condition of the South than all the legislation in the world. The colored people would have had a place to fly to if the Southern people should maltreat them. The former would then be driven to treat the negroes kindly from the fact of the fear of losing their valuable services in the field. The labor question would do much, the President thinks, to bring the South to the proper consideration of the rights of the colored people. Another reason is to be given for the purchase of San Domingo. The President thinks that if we had secured the possession of the island we would have been able to raise there all the products which we now buy of Cuba. Here is where he thinks the whole case lies in a nutshell. He is of the opinion that without her trade with the United States Spain could not sustain her war in Cuba upon the insurgents, and that really the United States is made to carry the burden of the expense of this cruel war. This the President proposed to remedy, and his idea is that the moment we arrive at a point when we can do away with the product of Cuba, then will the war in Cuba be forced to a close. Two great points are involved in the President's West India scheme; one to secure a home for the negro, and thereby tranquilize the South, and the other to secure the freedom of Cuba. This he will most urgently bring forward in his annual message. He expresses in private conversation the strongest opinion in relation to the matter, so that all his friends are convinced that he is unusually in earnest about it. A strong effort will be made to secure the recognition of the belligerent rights of the Cubans before the 1st of next January. Several sensational versions of the Cuban cause have been sent over the country, abounding in just enough fact to give color to their assertions. The plain matter of the whole business is that the President is going to make one more vigorous effort to carry out his pet ideas in West India, and if Congress refuses to aid him then he will see what he can do upon his own responsibility. In the absence of Congress the President has the right to recognize the national existence of the Cuban insurgents. It can also be stated upon the best authority that Secretary Fish has been brought over and made to sympathize with the President in his idea that something ought be done. Mr. Fish heretofore has been the great stumbling-block. If he indorses a movement on the part of this government looking to the recognition of the Cuban belligerents, the matter is as good as done. It is only a question of time for the rest.

Chinese Outrages.

In view of the latest reports from China, one cannot well restrain a certain feeling of regret that the British government had not been compelled, from the force of circumstances and the duty it owed to itself and other civilized communities, to teach the pig-tailed sons of the sun and moon a lesson in manners, if not in international equity. The Shanghai correspondent of the London Daily News reports the behavior of the natives as becoming every day more and more scandalous. Within the last two months the grossest cases of premeditated and unwarranted assault have been committed upon unprotected and inoffensive foreigners. During the month of July last four persons attached to the British Embassy were maltreated in a village about forty miles from Pekin. A few days afterward Dr. Bushel and his wife were stoned by a Chinese mob in the capital itself; and M. Lensey, the Secretary of the Russian Embassy, was stunned by a brick and thrown from his horse while riding along the public street. Mr. and Mrs. Barrowdale, a Protestant clergyman and his wife, were assaulted near Tientsin and bespattered with mud. Upon another occasion 2,000 Chinese troops, on being disembarked at Shanghai, relieved their exuberant feelings by rushing about, in all directions, insulting and threatening all the foreigners they met. During the melee an American gentleman and his wife rode up and endeavored to thread their way through the street, but the soldiers would not let them pass, finishing up their diabolical cowardice by beating them about the head with their pikes. The Chinese population are everywhere being stirred up against foreigners, and hostile placards, approved by the governors, are posted up on the walls every night. These placards invariably denounce foreigners as being the cause of epidemics, inundations, fires, etc., and declare that they are worthy of eternal punishment.

The Slaughter of the Innocents.

Five years of age is the dividing line between the junior and the elder dead. Half the yearly deaths in New York are of children under 5. There are 120,000 children in New York; of these as many die as of the 1,000,000 grown inhabitants. The mortality of one-tenth the whole populace, and that the helpless tenth, is equal to the nine-tenths remaining. Well does the physician say that if such mortality existed among sheep the country would be alarmed. It is not so with the little children, of whom three-fourths of the one-half we have cited die under 1 year old. The nursery, therefore, and the mother must be at fault.—Sanitarian Magazine.

NEW INDICATION OF DEATH.—A medical practitioner proposes, as a method to ascertain death, to inject a drop of ammonia beneath the skin, when, if there be life, a red spot appears, but if death, no effect is produced.

LIGHT AS A MECHANICAL MOTOR.—Wm. Crookes, F. R. S., has recently performed several experiments with an apparatus called the "radiometer," which prove that light, apart from heat, may be employed as a mechanical motor.

A PAPER SUBSTITUTE FOR LEATHER.—An Australian chemist subjects the so-called parchment paper to a process which renders it pliable and supple, and exactly similar to leather in color and gloss. It may be used as a substitute for, and is especially appropriate for book-binding, as it resists wear, does not soil, and is impervious to wet.

TO RESTORE GOLD OR SILVER LACE.—When gold or silver lace happens to be tarnished, the best liquor that can be used for restoring its luster is spirits of wine; it should be warmed before it is applied to the tarnished spot. This application will preserve the color of the silk or embroidery.

STAMPING INK.—An excellent stamping ink that dries rapidly and is free from grease may be cheaply prepared, according to Muller, by dissolving one part of crystallized, so-called, red aniline violet in 30 parts of alcohol, and adding 30 parts of glycerine to the solution. This colored liquid is poured upon the cushion and rubbed with a brush.

HOW TO MAKE SAFES SAFE.—The following hints for the use of safes, and of what should be put in them, are vouched for by good authority. Avoid fancy colored inks, as they are more liable to be obliterated by heat when the safe is under fire. The black inks are better. Lead pencil will stand the heat better than either, even when the paper is black. Do not put the most valuable account books at the sides of the safe, as the heat coming from the outside will affect them first. Crowd the books from the sides to the center of the safe for the purpose of making them tight together, as in this condition they will stand the heat much longer. Wood drawers are preferable to iron for cash boxes, and for small valuable papers, as wood is a non-conductor of heat and iron a good conductor. Never use in a safe a leather wallet as a receptacle for valuable papers, as boiling water, heated 212 degrees, will crisp and curl it, convert it into a gluey substance and destroy the papers. When a safe has been under fire send for an expert to open it.

An "Honorable" Forger.

Mr. Lucius W. Pond, of Worcester, Mass., who prefixed Honorable to his name, has been lamented for some weeks past as a prominent addition to the list of unaccountable disappearances. His absence is now regretted by the large number of persons whom he swindled. His custom was to remove by some chemical preparation all the writing on notes in his possession except the signatures, and fill them up with increased amounts. The microscope has now revealed the trickery that was perpetrated, suspicion having been previously excited by people finding their names affixed to notes which they were certain they never engaged to pay. Out of notes to the amount of $30,000, only one genuine one has been found. One, curiously enough, had been altered from $1,000 to $500. It is now known that two or three years ago a man visited Worcester for the sake of selling an acid to remove blots and wrong figures from account books. Bank men at once felt that it might be used for nefarious purposes. It also proved to be so exceedingly volatile that it was not deemed profitable to keep it on sale. It is conjectured that Pond must have bought some of the stuff. It has been supposed that he jumped, or was thrown from a Long Island Sound steamer, and some still think that such was his fate. There are rumors, however, that he is at Hamilton, Ont., and is insane.

Mr. Pond was a prominent man in Worcester, and was something of a politician, having served at least one term in the Massachusetts Senate. He was an extensive manufacturer, and had been esteemed as a man of integrity.

Cool Capt. Rehlinder.

One of the essentials to the success of a good seaman is presence of mind, such as the Captain of a Russian man-of-war recently exhibited. His frigate, the Olaf, had accompanied the yacht of the Czarewitch to Copenhagen, and was lying at anchor among numerous other ships in the harbor when a fire was discovered in a coal cellar below, which joined on the powder magazine. The fire had made such headway that it seemed impossible to check it before it would reach the magazine, in which w.s stored an unusual large quantity of cartridges and loose powder. Their explosion would destroy not only the Olaf, but also a number of the vessels in her vicinity, and, possibly, a portion of the city. As the only means of averting a catastrophe the Captain instantly resolved to sink the ship. He sent away the crew with such valuable property as was portable, with the aid of the carpenters and engineers stove a hole in the vessel, and left her to sink. This she did before the fire reached the magazine. The vessel was raised the following day but slightly damaged. A court-martial commended the conduct of the officer, and the Emperor acknowledged his promptness, coolness, and skill by making him his aid-de-camp, one of the highest honors conferred on Russian naval officers.

CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED.

SCHENCK'S PULMONIC SYRUP,
SCHENCK'S SEA WEED TONIC,
SCHENCK'S MANDRAKE PILLS,

Are the only medicines that will cure Pulmonary Consumption.

Frequently medicines that will stop a cough will occasion the death of the patient; they lock up the liver, stop the circulation of the blood, hemorrhage follows, and, in fact, they clog the action of the very organs that caused the cough.

Liver Complaint and Dyspepsia are the causes of two-thirds of the cases of Consumption. Many persons complain of a dull pain in the side, constipation, coated tongue, pain in the shoulder-blade, feelings of drowsiness and restlessness, the food lying heavily on the stomach, accompanied with acidity and belching up of wind.

These symptoms usually originate from a disordered condition of the stomach or a torpid liver.

Persons so affected, if they take one or two heavy colds, and if the cough in these cases be suddenly checked, will find the stomach and liver clogged, remaining torpid and inactive, and almost before they are aware the lungs are a mass of sores and ulcerated, the result of which is death.

Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup is an expectorant which does not contain opium or anything calculated to check a cough suddenly.

Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic dissolves the food, mixes with the gastric juices of the stomach, aids digestion, and creates a ravenous appetite.

When the bowels are costive, skin sallow, or the symptoms otherwise of a bilious tendency, Schenck's Mandrake Pills are required.

These medicines are prepared only by

NEW and BEAUTIFUL INSTRUMENT.
THE Piano-Harp
CABINET ORGAN.
An exquisite combination adding to the capacity of the organ much of that of the piano-forte and harp. With a double-reed organ, complete and perfect in every respect, is combined a new instrument, the PIANO-HARP, the tones of which are produced by steel tongues or bars, rigidly set in steel plates affixed to a sounding-box, and struck by hammers, as in the piano-forte. The tones are of a pure, silvery, bell-like quality, very beautiful in combination or alternation with the organ tones. The organ may be used alone, and is in every respect as complete and perfect an organ as without the PIANO-HARP; the latter may be used separately or in combination with any or all the stops of the organ, to which it adds greatly in vivacity, life and variety, adapting it to a much wider range of music. Upon its invention and introduction, about a year since, this new instrument was received with so much favor that the demand greatly exceeded the manufacturers' utmost ability to supply; so that they have had no occasion to advertise it extensively. Having now perfected facilities for a large supply, they offer it to the public with confidence.

The Wonders of Modern Chemistry.
Sarsaparillian and Its Associates.
Changes as Seen and Felt as They Daily Occur after Using a Few Doses of
DR. RADWAY'S
Sarsaparillian
Resolvent,
THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.

1. Good spirits, disappearance of weakness, languor, melancholy; increase and hardness of flesh and muscles, etc.

2. Strength increases, appetite improves, relish for food, no more sour eructations or waterbrash, good digestion, calm and undisturbed sleep, awaken fresh and vigorous.

3. Disappearance of spots, blotches, pimples; the skin looks clear and healthy, the urine changed from its turbid and cloudy appearance to a clear sherry or amber color; water passes freely from the bladder through the urethra without pain or scalding, little or no sediment; no pain or weakness.

4. Marked diminution of quantity and frequency of involuntary weakening discharges (if afflicted that way), with certainty of permanent cure. Increased strength exhibited in the secreting glands, and functional harmony restored to the several organs.

5. Yellow tinge on the white of the eyes and the swarthy, saffron appearance of the skin changed to a clear, lively and healthy color.

6. Those suffering from weak or ulcerated lungs or tubercles will realize great benefit in expectorating freely the tough phlegm or mucous from the lungs, air cells, bronchi or windpipe, throat or head; diminishing of the frequency of cough; general increase of strength throughout the system; stoppage of night sweats and pains and feeling of weakness around the ankles, legs, shoulders, etc.; cessation of cold and chills, sense of suffocation; hard breathing and paroxysms of cough on lying down or arising in the morning. All these distressing symptoms gradually and surely disappear.

7. As day after day the SARSAPARILLIAN is taken, new signs of returning health will appear, as the blood improves in strength and purity, disease will diminish, and all foreign and impure deposits, nodes, tumors, cancers, hard lumps, etc., be resolved away and the unsound made sound and healthy; ulcers, fever sores, syphilitic sores, chronic skin diseases gradually disappear.

8. In cases where the system has been salivated, and Mercury, Quicksilver, Corrosive Sublimate, (the principal constituent in the advertised Sarsaparillas, associated in some cases with Hyd. of Potassa) have accumulated and become deposited in the bones, joints, etc., causing caries of the bones, rickets, spinal curvatures, contortions, white swellings, varicose veins, etc., the SARSAPARILLIAN will resolve away these deposits and exterminate the virus of the disease from the system.

9. If those who are taking these medicines for the cure of Chronic, Scrofulous or Syphilitic diseases, however slow may be the cure, "feel better," and find their general health improving, their flesh and weight increasing or even keeping its own, it is a sure sign that the cure is progressing. In these diseases the patient either gets better or worse—the virus of the disease is not inactive; if not arrested and driven from the blood, it will spread and continue to undermine the constitution. As soon as the SARSAPARILLIAN makes the patient "feel better," every hour you will grow better and increase in health, strength and flesh.

The great power of this remedy is in diseases that threaten death—as in Consumption of the Lungs and Tuberculous Phthisis, Scrofula, Syphiloid Diseases, Wasting, Degeneration, and Ulceration of the Kidneys, Diabetes, Stoppage of Water (instantaneous relief afforded where catheters have to be used, thus doing away with the painful operation of using these instruments), dissolving stone in the bladder, and in all cases of Inflammation of the Bladder and Kidneys, in Chronic cases of Leucorrhea and Uterine diseases.

In tumors, nodes, hard lumps and syphiloid ulcers; in dropsy and venereal sore throat, ulcers, and in tubercles of the lungs; in gout, dyspepsia, rheumatism, rickets; in mercurial deposits—it is in these terrible forms of disease, where the human body has become a complete wreck, and where every hour of existence is torture, wherein this great remedy challenges the astonishment and admiration of the sick. It is in such cases, where all the pleasures of existence appear cut off from the unfortunate, and by its wonderful, almost supernatural agency, it restores the hopeless to a new life and new existence where this great remedy stands alone in its might and power.

In the ordinary skin diseases that every one is more or less troubled with, a few doses will in most cases, and a few bottles in the more aggravated forms, work a permanent cure.

Those afflicted with chronic diseases should purchase a package containing one dozen bottles. Price $10 per dozen, or $5 per half dozen bottles, or $1 per bottle. Sold by druggists.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN INDIANA, NOV. 11 1875

We have a little wee cock that climbs on the chicken coop and wants to crow for Berks County, Pennsylvania—1,000 Democratic gain. You can bet on Berks.

The Ligonier Banner and Plymouth Democrat, have been saying hard things about Murray, of the Goshen Democrat. Well, all we know about Murray is that he worked well and ably in the last canvass.

The Tammany ring of New York has been thoroughly cleaned out.—Allah be praised. If there is anything we love to see it is to observe Democrats going against corrupt rings and swindlers and unlike Republicans bringing them to punishment.

The principal reason why we don't have a larger majority in New York, is because the Democratic governor there has been exposing and bringing to punishment a canal ring, and the Republican rings fearing a similar result, went straight against him.

The breaking up of the corrupt Tammany organization of New York City will prove a blessing to the Democratic party of the country. It was through this powerful and secret agency that the scheming politicians of New York State sought to control the National Democracy in their own interests.

Not so Bad.

In our last we thought things political had taken a terrible turn, but later returns show the Democracy in good shape after all. The gratifying news comes that the Democracy have carried New York by nearly, if not quite, Sixteen thousand majority, and that Wisconsin has likely gone Democratic. When it is considered what Hartranft has a chance to do, and in all probably has done in the way of corruption in that state, and that the Republicans lack six thousand votes of having a majority for their governor in Massachusetts, there is little to brag of left to the Republicans. We can claim New York as an offset to Pennsylvania, Mississippi to Massachusetts, and Maryland to Minnesota, leaving Virginia to balance New Jersey, and if we would carry still further the comparsion, we can point to Detroit to equalize the Chicago triumph, which was not a political contest of parties, either. On the whole, it was nearer a drawnbattle than any thing else.

The Republican Triumph.

It may not be without interest to make a slight investigation of the great "republican triumph," and see just where we stand. Let us suppose that a president was to be elected this fall. The states can be tabulated as folllows

Democratic		Republican
Alabama	10	Illinois	12
Arkansas	6	Iowa	11
California	6	Kansas	5
Connecticut	6	Maine	7
Delaware	3	Massachusetts	13
Georgia	11	Michigan	11
Indiana	15	Minnesota	5
Kentucky	12	Nebraska	3
Louisiana	8	Nevada	3
Maryland	8	Ohio	22
Mississippi	8	Pennsylvania	29
Missouri	15	Rhode Island	4
New York	35	South Carolina	7
North Carolina	10	Vermont	5
Oregon	3
Tennessee	12
Texas	8
Virginia	11
West Virginia	5
	192		146

Doubtful.

Florida	4
New Hampshire	5
New Jersey	9
Wisconsin	10
	28

The above is an extremely liberal estimate, but against the democratic column the republican and doubtful together make but 174, while of those states classified as doubtful, Wisconsin is supposed to have been carried by the democrats and the others there are really democratic states. In glancing over the democratic column, it is difficult to select any state which the republicans could carry to-day. But we could afford to give them Indiana, which comes, perhaps, the nearest of any in its column to being doubtful, in exchange for any two of the doubtful states or New Jersey or Wisconsin alone. It would seem that the republican party will need several more great triumphs befor it can elect a president.

From Angola.

ANGOLA, Nov. 8th 1875.

—There is a big scandal on hand in Angola, and so is Bill Chittenden.

—W. H. Donally is in town yet.

—G. Mugg will soon open up a first-class drinking saloon first door north of Bill Chitz' bon ton. Drinks should become cheap where there is so much competition. Some do threaten to sell all kind of drinks for 5cts a glass, but I expect they will reduce the size of their glasses, and that is useless.

—Mr. Vandercock's new iron fence is grand and just what many of us want. It costs but a trifle more than a first-class wooden fence.

—From the number of boys seen going out with guns this morning (Sunday I should guess there was no Sunday-school. Probably the reason is, the M. E. Church is in a dilapidated condition. The fixtures are all taken out and have it nearly ready to move off.

—The damage done to the Disciple church by the tornado has been repaired, and the lumber sheds are going up in a more substantial manner than before.

—Henry Twichell is the fattest man in town.

—J. W. Woodhull is having an iron fence in front of his new residence. He is a man of good taste.

Three engines belonging to the Ft. W. J. & S. R. R. lie here over Sunday. Four engines here this afternoon.

—Rev. Aylesworth and Dell Day have traded property. Neither of them got rich in the trade.

—H. Merry's children are sick with diphtheria. Sickness continues more than usual here.

—Some ten or dozen of our braves started last Sunday for the western wilds of Ohio, on a hunting expidition, and have all returned without getting a shot or even seeing any. They say there are about twenty men for every deer any probably more. That is dear hunting in fact.

ANGOLA.

GARRET ITEMS.

—Farmers, husk your corn and sell it to our teamsters to feed their horses.

—Work is going on here every day Sunday not excepted.

—Still the rows continue. Let them fight.

—Those Columbus roosters had better look a little ouet when they take their departure from this place, for we have men here of pugilistic form.

—Our new livery men send out boss rigs,

—The man who was reported dead here last Saturday, was not killed but was badly pounded

—Mr. J. R. Pronty has opened a new billiard hall, having purchased two of the best make of tables, and has fitted things up in good style.

—Three new brick dwelling houses are being erected north of the Rail Road

—Mr. Fordyce is living in his new dwelling house, on Cowan-st.

—Last Monday night about eight o'clock a fire broke out in the blacksmith shop connected with the R. R. buildings and the building was consumed in a few minutes, the natives were thunderstruck and went wild for a spell, but they finally became more calm, and aided in saving other buildings.

—Mr. Malony, editor of the "News" returned last monday after a short visit to Michigan, bringing with him a lovely bride. We wish the new couple a long and happy future. The Presbyterian congregration have sold their church to the Lutherans, and the former will erect a new one in a short time.

The hog cholera is increasing slowly Several parties in town have lost large porkers. This disease will injure the sale of pork.

The Cantata of Queen Esther will be produced here in full costume by the local talent of this place in a few weeks. It is a grand thing when properly rendered, and we believe we have the talent to do it.

A. S. Wells has been appointed deputy Marshal, and will act as night police. It will be his special duty to watch such persons as may be out late at night under suspicious curcumstances.

The social connected with the Presbyterian church will be entertained by Mrs S. B. Miller on next Wednesday afternoon and evening. A general invitation is extended.

W. Tollerton, Esq., of Chicago, agent for Coleman's Pneumatic Gas Machine is in the city making arrangements with our Commissioners to furnish the new jail building with the above gas and fixtures. We think the Commissioners could not do better.

Judge Anthony, of Valparaiso, and Dr. Kelly, of Syracuse, were in town last Tuesday. One for the former and two for the latter, is the way things stood according to Mr. Pedro, except the attempt to catch a train going east to reach Syracuse.

Mr. Lordier has arrived from Fort Wayne with a fine stock of Boots and Shoes, and will be found in the building near the bank, where he will be pleased to see those wanting goods in his line.

A gentleman drove a sorrowful looking horse into town, and stopping in front of the post office, he requested a small boy to hold him a moment. "Hold him!" exclaimed the boy; "just lean him up against the post, that will hold him."

Closing lecture of a series delivered at the M. E. church by Rev. Mr. Welsh, for the last few weeks, on the Book of Esther, will be given one week from next Sunday evening.

It has not been long since Fort Wayne was a quiet, peaceful city, but alas, things have sadly changed of late. Eleven murderers now await in durance vile, a trial by jury, and there are a many more waiting to take their places as soon as disposed of.

The population of Auburn ain't gaining, oh, no. Ed. Bodine and wife a little boy baby; Christ Baker and lady ditto; and several others whose names we failed to hear.

This truthful observation is from the Columbia City "Post:" "Much of the stringency felt in the collection of debts and transaction of business can be relieved by everyone making an earnest effort to pay. We know of individuals who can pay at any time, but who refuse to do so when they have money in their pockets."

One hundred and fifty-four men, women and children from Minnesota landed at Tallahassee, Florida, last week There is no mistake about this being the grandest country in the world, and with such people as the above to fill it up and developed its resources will surely make it the most desirable place to enjoy this fitful dream of life.

We need Moody and Sanky right away. We would just like to see them wrestle with those who are popping away in the woods all around the city on Sunday. There may be a necessity in the order of thing for a modrn Sodom and Gomorrah, and we are afraid a few of these devilish fellows will get us the job. We hope the boys will let up a little and go to Sunday School.

Our public schools will open again next Monday, if the seats are received and put in by that time. Three of the rooms on the second floor in Ensley's Block are to be used, which will be presided over by Miss Mahuren, Miss Thomas and the Principal.

A primary school will be opened in Stoughdecker's house on South Van Buren street, with Miss Ada Coder as teacher. The room over the Granger store will also be used for one of the intermediate departments in charge of Miss Coder.

We are glad to learn that our friend Hon. J. C. Shutt, formerly a member of the House, from Allen county, has located at Butler purchasing the popular hotel there known as the Butler House which he will shape up in good style. Mr. Shutt and his brother William Shutt of this county will engage in the sale of Agricultural implements, and for that purpose will erect a large and commodious building next spring. We wish these gentlemen every success.

We have a few suggestions to make to local correspondents: Write as plainly as possible, and doubly so when writing a proper name. Do as little gratuitous advertising as possible. It is our source of revenue and business men here pay for such notices. We cannot charge one and dead-head the other. Write as many jokes as you want to but do not do so for the purpose of offending anyone, and do not make the paper a means for revenge.

Give us gossipy, spicy items, practical humorous and poetical, and especially the incidents and accidents of the day.

We take the following from the New Castle "Courier," relative to Mr. Hazzard of our bank: "On the 31st of December, 1862, George Hazzard, of this city, received a wound in the left hip at the battle of Stone River. The ball has never been extracted, and Mr. Hazzard, during the past summer, has suffered from the effects of the wound to such an extent as to be required to go upon crutches almost continually. He has finally concluded to submit to a surgical operation, with the hope of obtaining relief, and we are informed that Dr. Mussy, of Cincinnati, and Dr Isaac Mendenhall, of this place, will perform the operation at Mr. Hazzard,s residence within the next few weeks.

Now we've got you. We mean the school teachers and those person who are always giving out difficult sums and laugh when nobody can do them. Here get fourteen sheets of paper and nine lead pencils, and do the following, send in your answers and we'll see how many are right. There has been but one person yet successful in working this out, and he now imagines he is hunting squirrels on Sunday. Here it is:

A and B go to a butcher's and buy between them eight pounds of meat, which the butcher values at ten cents a pound and for which he therefore wants eight dollars. Now, A takes fifty pounds of meat and B thirty, and upon examination they agree that A's meat is worth one half a cent a pound more than B's. Query. How much did each pay the butcher.

An attempt to fire the wooden block was made last Sabbath evening about nine o'clock. Mrs. Williams discovered the light of a fire in rear of the Swineford Corner and Mr. Williams found a quantity of chips and shavings saturated with coal oil. It was making great headway when discovered, and in a few minutes more would have been beyond control. Another fire was also started in a shed in a barrel but was discovered and extinguished at the same time. The entire block would certainly have been consumed, had the attempt succeeded. It was the work of an incendiary.

What are we going to do about protection against fire. Shall we get an engine, or shall we lie supinely on our backs and see our property destroyed. For heaven's sake, let us show some little intelligence in this matter, and do something that will give us some little show against the fire demon,

MOST DESTRUCTIVE FIRE!

Our Woolen Mills in Ashes!

At last we are called upon to chronicle a most terrible disaster to our town. Our large Woolen Mills were completely destroyed by fire last Saturday evening About five o'clock a fire was discovered in the north west corner of the garret floor, and when first seen could have been extinguished with the assistance of a ladder and a few buckets of water. But we did not have the ladders, and some fifteen thousand dollars worth of property was destroyed. But our loss in this fire is not to be estimated in dollars It brought a fine little trade to our place that will now be cut off, as the present stockholders do not feel able to re-build It was a manufactory, and this industry needs to be added to, instead of being reduced to contribute to the permanent prosperity of our place. As far as we can ascertain the following list comprises the stockholders and the amount of their stock:

C. Sheets	$2,000
S. Ketzner	1,800
T. D. Gross	1,500
S. W. Sprott	1,500
Buss Estate	2,200
John Brandon	1,500
Hugh Davis	1,500
Several others	1,500

The assets of the company will aggregate about $5,000. The liabilities are considerable but no approximate estimate can now be made.

Thus we loose one of our greatest industries for the want of some means to protect ourselves against the ravages of fire. We hope our citizens will wake up to their interests and take some action in this matter.

F-IAR! F-IAR!

Si. Lock's force pump held out during the fire.

The factory walls still stand, but are well racked.

The ladies done more work than some men. Mrs. Porter done her share with anyone at the fire.

The billiard saloon did'nt catch fire. We heard a lady say there was a man on every shingle.

The machinery was brought out in a careful manner and broke up when setting it down.

If some men in town had the mumps every time we had a fire, they would'nt work so hard, with their mouth.

Mr. Cox, living east of town, got badly hurt at the fire, last Saturday afternoon, through the carelessness of some "brave" lad in the second story.

Lee Lanning came near getting about ten foot of burning cornish on his bare head. He felt the one end of it to his greatest satisfaction.

Mother, may I go to the fire?
Yes, my darling daughter,
But be careful of your pin-back, dea.
And keep out of the way of water,

The boiler and engine of the factory together with other material in the shed adjoining, were saved through the exertions of several men. We are glad to know that we have a few such in town.

How nice it is for a man to be calm and not the least bit excitable at fire.—One fellow bounced at a peck of potatoes, on the floor, picked them up one at a time, and went back of the Court House and set on them.

Someone noticed smoke ascending from one corner of the old jail. A large crowd rush that way. It was a fire for certain. Dr. Fox's pipe was holding him on a chair, and there was fire in the bowl.

We commend the coolness of Miss Wheeler, one of the employes at the factory, to several of those fellows who threw machinery out of the windows on the crowd below. When told that the factory was on fire she stopped her loom and took the material out of it as quietly and yet as quickly as was possible.

Several of our citizens worked unceasingly to save the engine-house and succeeded, while a large number stood by and looked on as if enjoying the scene. Shame on a man that will stand by and see his neighbor's property destroyed, without an effort to save it.

BUTLER ITEMS.

BUTLER, Nov. 9th, 1875.

—A change in the Time Table of the Eel River Road is rumored.

—Typhoid Fever is around. Children especially are attacked with it.

—Eli Bryan, a farmer residing near town, lost two fingers in a clover-huller this forenoon.

—Jerome Devers received a fine grey cat by D. E. R. & Ill. R. R., from the west on Monday. Donor unknown.

—The "Drunkards Warning," was re-acted on the streets today by one of our smartest citizens.

—Rev. N. T. Peddycord was called to the death-bed of his father last week. The deceased spent a portion of last winter here with his son and I presume many of our people were acquainted with him. He was a resident of Kosciusko County, this state.

—The Dramatic club acted their Drama two nights to large houses, and with good success. They were applauded several times, particularly on Tableaux scenes which they gave at the close of each act. A part of the house came down very forcibly at one time; that was when too many tried to stand on the same seat and the seat could not stand it.

"LENA."

So superior in workmanship and style, is the stock displayed in our house, that competition with other Clothiers is out of the question. Our trade and customers acknowledge this fact, that our clothes fit better, are much cheaper, and in every way equal to the best custom work, really making us competititors of Merchant Tailors. Especial attention is called to the nobby line of Worsted Diagonal Overcoats, which we are selling to the "toniest" trade in the city. Study your own interest and deal with

We have not time nor space to mention the performance given by the Butler Dramatic Association last evening as we would like to, but can hearty say that they all performed well and our citizens, who attended, were perfectly satisfied.

Beter gloves and mittens was never brought to Auburn that is found at T. B. Totten's.

The present law requires that unclaimed witness fees remaining it the Clerk; office one year, shall be paid over to the Treasury and go into the school funds and when a "Deputy Attorney General" comes arond looking up these fees, tries to collect fees which have accumulated since the first of January last, and demands 30 per cent in fees for making collection, some people think the D. A. G. blessed with an amount of cheek which would give him the first premium in any fair contest.—[Waterloo Press.

We endorse the above, and think the Attorney General has but little to do in sending a man around here to swindle the people out of a revenue that properly belongs to the school Fund. The attempt of trying to collect fines &c, accumulated during the present year when the law provides that they shall be reported at the end of each year, is in itself sufficient evidence that there is a scheme for swindling, outside of the legitimate discharge of this duy. We hope the Attorney General will call off his dogs.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1875.

GOSSIP OF THE DAY.

DR. LINDERMAN, Director of the United States Mint, estimates the gold and silver production of the country next year at one hundred millions of dollars.

MRS. ABRAHAM LINCOLN, who is now staying with her sister in Springfield, Ill., takes occasional short walks on the streets, and is said to be gradually recovering from her mental malady.

JOHN MANNING, the well-known New York advertising agent, has failed. Among his creditors are a large number of Western newspapers. The Chicago Tribune loses $1,170 by the failure, and the Times $456.

THE famous diamonds presented to Minnie Sherman Fitch by the Khedive of Egypt remain in the New York Custom-House. Mrs. Fitch says it would be altogether too dangerous to remove them while burglars are, no doubt, on the qui vive to capture hem.

PROF. TICE, the great weather prophet of St. Louis, had a narrow escape from death at Washington, last week. He was taken with inflammation of the lungs from exposure in saving a life in the North river, and took too large a dose of an opiate to relieve pain. The physicians at one time despaired of saving him.

HERE is a warning to hot-tempered people to place a curb on their angry passions. A Mr. Drury, of Oberlin, Ohio, got into a wrangle with a couple of mischievous boys, and during the quarrel fell dead in his tracks. The Coroner's jury rendered a verdict that he died from the effects of excitement and passion produced by the altercation.

GEN. JOHN MORGAN, who has been living at the Upper Cascades, in Oregon, since the war, died there in September, under the alias of John Pendleton. The latter was the name of his mother, who lived in Oregon, and thither he escaped after being wounded—not killed—in Tennessee, so long ago. This is a recent newspaper report. Believe it?

DR. BEARD, the English physician, has taken the trouble to show that brains are conducive to longevity. Intellectual force, he says, is but a form of vital force. The Doctor did not say, because it was unnecessary, that good morals are even more conducive to long life than brains; and that the people without brains frequently have a large supply of morals.

NO ONE is expected to doubt the following o'er-true tale, reported by the New York World: "A Brooklyn woman was badly frightened by a cat some months previous to the birth of her child. That child proved to be a girl, and is now 18 years of age and married. During her girlhood she gave no evidence of being affected by her mother's fright, excepting, indeed, a propensity to chase mice and occasionally to sit on the backyard fence and yowl a little on moonlight nights; but, strange to relate, since the birth of her own baby she always lifts it out of its crib by the back of its neck with her teeth."

L. D. SINE is a name familiar to newspaper readers in the West as the proprietor of a gift enterprise in Cincinnati, and as an extensive advertiser of his scheme. We read in the Cincinnati Enquirer that he has become a hopeless imbecile, and has had a guardian appointed to look after his property, which amounts to several hundred thousand dollars. Sine's history is a very remarkable one. He lost his sight through an explosion of gunpowder while a printer in the Cincinnati Gazette office. He was carefully nursed through the sufferings which followed at his boarding-house by a young lady who subsequently became his wife. After that he sold cigars and other things to printers, and, being largely patronized through fraternal sympathy, obtained a start in life which he made the most of, being to-day a wealthy man. But now to his physical blindness has been added a mental darkness that makes the old man truly an object of sympathy.

THE Singer will case makes a curious revelation of domestic manners. It lifts the roof on a harem. Mr. Isaac M. Singer, the celebrated sewing-machine millionaire, left $13,000,000 and twenty-six children—two having died—by five different women. He got divorced from two of them and was not married to the one whom he left the largest portion of his property, though he publicly acknowledged her as his wife. The striking thing about the will is that he acknowledges all his illegitimate children, calls them all by name, and makes provision for all of them. There is no shirking of responsibility, no mealy-mouthed subterfuge, no polite prevarication, but an honest confession of relations which most men would have shrunk from acknowledging before folks. Yet this modern polygamist was not only a successful inventor and business man, but a church-goer and exemplary Christian so far as the world knew.

CHARLES READE, in one of his novels, revealed to the outside world the horrors of the "separate and silent system" of treatment in vogue in many of the English prisons a few years ago. It may not be generally known that the same inhuman scenes so graphically depicted by Reade are being enacted in some of the penal establishments of this country. In the Auburn (N. Y.) Penitentiary, for instance, the dark-cell treatment is in full blast, and, judging from an account of the mode in which it is applied, which we find in an Eastern paper, it is not a whit less terrible and inhuman than that which the English novelist felt called upon to expose and denounce so vehemently in his own country. In the Auburn prison the dark cell is literally a living tomb, being a stone box three feet wide, six feet long and six feet high. The floor is formed of a single stone slab, the ceiling of a slab, and the walls of solid masonry. There are two doors, with no openings. A gill of water and four ounces of bread form the allowance for twenty-four hours. Such a horrible mode of treatment may be imagined, and we are not astonished at the statement that the reports of the prison show that more than one-half of the insane cases at Auburn have resulted from such punishment.

SENATOR HAMLIN, of Maine, is going to do the best he can toward escaping from the odium he has suffered ever since that amendment of his to the postal law was passed which doubles the rates of postage upon transient newspapers. It is already announced that he will take an early opportunity in the Senate to explain his connection with the matter, and will insist that he has been greatly misrepresented. The way of it was this: The express companies were lobbying to get the laws amended so that packages weighing as much as four pounds could not longer be carried in the mails, on the pleas that the mails were overburdened with that class of matter, and that the government was carrying it at a loss. The department showed that the former claim was not true, but could not deny that the latter objection was well founded, and so proposed to checkmate the express companies by not reducing the limit of weight, but doubling the rates of postage on such packages, and "through an inadvertance," for which Mr. Hamlin claims that he was not responsible, the change was made to apply to newspapers as well. It is announced, by the way, that the doubling of rates on packages has not decreased their number, while it has largely increased the revenue, and the postage on newspapers will probably be put back to the old figures by the next Congress.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

AMASA WALKER, a distinguished American political economist and formerly Professor of that science in Amherst College, died at Boston, last week, aged 76 years....A sad accident is reported from Unadilla, N. Y. While a party of six persons were boating on the Susquehanna river the boat upset, and all were precipitated into the water. Maurice Goodrich and his wife, of Worcester, N. Y., and Mr. Morehouse and his wife, of Unadilla, were drowned. The Goodriches were on their wedding trip.

National Bank has negotiated with the burglars who robbed the bank four months ago and recovered $50,000 in securities on payment of $10,000 in cash....Le Page, the Frenchman indicted for the murder of Josie Longmaid, at Pembroke, N. H., has been identified as the man seen in the bushes near the road the girl passed over. There is no doubt of his guilt.

THERE are five murderers in the jail of New York city under sentence of death....A locomotive boiler on the Lehigh Valley railroad exploded near Bound Brook, N. J., the other day, with frightful effect. Five persons were killed and about twenty wounded, several of whom will probably die.

SAMUEL T. ABBOTT, of Ossipee, N. H., recently murdered his wife by severing her head with an ax. He then hung himself, but was cut down before life was extinct, and is now in jail....The First National Bank of Pittston, Pa., was entered by burglars, last week, and robbed of $40,000 in bonds and money....The Massasoit Mills, at Fall River, Mass., have been destroyed by fire. Loss, $150,000.

THE Beecher scandal has been suddenly revived by the New York and Brooklyn Association of Congregational pastors, who have appointed a committee to investigate charges against Mr. Beecher.

THE WEST.

NEW and rich gold diggings have been discovered in the Segre de Christo Mountains, in Colorado, and miners are flocking thither in great numbers....A severe fight between United States troops and Cheyenne Indians is reported to have recently took place near Fort Hayes. The troops twice attacked the Indians and were each time repulsed with serious loss. ....A large section of the Northwest was visited by a severe storm on the 29th ult. It was accompanied by wind, hail, rain, lightning, and in some sections by snow, and played havoc with buildings, fences and forests....Mrs. Abraham Lincoln has recovered from her late aberration of mind, and is now considered entirely free from her affliction. She is living with her sister, in Springfield, Ill.... The murder of an old Italian and three boys in Denver, Col., and the finding of the dead bodies, in an advanced state of putrefaction, in the cellar of a dilapidated shanty, has been mentioned in these columns. A Denver dispatch announces the arrest of three of the participants in the butchery, who have made a confession, but claim that they were unwilling accessories to the horrid deed. They say that one Galliod, a Mexican, was the murderer, and that the killing was done in broad daylight. Their story, if true, stamps it as one of the most fiendish and inhuman butcheries of the age. Two of the murderers and victims were playing cards, and the old man was dealing, when Galliod came up behind him, drew his head back and cut his throat, the blood spurting over the cards and table. The boys resisted and were cut and stabbed. Galliod finished the old man, and soon made an end to the boys. The murderers drank the blood of their victims, and tried to make the boy, whom they had forced to play the harp for them while their butchery was going on, to drink likewise, but he was too sick at the awful sight. After the first victims were dead and had been robbed, the two other boys came in and were killed in the same manner. The robbers got $1,200 or $1,400, principally in gold, for the murder.

NEWS has reached Lawrence, Kansas, of an uprising of the Osage Indians to resist the authority of Agent Gibson. The latter's life was in danger, and troops have been ordered to the Agency for his protection....Hon. James Otis, Mayor of San Francisco, died last week.... Chas. Patterson killed R. W. Porter, a herder, near Sidney, Neb., last week, for which act he was taken out of jail by a party of lynchers and hanged on a telegraph pole. Patterson was cut down by the Sheriff in time to save his life; but the mob were determined, and in a second attempt were more successful, as his corpse was found one morning on a rude scaffold.

THE National Gold Bank and Trust Company, of San Francisco, has suspended. The officers claim that the bank can pay everything, and will resume shortly.

JOSEPH N. FREMONT, late Deputy Collector of Revenue at St. Louis, has pleaded guilty to the indictment against him. [illegible], an indicted storekeeper, also pleads guilty. The backbone of the St. Louis whisky ring is thoroughly broken.

A HORRIBLE murder and suicide is reported from Kokomo, Ind. David Robinson, while laboring under a temporary fit of insanity, attempted the murder of his entire family. First by shooting and killing one of his children, then firing at his wife, but missing her, and she making her escape gave the alarm. Robinson then shot and killed a second child and wounded a third in the face who made its escape. Not yet satisfied, Robinson nearly severed one of the dead children's heads from its body, and left the house. His body was subsequently found lying near the railroad track, where he had committed suicide.

A BOMBSHELL has fallen into the camp of the St. Louis whisky ring, and they are utterly demoralized. The grand jury has returned indictments against William McKee, late of the Globe newspaper; Constantine Maguire, ex-Collector of Revenue; Orville Grant, brother of the President; Gen. Babcock, President Grant's Private Secretary; United States Marshal Newcomb; Judge Chester H. Krum, ex-United States District Attorney; and William Patrick, also ex-United States District Attorney. The testimony implicating these parties in revenue frauds is said to be positive. Other prominent St. Louisans are being investigated, and will probably be indicted.

A LARGE part of the business center of Sherman, Texas, has been destroyed by fire.

Two severe earthquake shocks were felt in Atlanta, Ga., and the surrounding country on the 2d inst. There was a rumbling sound, with a waving motion, which shook the earth and houses, causing some alarm.

The bonds included in this call are of the act of June 30, 1864....A delegation of local preachers called upon President Grant, the other day, and urged him not to abandon the Indian peace policy. The President informed them that he did not propose changing his Indian policy, but that he does propose in future to make the army responsible for the distribution of Indian supplies. VOX POPULI.

The November Elections—Verdict of the People in the Various States—A General Summary of the Result.

Elections were held in eleven States on Tuesday, Nov. 2, as follows: Illinois, Kansas, Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Mississippi, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Virginia and Wisconsin. We present below a brief summary of the result in the several States:

NEW YORK.

In New York the entire Democratic ticket, as given below, was elected by 10,000 to 15,000 majority:

Secretary of State—John Bigelow.
Comptroller—Lucius Robinson.
Treasurer—Charles N. Ross.
Attorney-General—Charles S. Fairchild.
Engineer and Surveyor—J. D. Van Buren.
Canal Commissioner—Chris. A. Walrath.
Prison Inspector—Rodney R. Crowley.

The Republicans have secured a majority in both branches of the Legislature.

In the city of New York, the entire Tammany ticket was defeated by an alliance of Republicans and anti-Tammany Democrats. John Morrissey, anti-Tammany, was elected to the State Senate over John Fox, in the Fourth District, comprising the lower section of the city. The Brooklyn ring, headed by "Boss" McLaughlin, was also routed—the Republican ticket, aided by the honest Democrats, being elected by a large majority, although the Democratic State ticket carried the city by over 6,000. In New York and Brooklyn, as in Chicago, it was a bad day for rings.

PENNSYLVANIA.

The Republican State ticket, headed by John F. Hartranft (present incumbent), is elected in Pennsylvania by about 20,000 majority.

MASSACHUSETTS.

In Massachusetts the entire Republican State ticket is elected by a majority of 6,000. The following are the newly-elected State officials:

Governor—Alex. H. Rice.
Lieutenant-Governor—Horatio G. Knight.
Secretary—Henry B. Pierce.
Treasurer—Charles Endicott.
Auditor—Julius L. Clarke.
Attorney-General—Charles R. Train.
Congress, one year—William W. Crapo.

The Legislature is largely Republican.

MINNESOTA.

The Republicans carried Minnesota by a majority of about 10,000. Appended is a list of the officers elected:

Governor—John S. Pillsbury.
Lieutenant-Governor—John B. Wakefield.
Secretary—John S. Irgens.
Auditor—O. P. Whitcomb.
Treasurer—William Pfeonder.
Chief-Justice—James Gilfillan.
Attorney-General—George P. Wilson.
Clerk of the Supreme Court—Samuel H. Nichols.
Railroad Commissioner—Wm. R. Marshall.

WISCONSIN.

The vote in Wisconsin is very close, especially on Governor, and it will probably require the official count to decide who is elected. The Democrats elect all the other State officers, as follows:

Lieutenant-Governor—Charles D. Parker.
Secretary—Peter Doyle.
Treasurer—Ferdinand Kuehn.
Attorney-General—A. Scott Sloan.
Superintendent of Public Instruction—Edward Searing.

MARYLAND.

In this State all the candidates on the Democratic ticket, as printed below, were elected by a large majority:

Governor—John Lee Carroll.
Comptroller—Levin Woodford.
Attorney-General—Charles J. M. Gwynn.

NEW JERSEY.

The election in New Jersey was for members of the Senate and Assembly. The Republicans were successful in securing a majority of both.

MISSISSIPPI.

In Mississippi the people elected a State Treasurer, members of the Forty-fourth Congress and a State Legislature. The Democratic candidate for Treasurer and all the Democratic candidates for Congress, with possibly one exception, are elected. Both branches of the Legislature are also Democratic, which insures a Democratic United States Senator to succeed James L. Alcorn.

KANSAS.

In Kansas the electors chose a State Legislature and county officers. The Republicans elected more than two-thirds of the members of the Legislature, and the county officers generally are of the same persuasion.

VIRGINIA.

The election in Virginia was also for members of the Legislature. A majority of those chosen are Democrats.

ILLINOIS.

The election in Illinois was for county and municipal officers, and only a local interest was taken in the contest, except in a few counties and in the large cities. In the city of Chicago there was one of the most exciting campaigns in the whole history of municipal elections. It was a fight between honesty on the one side, and corruption and rascality on the other, and honesty achieved a most signal victory. The Democrats proper made no nominations. The Republicans placed in the field a ticket made up of respectable, trustworthy citizens. Arrayed against them were a lot of unprincipled scalawags, placed in nomination by a combination of foreigners, ward bummers and the riff-raff and offscourings of society in general, not one of the candidates being a native-born American. This ticket was supported and voted for by all the bad elements of society; the other by the opposite elements—the merchants, business-men, tax-payers, and honest men of all classes. It was a bitter, determined fight, the very large vote cast—over 57,000—attesting the interest taken in it. The Republican ticket, which was supported by large numbers of Democrats, was elected by a handsome majority, the disreputables were routed horse, foot and dragoons, and Chicago is saved from the threatened danger of a second era of Tweedism.

Death of Uri Carruth.

A dispatch from Vineland, N. J., says: Mr. Uri Carruth, editor of the Vineland Independent, who was shot by Mr. Landis on the 19th of last March and has since carried the bullet in his head, died at 8 o'clock this morning. After the shooting Landis was arrested and taken to Bridgeton Jail, where he was kept until about three months ago, when he was released on $50,000 bail. Since his release Mr. Landis and his attorney have visited Carruth in Clinton, N. Y., where he had gone for his health, to try and bring about a settlement. Landis offered Carruth $5,000 in cash and about 380 acres of land, which was indignantly refused. Since his return from his visit to Clinton, Carruth has been much troubled in regard to his pecuniary affairs and the probable condition of his family in case of his death. He thought seriously at one time of instituting a civil suit for damages, he being of a firm opinion that Landis would not settle unless compelled to do so. A third attempt to settle with Carruth at Clinton having failed, some mutual friends have been endeavoring to bring about a settlement since his return from the North, and had progressed so far that a few days since the sum of $12,500 in cash and securities had been agreed upon and the papers only awaited the signature of Landis, but he insisted that Carruth should leave the State before the settlement was perfected.

Carruth has been failing ever since his return from the North, and has been unable to attend to any business, his mind being constantly excited in regard to a settlement. Up to within a week or ten days it was thought that if his mind was relieved of that burden he would yet recover. At daybreak he would anxiously inquire, "Can you keep me till night so we can fix those papers?" and at night, "You must keep me till morning so we can settle that matter." His friends did not let him know that a settlement could be brought about only by his removal from the State. He has been confined to his bed for some days back. Last evening he ate his supper in a reclining position, feeling, to all appearances, as he had for some days past. About three or four hours later he was taken with a convulsion, followed by a violent fit of vomiting. He then sank into a stupor, from which he was relieved by death.

Landis was delivered by his bondsmen to the authorities, who rearrested him and took him to Bridgeton.

A Hard Ride from Ocean to Ocean.

Wednesday afternoon, as the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy train was about to pull out from the transfer for the East, an Omaha gentleman observed two men seated on, or rather clinging to, the trucks under the dining car. One of them, apprehensive of being informed on, entreated him, "For God's sake, don't give us away." The gentleman questioned them, and learned that they had ridden in this manner all the way from San Francisco, over 2,000 miles. The train started up and stopped at the depot in Council Bluffs, when the two "beats," supposing that the train had been halted in order to put them off, skipped out. The conductor, when told of the fact, remarked that "that was nothing. He had had six on the trucks and six on the roof at one time." It seems that the amount of stolen riding obtained at so perilous a risk is greater than any one has any idea of, and the wonder is that so few are killed. As a rule, they generally ride on the trucks during the day time and at night crawl up on top of the car. If they are discovered and put off, they wait for the next train and resume their ride, many of them going from ocean to ocean in this manner. The Union and Central Pacific railroads have a monopoly on this sort of travel, as well as on every other kind, to and from the Pacific coast. Many of the persons who thus steal a ride from the Pacific coast went there "well-heeled," in search of a "Big Bonanza," traveling in first-class style in Pullman sleepers, and enjoying three square meals a day, and, becoming busted, they take their chances in getting back home in this way. Such is life. Winter, however, generally puts an end to this, although once in a while a fellow is taken out from the tool-box, under a car, half-frozen to death.—Omaha Bee.

Deadly Colors.

According to a report by Prof. Gintl, it appears that the public is exposed to a new source of poisoning from the use of arsenical glycerine and the arseniate of alumina as mordants. He states that these substances are now coming largely into use, especially among the English and Alsatian manufacturers of cotton printed goods, as substitutes for albumen, which is more expensive, some substances being required to fix especially the aniline colors, which are now so much in demand. Such goods have recently been sold in Austria, and especially in Prague, containing, according to Prof. Gintl, as much as fifteen to twenty-five grains of arsenious acid, in the form of arseniate of alumina, to the yard; and this is by no means an insoluble salt, but one more poisonous than the much abused green arsenic colors. The more suspicious fabrics are stated to be those of a violet ground with white figures, and those printed in brownish yellow or reddish brown designs, and which are sold at low prices.

The Hog Cholera.

The reports of the hog cholera, which is taking off thousands of swine in Indiana, Missouri, Illinois and other Western States, are a serious matter. Our Western farmers, most of whom have a large surplus of corn, were expecting to put much of it into pork this fall. Should this fatal hog disease extend and continue its ravages, their expectations in this respect would be sadly disappointed, and they would be obliged to sell their corn at the prevailing low prices. We trust, however, that the fatal disease will not become either as general or as fatal as is apprehended.—Chicago Journal.

IN Mower county, Minn., an impudent dog went to sleep under the tumbling-rod of a threshing machine and was caught by the tail and wound up till the tail gave way and came out.

Fever Infection.

Men of science speak of epidemic waves, and of scarlet fever being communicated by the few drops of milk which you pour into your tea, or the cream diffused in a dish of strawberries. On a late occasion, at a fashionable dinner party in London, as many as eight or ten guests, and seven members of the household, took scarlet fever. Obviously, the infection must have been caught at the dinner party; but how was the puzzling matter of inquiry, for no one in the family of the host was known to have been affected with the disorder. Was the disease brought to the house by a waiter? Was it conveyed in the table-linen from the washerwoman? Was it somehow, incorporated in the cream that had been used in the dessert? An investigation on these and other points, as we understand, was made, but not with any satisfactory result. The cream was thought to be the most likely vehicle of infection; but how could any one be certain on the point? The cream employed in fashionable dessert in London is possibly made up of half a dozen creams from as many dairies, and inquiry ends only in vague conjecture. Rather a hazardous thing, one would say, going out to dinner where you may run the chance of being killed in a manner so very mysterious. People, in their innocence, are not aware of the manner in which contagious diseases may be communicated by public conveyances, by articles of dress, by dwellings, by the very atmosphere. We have just heard an instance of the communication of scarlet fever by means of a "kist," the name usually given in Scotland to a servant's trunk. A servant girl in Morayshire fell ill with scarlet fever and died. Her kist, a painted wooden box, containing all her worldly goods, her later clothing included, was sent home to her relations, and lay for some weeks at a station on the Speyside railway before an opportunity occurred for removing it by a cart to her mother's cottage among the hills. During this interval the station-master's children, in romping about, conducted their gambols on the kist, which was a repository of contagion, and in due course were struck down with scarlet fever. At length the fatal kist was conveyed to its destination, and the contents were dispersed among friends and neighbors. The donations were kindly meant, but they proved fatal. No precautions had been taken to disinfect the articles, the result being that wherever the clothes of the deceased girl were taken in, scarlet fever found its victims. For several months the fever raged, until the wave of its infection was expended. Now ensued a remarkable event. The outbreak proved to be an opposing barrier to the spread of a more virulent type of scarlatina advancing from another quarter at a later period of the year. On reaching the former scene of the disease, it was arrested for want of material to feed upon, a second attack being very unusual.—Chambers' Journal.

Eggs for Burns.

The white of an egg has proved of late the most efficacious remedy for burns. Seven or eight successive applications of this substance soothe the pain and effectually exclude the burn from the air. This simple remedy seems preferable to collodion or even cotton. Extraordinary stories are told of the healing properties of a new oil which is easily made from the yolks of hens' eggs. The eggs are first boiled hard, the yolks are then removed, crushed and placed over a fire, where they are carefully stirred until the whole substance is just on the point of catching fire, when the oil separates and may be poured off. It is in general use among the colonists of Southern Russia as a means of curing cuts, bruises and scratches.—Boston Journal of Chemistry.

WILLIAM AND HATTIE.—William L. Terry, of Wayne county, Iowa, advertised that his wife, Hattie L., had left his bed and board. She retorted with an advertisement to the effect that she did not want any of his bed or board, or to be trusted on his account, or to bear his name a moment longer than might be necessary, or to ask anything from him except that he mind his own business. She does not consider herself the wife of "any such a pouting, scolding, deceitful woman-killer." It is easy to see why she left William.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Around the Farm.

We have said repeatedly that the best way of treating the cabbage worm is to leave it in the hands of its parasite.—Rural Herald.

Eastern farmers gladly purchase toads at good prices. They find them the best and cheapest destroyers of insects which infest their plants.

The writer once lost a large jar of butter down a well where it remained for three years. On cleaning the well the butter was found to be perfectly good, except an inch on the top. Good butter will keep any length of time when completely excluded from the air, in a cool place.—Prairie Farmer.

Buy of and sell to men whom you know personally, or who are engaged in regular, permanent business, whenever this can be done. Other things being equal, buy and sell in the market nearest home. —Western Rural.

It is just as easy to build a stack of wheat as to load a wagon. While building the butt of the stack the heart must be kept full. When you begin to take it in keep it fuller, so that the stack will never take rain. If the heart is not kept full it is very easy to build a stack that looks well, but it will not save. I have built hundreds of stacks, and never had one spoil, while some of my neighbors who have much nicer looking stacks always have more or less spoiled wheat.

The Rural New Yorker says the cause of most poor land and bad farming is that farmers too often sell off all the valuable parts of the crops and do not return enough to the soil. Very good farmers sell the grain and keep the straw to make manure. But manure made of straw is of little value, either for nitrogen or phosphates, and unless these are supplied the soil must deteriorate. Clover furnishes nitrogen, but the phosphates have to come from some other source, generally by purchasing commercial fertilizers.

The Kansas Farmer says a breeder of hogs in that State took 100 hogs and put 50 in pens and fed corn, and 50 and fed wheat, with the following result: Those with corn made 11 pounds per bushel; the 50 with wheat made 17 pounds of good solid pork per bushel of wheat. The wheat was ground like meal, boiling water poured over it, and then let stand 42 hours.

Mr. J. L. Perkins, of Harrison county, Iowa—who thinks his locality has "the greatest soil in the world for potatoes, when the season is just right, as this has been in all respects"—sends the New York Tribune a statement of the yield of several varieties from one pound of seed of each. The tubers were cut into single eyes, and planted three feet apart each way in rich, loamy land, containing a large proportion of decayed vegetable matter. No manure was used either before or after planting.

According to Mr. P.'s experience, Snowflake is the best potato he has ever grown. With him it is a splendid cropper, very uniform in size, perfectly smooth, peels without waste, cooks through evenly, is very white and floury, and, in short, has no defect whatever.

About the House.

To destroy ants, wrap a piece of gum camphor in cloth or paper to keep it from dissolving, and place it in or about your cupboard or sugar, and it will drive away those pests.

Putting cream on onions instead of butter (or even a little milk if one has no cream) removes much of the strong flavor and renders them less likely to affect weak stomachs unpleasantly.

Ginger Snaps.—One-quarter of a pound of sugar, one-quarter of a pound of butter, the same of lard; beat them well together; one pint of molasses, two tablespoonsful of ginger, one teaspoonful of soda dissolved in a wine-glass of milk, flour sufficient to roll them thin, and bake quick.

Cold Custard.—Take three pints of milk, stir in three or four tablespoonsful of rennet wine, stir it and strain it through a sieve into dishes; keep it in a warm place until it hardens. For sauce, take half a pint of cream, add a few spoonsful of white wine and sugar; grate nutmeg over both sauce and custard.

Hasty Pudding.—Boil some water and thicken with flour, as you would for thin starch; sift some coarse meal and stir in until it is quite thick; keep it boiling all the time you are putting in the meal, which must be done gradually; salt to the taste; boil it well; put it in a bowl and turn out. Eat with cream and molasses.

To Make Unfermented Cakes.—Soak one pint of oat meal for ten or twelve hours in one pint of sour buttermilk. Then rub one quarter of an ounce of carbonate of soda, and a little salt, into one pound of flour, and mix with the oat meal. Roll it out to any thickness required, and bake in a moderate oven.

Slops from the kitchen can be run upon a heap of dirt, which may be occasionally shovelled over and changed after it has absorbed a good deal of filth. It is then well worth removing as a fertilizer. It is better than running underground into a pit where the odors generally find some way of escape, often into the kitchen, on account of some defect or stoppage of the pipe.

An egg is generally called fresh when it has been laid only one or two days in summer, and two to six in winter. The shell being porous, the water in the interior evaporates and leaves a cavity of greater or less extent. The yolk of the egg sinks, too, as may be easily seen by holding it toward a candle or the sun, and when shaken a slight shock is felt if he egg is not fresh.

The Home Doctor.

DYSPEPSIA.

Here are two remedies for dyspepsia, said by those who "have tried them" to be infallible: First, eat onions. Second, take two parts of well-dried and pounded pods of red pepper, mixed with one part of ground mustard, and sift it over everything you eat or drink.

MUSTARD PLASTERS.

It is stated that in making a mustard plaster, no water whatever should be used, but the mustard mixed with the white of an egg; the result will be a plaster that will "draw" perfectly, but will not produce a blister even upon the skin of an infant, no matter how long it is allowed to remain upon the part.

TO CURE A WART.

Procure the best quality of sulphuric acid; drop a little on the wart, and let it remain as long as you have leisure to hold your hand still, say a couple of hours. Repeat once or twice, and your wart will never trouble you again. This is a sure cure, and entirely painless.

REMEMBER THIS.

In cases of a sudden jar, knock, or jam of the hand or fingers, immediately after the blow press the injured part with the uninjured hand, say between the thumb and fore-finger, and gradually let up on it. It will nearly always remove the pain, and generally any swelling that might occur under the circumstances.

CURE FOR RINGWORM.

A simple and harmless application, said unfailingly to cure this troublesome eruption, is found by washing with a solution made from the root of the common narrow-leafed dock, which belongs to the botanical genus Rumex. Use vinegar as the solvent.

CURING CHILBLAINS.

A writer in the Household recommends taking muriatic acid and diluting it with water. Try it on your nails; if it does not turn the nail yellow it is not too strong. Apply repeatedly with a small swab. It is a sure and safe remedy, and the writer has tried it on himself and others with marked success. Be sure not to apply too strong, but dilute it just enough not to turn the nail yellow.

WORTH KNOWING.

Every little while we read of one who has stuck a rusty nail in his foot or some other portion of his person, and lockjaw has resulted therefrom. All such wounds can be healed without any fatal consequences attending them. The remedy is simple—it is only to smoke such wound, or any wound or bruise that is inflamed, with burning wool or woolen cloth. Twenty minutes in the smoke of wool will take pain out of the worst case of inflammation caused by any wound we ever saw.

HOW TO CURE A SORE THROAT.

"One who has tried it" communicates the following sensible item about curing sore throat: Let each one of your half million readers buy at any drug store one ounce of camphorated oil and five cents worth of chloride of potash. Whenever any soreness appears in the throat, put the potash in half a tumbler of water, and with it gargle the throat thoroughly; then rub the neck thoroughly with the camphorated oil at night before going to bed, and also pin around the throat a small strip of woolen flannel. This is a simple, cheap and sure remedy.

CURE FOR WHOOPING-COUGH.

One of the London journals contains a statement by Dr. Berry of his successful treatment of uncomplicated whooping cough with dilute nitric acid, in doses of from five to fifteen minims, according to age, with simple sirup, given every three or four hours, alleviating the cough and spasm, and apparently cutting short the disease. During an epidemic of the disorder he prescribed this frequently, and with very satisfactory results. He offers no suggestion as to the operation of the remedy, but he believes its action to be that of a tonic, but its refrigerating properties are not to be lost sight of. In all the cases treated, he has, of course, paid attention to the state of the digestive organs, and in such cases as have required it, he has given an aperient combined with an alterative.

Kentuckians Getting Married in Indiana.

"Stop that boat," was the cry on the Louisville wharf at 10 o'clock Thursday night, but the cry came too late, for the ferry-boat had cut loose from her fastenings, and was steaming proudly up the river, fully a hundred feet from the Kentucky shore. The cry came from two men who had hotly chased a young man and his sweetheart from a back county in the State to the river and there lost them by being about two minutes too late, for they were safe in the boat, sitting side by side each other in a carriage. The horses panted, and the lovers sighed and congratulated themselves on their escape from the dark and bloody ground and their cruel parents. When the boat landed at our wharf the horses were given the reins, the whip applied, and off dashed the bridal party for Charlestown, the county seat. The pursuers were too close to tarry at Jeffersonville. A brisk, rapid drive of an hour and fifteen minutes brought them to Charlestown. County Clerk Ingram was aroused from pleasant dreams, and the marriage license obtained. Next, Elder Howe was awakened from his slumbers, and in less time than it takes to tell it Mr. Okana Owens was the true and lawful husband of Miss L. Jessie Parrent. After spending a pleasant hour the newly-married pair left Charlestown, returned through Jeffersonville slower than they went up, much less disturbed in mind, and as happy as a newly-elected country Squire. How those Kentucky lovers do laugh at locksmiths.—Jeffersonville Ledger.

England's Rulers.

Commit the following to memory, and you will have at your "tongue's end" the names of the monarchs of England, from the time of the conquest down to the present date:

First, William the Norman, then Henry, his son,
Henry, Stephen and Henry, then Richard and John,
Next, Henry the Third; Edwards, one, two and three;
And again, after Richard, three Henrys we see.
Two Edwards, third Richard, if rightly I guess,
Two Henrys, sixth Edward, Queen Mary and Bess;
Then Jamie, the Scot; then Charles whom they slew;
Then followed Cromwell, another Charles, too,
Next, James, called the second, ascended the throne;
Then William and Mary, together came on,
Till Anne, Georges four and fourth William all past,
God sent them Victoria, the youngest and last.

INDIANA ITEMS.

A few days ago a Harrison county man attempted to show a boy just the way to feed a threshing-machine. He will, as soon as the stump gets well, learn to write left-handed.

Rev. Martin Houser died at the residence of George Fry, in Hope, Bartholomew county, in the seventy-sixth year of his age. He was the founder of that village and of the Moravian congregation there.

At Fort Wayne, last Sunday night, about 1 o'clock, thieves went to the barn of Joseph Waggerman, and stole a valuable team of horses, after which they set fire to the stable, which was totally destroyed. No insurance. No clew to the rascals.

While a young man named Martin was quarrying a stone, near Charlestown, last Saturday, a piece of rock gave way, and striking a crowbar, projected one end of it into his face with such force as to break his cheekbone and destroy his right eye.

A Madisonian has undertaken, on a wager, the task of eating thirty quails in thirty days. This is claimed to be a very difficult feat, yet persons with delicate stomachs have accomplished it without difficulty—providing the cooking and seasoning of the quails was not tampered with.

Dickson Smith, a boy of 16, shot J. M. Myers, a brakeman on the I., P. and C. railroad, near Tipton, the other day. The train stopped for water, and Myers entered the premises of Smith's father for the purpose of stealing turnips, and was in the act when shot in the arm and leg.

The trial of Young, an accomplice of Beckentheimer in the murder of Miss Ingram, by the administering of cantharides, at Warsaw, has resulted in his acquittal. This verdict is very unsatisfactory to the people, and has caused some excitement, as Beckentheimer was sentenced for life, while Young is equally guilty, as he bought the drug.

A jury in a probate case at Union City, after being out eighteen hours, brought in a verdict of guilty, but on polling the jury one member admitted he had been starved out. They were sent out again, and after another protracted conference returned a verdict of not guilty, the eleven stubborn men having yielded to reason or hunger.

Burglars made a general raid in Indianapolis the other night. Over twenty houses in one neighborhood were entered, and from all goods of considerable value were taken—in the aggregate, a large amount. The safe of the American Express Company at Thorntown was entered also, and $900 worth of jewelry belonging to O. N. Ridgeway abstracted.

Indiana postal affairs: Offices Discontinued—Mount Liberty, Brown county; Rock Island, Perry county. Postmasters Appointed—Clouser's Mills, Montgomery county, Nathan Lewis; Elizaville, Boone county, William Byers; Templeton, Benton county, O. H. Hayes; Upland, Grant county, Jacob Bugher; Wild Cat, Carroll county, John W. Penn.

Noah Bishop killed his divorced wife, a handsome mulatto woman, at Mount Vernon the other day after the close of an exciting religious meeting. Bishop became angry when he saw his former wife sitting with another man, to whom she was engaged to be married, and struck her on the head with an ax. He escaped, but it is thought he will be lynched if caught.

There is a novel suit in progress in Lafayette. A young vender of newspapers so far forgot the amenities of the profession as to charge that a fellow-dealer in current news was in the habit of picking up cigar stumps in the streets and using them, thus injuring his standing in the fraternity to which he belonged. Thereupon the father of the injured party brought suit, and will endeavor to recover damages.

While six men were carefully watching a store in Indianapolis, one night last week, having received information of a contemplated raid by burglars, a pair of sharp robbers succeeded in entering the store, and carried off a considerable sum of money. The thieves were captured after leaving the place, by the police, the private watchmen remaining in ignorance of the burglary until morning.

The village of New Haven, six miles east of Fort Wayne, was the scene of a brutal fight and murder one night last week. Two canal-boat crews, who have been quarreling every time they met, got to fighting in earnest with knives, pistols and clubs. During the melee Albert Cronkhert was shot in the region of the heart, killing him instantly. As many of the crowd as could be caught have been arrested, while the officers are after the remainder. Cronkhert is a cousin to the man of the same name murdered in Fort Wayne by the negro Wall, who is now in jail awaiting trial.

The editor of the North Vernon Plaindealer has been visiting the gold fields in the neighborhood of Butlerville. He found several men at work, under the direction of a Mr. Cleaver, of Ohio, digging in what was claimed to be a "crevice." Mr. Cleaver was of the opinion that the so-called quartz found there had been thrown up by volcanic action, but that the gold had been melted by the intense heat, and would be found further down. Prof. Borden, however, predicts that the diggers will soon reach bed rock. He thinks the few grains of gold found in the sand in the beds of the streams are from the glacial drift.

A special from Terre Haute gives some interesting information about a sanguinary family. The dispatch says: "James Martin, a farm-laborer, 20 years old, came to town to see his mother, and got into an altercation with his sister's husband, John Seader, by whom he was stabbed fatally. He was chased by Seader and Seader's father, who had a gun. He climbed the fence of his mother's house, and fell near by, expiring immediately. The murderers ran to the river and escaped in a skiff. Mrs. Seader's first husband, named Miller, killed his father, who was named Iroven, about three years ago. Old Seader, last winter, while intoxicated, shot this same son, and was imprisoned for it some time."

The Wayne County Register says: "Lavina Huddleston died last week at Hopewell, at the advanced age of 99 years, lacking about two months. This remarkable woman was an older sister of David and Nathaniel Huddleston's father, and was born on the island of Nantucket in 1777. She saw the first ship launched that was ever built at New Bedford. She removed to Union county, in this State, about sixty years ago, where she remained about ten years, since which time she has been a resident of Henry county. This lady was never married, but has resided with her nephew, James Macy, for about fifty years. We are told that she kept her mental powers very well until the close of her life."

LYNCH LAW.

Graphic Account of the Lynching of the Courtwright Brothers, at Stevens' Point, Wis.

The Milwaukee Journal of Commerce gives the following particulars of the lynching of Amos and Isaiah Courtwright, at Stevens' Point, Wis., for the murder of Sheriff Baker:

There were forty men, disguised, that formed the lynchers. The two old men were armed to the teeth with revolvers and knives, waiting for the death-struggle which they knew would come some day before they reached the bar of the court which could only slightly punish them for their great crime. The old men expected that an attempt would be made to lynch them, and they had, in some mysterious way, been provided with arms with which to resist assailants to the bitter, bitter death. The two wretches took in the situation at a glance as they beheld their executioners. They made a move to draw their weapons, but old Isaiah was knocked down and kicked almost senseless before he could begin his fight—which he was afterward destined to wage with all the ferocity of a demon, and the strength of fear and despair.

Amos made no resistance just then, but began to beg and pray. He was probably watching his chance, though, with all the cunning of a captured fox. Isaiah was stamped and pounded until it seemed as though nothing was left of him; yet he had the wiry frame of a cat, and all its tenacity to life. When the outside of the jail was reached, suddenly two shots were fired, it is supposed by Amos. One of the bullets cut a lock of hair from a masker's head, while another bullet passed through his shirt-collar.

The Courtwrights were evidently determined to forfeit their lives only at the sacrifice of more valuable ones. When Isaiah had revived somewhat from the awful pounding and kicking he had received, he was placed in position behind one of the wagons in attendance, and the procession started south on one of the two main roads leading to the depot, and, beyond, to Plover. Before the strange cortege had gone 40 rods, and nearly in front of the residence of the Hon. George Hungerford, old Isaiah renewed his fight.

With cat-like quickness he had drawn a knife and began cutting right and left among the men nearest to him. Probably no human being ever made more desperate efforts to fight his way to life and liberty. To the right, to the left, to the front, to the rear, struck the thin and sinewy arm of the crazed wretch. The maskers who were there will never forget the awful picture of that night.

It is an old, old man that is at bay. His form is thin, and wiry, and bent, and shriveled. His white hairs glistened here and there from among the patches of clotted blood that had gathered from the blows and kicks he had received. His clothes are torn and ragged. Words cannot tell the horrid wrinkles in that distorted face, nor the quick breath; they cannot give the look in the sunken eyes; are powerless to describe the writhing, struggling form that is making its last effort to live. The old man is strengthened by his despair. He cuts wildly about him, and one of the avengers receives the knife thrust that may add one more victim to Isaiah Courtwright's murderous list. Then the old man is again overpowered, knocked down, trampled upon, hitched by the neck to the wagon, and his body drags the sandy roadway, along which he had once walked a respectable man. He never lived to be hung. Long before the place where the hanging was to be done was reached the old man's life had gone out of its dishonored body.

Amos adopted a more sensible, but cowardly course. He tried to soften the hearts of the maskers by the most piteous pleadings, accompanied by tears and wails and prayers. But the men who had determined upon doing what they considered a sacred duty were not to be moved. Amos was given a certain length of time to pray, and then the two bodies of the murderers of Joseph Baker swung lifeless in the waning moonlight. A terrible but, according to the general belief, righteous retribution had overtaken Isaiah and Amos Courtwright.

The man who was stabbed by Isaiah in his desperate fight for life was a prominent citizen. He is very badly cut, but it could not be ascertained what his prospects of recovery were.

At one time, after old Isaiah was disarmed, he shouted: "You cowardly ——— give me but a toothpick, and I will fight my way clear of all of you!"

An Unpleasant Predicament.

James Hewson and Raymond Hunter, of Watervliet Centre, N. Y., were digging a well recently. They drilled a hole through the rock 12 inches in depth, crammed the powder in, applied the torch to the fuse, and shouted to the boy above at the windlass to haul them up. But that youth was not at his post; they cried louder, but there was no response. They became desperate, and one of them thought to draw the fuse out of the hole, but it was too late. They now saw that their only hope of escape was to get out of the hole, and they must do it in less than a minute, as the fuse would be nearly burned up by that time. They once again shouted at the top of their voices, and were rewarded by seeing the boy at the windlass, and he began to haul them up as fast as he could. Before they were half way up the blast went off, knocking them out of the bucket, and they fell insensible. The windlass was also knocked off by a rock, and fell, striking the insensible body of Hewson. A man was lowered and found the two men at the bottom of the well, with nearly 18 inches of water over them. Hunter's skull was fractured. Hewson was not much hurt.

DEVOURED BY CANNIBALS.

The Crews of Three Ships Killed and Eaten by Natives of the Auckland Islands—A Horrible Story.

A year ago last February the bark Jewess, of Boston, sailed from New South Wales in the direction of the Auckland Islands, a group which lies in the South Pacific Ocean near New Zealand. A few days later the Boston bark Delia M. Long and an English bark, name unknown, followed on the same course. No tidings of the two Boston vessels were received till recently, when Capt. Bremer, of Biddeford, Me., of the bark Marathon, New York, returning from a voyage around the world, brought back a terrible story in regard to them. At one of the ports at which he stopped he was taken in with a sailor, or some one who knew him, who purported to be the sole survivor of the three crews. The vessels, he said, had become becalmed in the vicinity of the Auckland Islands, and laid there together several days. They were boarded at night by cannibals, who came in large numbers, overpowered the crews, plundered the ships, and scuttled them. The men were carried prisoners to the shore and furnished food for the horrible feast of their captors. No particulars of the fight or of the survivors' escape were obtained, but the facts are pretty well authenticated, and the long absence of the vessels furnishes good ground for believing that the story may be true. The survivor was one of the crew of the Jewess, and he is said to have related that the surprise was complete—the vessels being some distance from land, and no signs of enemies having been seen. The usual precaution taken when a ship is becalmed in the vicinity of land inhabited by savages is to drive sharp nails, placed closely together, through boards, which are placed over the decks, and fastened firmly down, leaving the sharp iron points sticking up. It is then impossible for the barefooted savages to step upon the deck, and they are shot off at leisure. This precaution was not taken on board the Jewess, the survivor said, because no danger was suspected. It is understood that no ship of the United States Navy is now stationed in the South Seas, or within reasonable distance of the vicinity where the terrible tragedy is credited as having been enacted. The Jewess was nearly 500 tons burden. Capt. Mayo, of Chelsea, was the managing owner, and Mark Googins, of East Boston, Caleb Eaton, and Frank Lane were part owners. Frank Lewis, of East Boston, was one of the mates on the three vessels. There were probably thirty men, but the names of any cannot be ascertained, most of them having been shipped in foreign ports. Time will probably bring to light fuller particulars of their horrible fate.

Wonderful Memories.

Pliny says that Cyrus had a memory so prodigious that he could name every officer and soldier in his armies; and that Lucius Scipio knew every Roman citizen by name when that city contained more than 200,000 capable of bearing arms. Seneca speaks of a friend, Pontius Latro, who could repeat verbatim all the speeches he had heard declaimed by the Roman orators. It is said that Joseph Scaliger committed to memory both the Iliad and the Odyssey in twenty-one days. Sir William Hamilton tells us of a young Corsican of good family who had gone to Padua to study civil law, in which he soon distinguished himself. "He was a frequent visitor at the house and gardens of Muretus, who, having heard that he possessed a remarkable art or faculty of memory, though incredulous in regard to reports, took occasion to request from him a specimen of his power. He at once agreed; and, having adjourned with a considerable party of distinguished auditors into a saloon, Muretus began to dictate words, Latin, Greek, barbarous, significant and non-significant, disjointed and connected, until he wearied himself, the young man who wrote them down, and the audience who were present; 'we were all,' he says, 'marvelously tired.' The Corsican alone was the one of the whole company alert and fresh, and continually desired Muretus for more words, who declared he would be more than satisfied if he could repeat the half of what he had taken down, and at length he ceased. The young man, with his gaze fixed upon the ground, stood silent for a brief season; and then says Muretus, 'Vidi facinus mirificissimum.' Having begun to speak, he absolutely repeated the whole words in the same order in which they had been delivered, without the slightest hesitation; then, commencing from the last, he repeated them backward till he came to the first. Then, again, so that he spoke the first, the third, the fifth, and so on; did this in any order that was asked, and all without the slightest error. Having subsequently become familiarly acquainted with him, I have had other and frequent experience of his power. He assured me (and he had nothing of the boaster in him) that he could recite in the manner I have mentioned to the amount of 36,000 words. And what is more wonderful, they all so adhered to the mind, that after a year's interval he could repeat them without trouble. I know, from having tried him, he could do so after considerable time." —Scribner for November.

When Did the War Begin?

The Supreme Court to-day affirmed the decision of the Court of Appeals of New York in the case of McStear vs. Matthews, Mr. Justice Strong delivering the opinion. This was an action upon the acceptance of a bill of exchange by the firm of Branden, Chandliss & Co., of New Orleans, it being alleged that Matthews, living in New York, was at the time of the acceptance a member of that firm. The only question was whether the partnership existed at the date of the acceptance, April 23, 1861, the war being then flagrant. The Court held that although war existed at the date of the acceptance, still, as it had not been declared or publicly recognized by the President, it did not have the effect to work a dissolution of a partnership, of which a member or members resided in New York and the others in New Orleans. The proclamation of April 17, 1861, is not regarded as a distinct recognition of an existing state of war, nor yet is that of the 19th of April, which announced the blockade. The reference to the people of Louisiana in these cases is to "citizens of revolutionary States," and in the judgment of the Court the purpose avowed by the President is inconsistent with their being regarded as enemies.—New York Sun.

Vanished Fractional Currency.

An interesting fact in connection with the loss and destruction of fractional currency is ascertained from the Treasury Department. It is very well known that the government is yearly the gainer to a large amount by the disappearance of small notes and currency. But the figures regarding the three and five-cent issues of fractional currency, when it is remembered how many of them are required to make a dollar, are particularly interesting. The issue of these notes ceased in April, 1869, at which time there had been issued $602,000 of the denomination of three cents, and $5,700,000 of the five-cent series. Although over six years have elapsed, there are still outstanding $92,000 in three-cent notes, and over $1,870,000 of the five-cent issue.—Washington Star.

His name appears in the "Statistics of Georgia" and "Major Jones' Courtship," and many of his jokes and witty sayings have appeared in the publications of the Harpers. It is reported that at one time Barnum offered the owner of Jack the sum of $10,000 for him.

JOHN L. DAVIS,

The Old Pioneer.

You may not have encountered him, but every city or village over 25 years old has an "old pioneer." He is an aged man, walks with a cane, has a bent back and scant grey locks, and he is entitled to the unbounded respect of all citizens.

Many little privileges are accorded the "old pioneer." He can open the cheese box in a grocery and help himself, hook apples, reach over for peanuts have the head of the table when the firemen give a banquet, and if he crawls under the canvass on circus day none of the circus men strike at him with a neck yoke.

And if the "old pioneer" says that it's going to be a hard winter, a soft winter a cool summer or a rainy fall, it would be like entering a den of lions for one to rise up and dispute him. He predicts political events, prophesies revolutions, remembers all about how the Free Masons killed John Morgan, and confidentially expects a column notice in the local papers when he drops off.

I met one of the old fellows the other day on the cars. He assured me that riding on the cars was more pleasant than making a journey on horse-back and he said that the country had improved some since he used to carry the mail between New York and Chicago. I was looking right at him but he never blushed as he said that he used to make the round trip on horse-back in five days.—I was wondering how he could have done in when he went on to say that New York contained only eleven houses and Chicago only four, at the time he acted as mail carrier. I remarked that the mail must have been light in those early day when he replied:

"Light! why, bless you, my son, I never had less than fourteen mail-bags, and sometimes as high as twenty!"

I expected to see him struck dead in his seat, but greatly to my surprise, he continued to live right on, the same as if he had never told a lie.

"Ever have any fights with the Indians in those early days?" I finally continued.

"Injun' fights! I should say I had a few—ha! ha! ha! I wish you could go home with me to old Chemung County. I've got seven dry goods boxes filled with Indian topnots—seven boxes left, and I've been making horse blankets and door-mats out of my pile for over forty years."

"Is it possible.

"Yes it is. I don't say this to brag, but you asked me a plain question and I answered it. I suppose I killed 11,873 Indians during my early life, though I won't say these are the exact figures. It might have been 11,874, or only 11,875 —I am getting old and cant remember dates very well."

"Ever see George Washington?" I asked.

"See George Washington! why he boarded in my family for over four years!"

"He did!"

"Yes, he did."

"When was that?"

"Let's see! well, I don't remember just when it was, quite a while ago. Yes George boarded with me, and I've got a bill of forty dollars somewhere against him now. He was a little hard up for cash when he left us."

"Did you ever see William Penn?" I asked after a while.

"Bill Pen, ha! ha! ha! why? I wish I had as many dollars as the number of times Bill and I have slid down hill together. His father lived in part of our house for eight years, and Bill and I were like brothers. I could lick him, and he knew it, but we never even had a cross word between us. Poor Bill!—When I read about his being blown up on a steam boat I said to myself that I'd rather loose a brother."

I waited a good while and then inquired:

"Were you ever in the revolutionary war?"

"Revolutionary war! why you must take me for a boy. Why, I was the first man to jine! There was a week when the Patriots didn't have any army but me, and there was so much fighting and marching that I almost got discouraged."

"Then you must have met General Lafayette?"

"General Lafayette! why, on the morning of the battle of Bunker Hill, Wishington, Lafayette, Bill Penn, and myself were playing a four-handed game of euchre in an old barn just out of Boston. Lafayette was killed just as he was dealing the cards!"

"I thought he went back to France and died."

"No sir."

"But history says so."

"I don't care a plum for history young man! Didn't his blood scatter all over me and weren't his last words addressed to me? I guess I know as much as any history.

"What were his last words?"

"Last words! well sir, he didn't have time to say much. A cannon ball struck him in the body, and all he said was 'Don't give up the ship!' Poor Laif! He was a little conceited, but when he borrowed a dollar of you it was certain to come back.

"You never saw Christopher Columbus did you?" I finally asked, determined to wind him up,

He was staggered for a moment, but then recovered and answered:

"Christopher Co-lum-bus! Well, no I never did. My brother used to talk a good deal about Chris., but I never happened to meet him. They say he didn't amount to much, after all, used to get tight on election day, kept a fighting dog and race horse, and was always blowing around what he could do. I was always careful of my character, and they can't say of me that I ever associated with low folks.

The Way it Rains in Florida

It is hard for the Northern farmer, who watches the horizon with aching eyes, to understand the clock-like regularity of this rainy season South. Occasionally, as this year, it is delayed, but once set in it goes on regularly. There is a misty or clear morning, the air transfused with a blushing, rainbowy effulgence that melts away in the ardent kisses of the sun into an intense dazzel of sunlight up to 2 o'clock. Then the skirmishers of the rain rush in on cool, dewy winds, and by sharp 3 o'clock the whole line is platoon firing in great heavy fusilades. Such rains! Gorgeous, glorious, rushing a magnificent enthusiasm of pluging moisture. Then the long roll of the thunder drums; the cracking artillery, with its splendor of electric flash, toned off in low rolls, and before you are aware, the mobile army has gathered up its splendid wings, its [illegible] and afterguard and reserves, and only in the west you see its grand victorious battle flags ribbing the sky with broad bands of color. Hadn't Seen Shakespeare

Evertt's art gallery in the "Times' building is graced with a fine oil painting of Shakespeare, which hangs prominently from a central column at the back end of the store. The other day a lady from the country came in, glanced about, and inquired of Mr. Evertt, pointing to Shakespeare's phiz:

"What minister is that?"

"That is Shakespeare," replied the urbrne Evertt, with a painful smile on his lips.

"Oh, it is hey? Where does he preach now?"

"He wasn't a minister, madam. He was a poet."

Oh! Ah! Yes. Seems to me I've heerd on him somewhere. Did he write any pieces for the Free Will Baptists' hymn book?"

Mr Evertt politely sought to divert the ladys' attention by showing Jacob kissing Rachel, when the old lady innocently inquired, after studying the engraving curiously:

"What be they wrestling about?"

After asking when there was to be a circus in Troy again, she left the art gallery highly pleased.—[Troy (N. Y.) Times.

A Hero of the War.

A hack horse fell down an Gratoit avenue yesterday, and among the crowd which gathered were several negroes, one of whom sought to boss the job of getting the equine up again. He was doing a good deal of talking when a friend and brother walked up and demanded:

"See heah, who is you?"

"I is Stephen Baker, sah," was the dignified reply.

"And was you in de war?"

"War! war!"

"Yes, sah, was you in de war?"

"No, Sah."

"Well, den, what business you got bossing around here? You jes' stand back and lit somebody who was in de war do de talking! Now den, folks, lift up on dat hoss and keep clear of his hind hoofs!"

The one who was not in the war meekly sat down on the curbstone.—[Detroit Free Press.

How To Keep A Subscriber.

An indignant farmer recently entered the office of the Elizabeth "News" and ordered his paper stopped, because he differed from its editor in his views regarding the advantages of subsoiling fence rails. The editor, of course, conceded to the man's right to stop his paper, but he remarked coolly, looking over his lits:

"Do you know Jim Sowders, down at Hardscrabble?"

"Very well," said the man.

"Well, he stopped his paper last week because I thought a farmer was a fool who didn't know that timothy was a good thing to graft on huckleberry bushes, and he died in four hours."

"Lord, is that so?" said the astonished granger.

"Yes and you know old George Erickson, down on Eagle Creek?"

"Well, I've heard of him."

"Well," said the editor, gravely, "he stopped his paper because I said he was the happy father of twins; and congratulated him on his success so late in life. He fell dead in twenty minutes. There are lots of similar cases, but it don't matter. I'll just cross your name off, though you don't look strong, and there is a bad color on your nose."

"See here, Mr. Editor," said the subscriber, looking somewhat alarmed, "I believe I'll just keep on another year; 'cause I always did like your paper, and come to think about it, you'r a young man, and allowance ought to be made;" and he departed satisfied that he had made a narrow escape from death.

Prince Milona, of Servia, who is shortly to be married to a princess of the blood, is extremely in love with his future wife, and he has a rather extravagant way of showing it. The young sovereign of Servia sends her a long letter every day by telegraph, and dispatches a courier with a magnificent bouquet for his fiancee. The princess elect is not behind her royal suitor in extravagance, however. Her trousseau has cost the nice little sum of £7,606. Not yet sixteen, and very beautiful, she was bent on having her dress of white velvet, but the weight would have been unbearable with its trimmings, etc, and the dress was made of the richest white faille, covered with magnificent English point and diamonds

JOHN REED.

BY BAYARD TAYLOR.

There's a mist on the meadow below; the herring-frogs chirp and cry;
It's chill when the sun is down, and the sod is not yet dry;
The world is a lonely place, it seems, and I don't know why.

I see, as I lean on the fence, how wearily trudges Dan;
With the feel of the Spring in his bones, like a weak and elderly man;
I've had it many a time, but we must work when we can.

Day after day to toil, and ever from sun to sun,
Though up to the season's front, and nothing be left undone,
Is ending at twelve like a clock, and beginning again at one.

The frogs make a sorrowful noise, and yet it's the time they mate;
There's something comes with the Spring, a lightness or else a weight;
There's something comes with the Spring, and it seems to me it's Fate.

It's the hankering after a life that you never have learned to know;
It's the discontent with a life that is always thus and so;
It's the wondering what we are, and where we are going to go.

My life is lucky enough, I fancy, to most men's eyes,
For the more a family grows, the oftener some one dies,
And it's now run on so long, it couldn't be otherwise.

And Sister Jane and myself, we have learned to claim and yield;
She rules in the house at will, and I in the barn and field,
So, nigh upon thirty years!—as if written and signed and sealed.

I couldn't change if I would; I've lost the how and the when;
One day my time will be up, and Jane be the mistress then,
For single women are tough and live down the single men.

She kept me so to herself, she was always the stronger hand,
And my lot showed well enough, when I looked around in the land;
But I'm tired and sore at heart, and I don't quite understand.

I wonder how it had been if I'd taken what others need,
The plague, they say, of a wife, the care of a younger breed?
If Edith Pleasanton now were with me as Edith Reed?

Suppose that a son well grown were there in the place of Dan,
And I felt myself in him, as I was when my work began?
I should feel no older, sure, and certainly more a man!

A daughter, beside, in the house; nay, let there be two or three!
We never can overdo the luck that can never be,
And what has come to the most might also have come to me.

I've thought, when a neighbor's wife or his child was carried away,
That to have no loss was a gain; but now, I can hardly say;
He seems to possess them still, under the ridges of clay.

And share and share in a life is, somehow, a different thing
From property held by deed, and the riches that oft take wing; feel so close in the breast!—I think it must be the Spring.

I'm drying up like a brook when the woods have been cleared around;
You're sure it must always run, you are used to the sight and sound,
But it shrinks till there's only left a stony rut in the ground.

There's nothing to do but take the days as they come and go,
And not to worry with thoughts that nobody likes to show,
For people so seldom talk of the things they want to know.

There's times when the way is plain, and everything nearly right,
And then, of a sudden, you stand like a man with a clouded sight;
A bush seems often a beast, in the dusk of the falling night.

must move; my joints are stiff; the weather is breeding rain,
And Dan is hurrying on with his plow-team up the lane.

A STORY SUCCESSFULLY TOLD.

Pretty, plump Mrs. Archibald Steele wrote the following paragraph in one of her letters to her husband the other day:

"John must come down here at once, whether you can spare him or not. Our dear little Laura is greatly taken with a tall, thin young man, with a hooked nose and thin lips, called Stuyvesant. It is whispered about the hotel that he is a very good match, and has the veritable blue blood of the old Dutch Governor in his veins. I must say it has a queer way of showing itself, for the young man is as pale as a specter; and dressed in that white duck, with his sunken eyes and bilious skin, is enough to frighten one. I have grown to hate him, while Laura is growing to do quite the contrary, I'm afraid. All the evening he leans up against the wall, never dancing, or opening his mouth save to give vent to some hateful sarcastic criticism upon the scene around him, and yet dear Laura's eyes—as, indeed, all the other pretty eyes about—are perpetually beseeching him for attention. In the daytime he is always with a long black horse, that covers more ground with its legs when it is going than any animal I ever saw. When Laura goes out to drive behind it, and vanishes out of sight with the bony creature, I tremble to think how dreadful it would be if our dear little girl would become part and parcel of this wretched man and his wicked beast. So I think John had better come down at once; I quite long to see his handsome face and hear his honest voice, and I think it is about time John should tell his little story to Laura, and have things settled comfortably."

Mr. Archibald Steele smiled when he put the letter of his wife in his waistcoat pocket, and picking up the morning paper, scanned through his gold-rimmed spectacles the news of the day. Finding nothing therein to ruffle the exceedingly satisfactory condition of affairs, he put it down, and smiled again as only a prosperous, contented, down-town merchant can smile. He was one of those happy exceptions to the ordinary rule of mortals, with whom everything went well. His whole appearance was an exclamation point to that effect. If he ventured a little hazardously in trade, fortune trimmed her sails to favor him. If he set his heart upon anything relating to domestic felicity, all the elements of art and nature conspired to bring it about. So when he stepped to the door of the office and beckoned to a young man with a strip of commercial paper in his hand and a pencil behind his ear, with that general air of briskness and shrewdness about him that betokened a successful down-town merchant in embryo, Mr. Steele smiled the third time, with the air of one who was not at all afraid of any bilious, blue-blooded obstacle that might be thrown in the path of a domestic happiness which he firmly believed had been arranged by an omnipotent hand.

"John," said Mr. Steele, closing the door of his private office, and looking upon his young clerk benevolently, "I've got an order here from Mrs. Steele, which I wish you would attend to."

"Certainly, sir," said John. "Shall I go out and get the article myself?"

"Why, the fact is, John," said the merchant, enjoying his joke more and more, "it's only one article—a rather bulky one. It was bargained for long ago. I think you will have to go with it, John."

"Down to the seashore!" said John, getting a little hot and flustered. "Is it a very valuable parcel, sir?"

"Well, perhaps your natural modesty may depreciate its worth, John. Mrs. Steele and I think a good deal of it, and Laura, too—I'm sure she does. The commodity is yourself, John. Mrs. Steele wants you to go down and take a little holiday there."

When the name of Laura was mentioned, the young man's face grew more flustered and hot than before.

"You are very kind, sir," he said, "and Mrs. Steele is always more like an angel than a woman."

"Rather solid and plump for that," interposed Mr. Steele, but liking the phrase nevertheless.

"But it is simple madness," pursued John, "to dream of further happiness than I enjoy now—your affection and that of your wife, my position here; I don't dare—I can't hope for anything more. Oh, Mr. Steele, I can't tell her my story, sir. She would shrink from me with horror and aversion, she is so young, so beautiful. Let me at least enjoy the present."

"And in the meantime some cadaverous, bilious, blue-blooded scoundrel will carry her off from us all!"

Then John's face grew pale and stern. "If there is the slightest feeling upon her part for—for any one else, then indeed, Mr. Steele, my case is hopeless."

The commercial paper fluttered from his hand, the pencil fell from his ear; he leaned his head against the desk and trembled.

"Why, who would suppose you could be such a coward?" said Mr. Steele, impetuously. "You shall go down with me this very day."

All the way to the seashore John's face wore the look of one who had resolved to storm a deadly breach, but who did not hope to survive the attempt.

Even the ocean, when it confronted them, wore a threatening look. Upon the horizon a pile of clouds formed a background wan and gloomy, a great black mist lay in the zenith, a dense red vapor almost touched the water.

"A very nasty sea," said Mr. Steele.

John snuffed it in, his eyes dilating, his broad shoulders expanding, his head high in the sea-scented air.

A tramp on the hard, wet sand, and like a meteor a long black horse shot by, disappearing in the mist, leaving for John the memory of a charming head crowned with blonde curling hair, two kind eyes bent upon his own, a white waving hand extended in salutation.

"John," said Mr. Steele, "did you see the face of that man? I count upon your saving Laura. Did you see his thin, cruel lips, his treacherous eyes?"

"I only saw Laura, sir," said John, simply.

Later on, Mr. Archibald Steele and his plump pretty wife were alone together in their private parlor. Her dimpled hand lay lovingly in his, her shapely head, fresh from the hands of the coiffeur, rested recklessly on his shoulder.

Suddenly the door opened, and there was heard the rustle of silken drapery. A still shapelier little head, and fresher from the hands of the coiffeur, all unrumpled by the audacious touch of a mortal, peeped in at the door. Laura was pale; her little white hands were clasped together; her musical voice trembled.

"Oh, papa, mamma, come directly! Mr. Stuyvesant ventured out too far, and—and—"

"Was drowned?" said Mr. Steele, with a peculiar combination in his voice of pity and relief.

"No, no; how can you suppose so dreadful a thing? He was rescued, but he is very weak and ill. He has asked for me—and may I go? Will you come with me, mamma? Oh, do, I beg of you! Can't she, papa?"

Her blue eyes filled with tears; her little feet seemed panting to fly through the corridor.

"Certainly not," said Mr. Steele. "Let him wait till he is able to come to you or to me. Either a man is drowned or he isn't. Because he was imbecile enough to risk his life, that is no reason for your being the talk of the hotel."

Laura raised her head proudly.

"No danger of that, papa; and, besides, every one is occupied now with the one that rescued him."

"And what madman was that?" said poor Mr. Steele, who could not reconcile himself to the present condition of affairs.

"I don't know—a stranger, I believe; I was so interested in Mr. Stuyvesant I forgot to ask."

"Pah!" said Mr. Steele, getting upon his feet, and walking to the door, "I'll go and find out all about it. Do you stay here till I return."

Before he had gone far Mr. Steele heard from the excited guests several different versions of the affair; but one and all agreed that the rescuer could be nothing less than a champion swimmer.

"A regular water-dog!" said one gentleman to Mr. Steele; and as the merchant had heard this epithet used but once before in his life, and that on an occasion of vital interest to himself, he sought out the hero of the hour, and found, to his unbounded astonishment, it was John Waters himself! He was quite enveloped in the flounces and furbelows of pretty and sympathetic women, who insisted upon knowing every half second if he was sure he felt strong and well, and how in the world could he buffet those dreadful waves in that grand, heroic way, and how did he manage to drag poor dear Mr. Stuyvesant in to the shore?

John, like any other hero of the hour, enjoyed this womanly adulation, but looked anxiously at Mr. Steele when he approached.

"Hum!" growled that worthy merchant, "a pretty fellow you to interfere with other people's plans! How do you know he wanted to be rescued?"

"He appeared anxious that way, sir," said John. "He wrapped himself about me like a devil fish. I thought one time we'd both go down together. There ought to be a school for teaching people the easiest thing in the world; the water itself is an accessory, if you manage it right."

"Oh, do tell us how, Mr. Waters, please!" chorused the pretty and sympathetic women; and as John began his lesson, Mr. Steele slipped away.

"Oh, papa," began Laura, "how is Mr. Stuyvesant?"

"I don't know—I didn't ask," he replied. "I was so interested in the fellow that dragged him ashore. He's an old friend of ours. The way we made his acquaintance was on just such an occasion; he saved a lady from drowning."

"Why, papa," said Laura, "he must be a splendid fellow."

"Magnificent!" said Mr. Steele. "You see, we had traveled over considerable of the world together, your mother and I, while you were yet a baby. And we found it rather odd one morning to discover that having crossed the ocean and the Alps, loitered in the Hudson Highlands, traveled thence down through the Mississippi Valley, across the American Desert to California, and back again by another route, your mother had never been up the East river as far as Morrisania. It seemed so absurd to have neglected this home excursion that we determined upon it at once. The morning was wet, but that didn't matter. Your mother looked prettier in a waterproof and rubbers, with a shovel-hat tied under her chin, than most women would in a ball-dress. She wasn't a bit afraid of rain or mud. She was a little too reckless, for getting ashore to see one of the institutions for vagabond boys, her foot slipped off the plank, and she disappeared."

Mr. Steele stopped a minute; his voice faltered; the little plump hand of his wife slipped into his own; he clutched it and went on again.

"One minute I saw her as neat and trim a little figure as ever graced a waterproof and shovel-hat, the next she was gone."

"Gone!" cried Laura. "Gone where?"

"Into the water, child; into the hungry green waves that surged up to take her away from the fondest heart in the universe; and if it hadn't been for one of those very vagabond boys, who had been lurking there for a chance to escape from the island, you'd have lost us both, my dear, for I made an agonized plunge after her, though I'm ashamed to say I couldn't swim a stroke, and should only have gone to the bottom like a plummet of lead, but an official standing by caught and held me, and cried out that John Waters had her safe as a trivet; and presently that vagabond boy came up with your sweet mother on the other side of the boat, and the official cried out, 'He's a regular water-dog, that Johnny Waters!' And these were the very words a guest here used in relation to John a minute or so ago."

"John!" cried poor bewildered Laura, "our John? Mamma? My mamma? Was mamma the lady? Was John the boy? And is it John, our John, that saved poor Mr. Stuyvesant!"

"The very same, darling—John, our John; he's always on hand where there's trouble or danger."

"Oh, mamma! mamma!" cried Laura, forgetting all the years that had passed since the accident, and crumpling both the coiffured heads in a most reckless manner.

"Papa," she then said, "we must go and find John. I want to tell him how much I—I—"

"Yes, dear," said Mr. Archibald Steele, and all the way through the corridor and into the parlors of the hotel, with his plump and pretty wife on one arm, his lovely daughter on the other, he smiled.

But John was still surrounded by the pretty and sympathetic women, who had cruelly deserted the blue-blooded descendant of the old Dutch Governor, lying in his most graceful and languid of attitudes on a neighboring lounge—the descendant, not the Governor—and had flocked one and all to the handsome and heroic founder of the new school for teaching people the way to be rescued from drowning.

These charming creatures spent so much of their time at the sea shore, and it was so necessary and so nice to be wise!

John was almost hidden in flounces and laces; but when his eyes met Laura's, he plunged out of these costly billows with his usual ease and intrepidity. There was something in Laura's eyes that he had never seen there before; a tempting languor, a bewitching shyness, a bewildering splendor, that steeped his soul in a mad sweet hope.

Laura stopped one moment to whisper to her mamma, and John gasped out Mr. Steele:

"If I dared—if I only dared tell her—"

"I've told her myself," said the merchant.

"That I was a pauper without home or friends?"

"I told the story in my own way, John," continued Mr. Steele, "and I flatter myself I told it successfully; don't spoil it if you please. I have managed the past and the present; do you look out for the future, John."

And John did. Laura walked through the parlors that night, the envied of all the pretty and sympathetic women and brave and appreciative men that congregated there.

Four Thousand Miles on Horseback.

Capt. Willard Glazier, the soldier-author, who will be remembered in connection with "Soldiers of the Saddle," "Capture, Prison Pen and Escape," and "Battles for the Union," has excited considerable comment of late through the announcement that he will cross the continent on horseback next year. Boston will be the starting point, while San Francisco will be the ultimatum of this great rider's journey. We understand that a lecture, applicable to Centennial times, will be delivered in the cities that lay along the line of march. This novel cruise might have for some a romantic flavor, but for the majority of mankind romance is at a discount in regions where "grisly" and the Lo family predominate.—N. Y. Graphic.

The Passions That Induce Disease.

The passions which act most severely on the physical life are anger, fear, hatred and grief. The other passions are comparatively innocuous. What is called the passion of love is not injurious until it lapses into grief and anxiety; on the contrary, it sustains the physical power. What is called ambition is of itself harmless; for ambition, when it exists purely, is a nobility lifting its owner entirely from himself into the exalted service of mankind. It injures when it is debased by its meaner ally, pride; or when, stimulating a man to too strenuous efforts after some great object, it leads him to the performance of excessive mental or physical labor and to the consequences that follow such effort.

The passion called avarice, according to my experience, tends rather to the preservation of the body than to its deterioration. The avaricious man, who seems to the luxurious world to be debarring himself of all the pleasures of the world, and even to be exposing himself to the fangs of poverty, is generally placing himself in the precise conditions favorable to a long and healthy existence. By his economy he is saving himself from all the worry incident to penury; by his caution he is screening himself from all the risks incident to speculation or the attempt to amass wealth by hazardous means; by his regularity of hours and perfect appropriation of the sunlight, in preference to artificial illumination, he rests and works in periods that precisely accord with the periodicy of nature; by his abstemiousness in living he takes just enough to live, which is precisely the right thing to do according to the rigid natural law. Thus, in almost every particular, he goes on his way freer than other men from the external causes of all the induced diseases, and better protected than most men from the worst consequences of those diseases which spring from causes that are uncontrollable.—Popular Science Monthly for November.

The Brooklyn Scandal Revived.

A dispatch from New York says: "At a business meeting of Plymouth Church, in Brooklyn, last evening, the names of Deacon West and Mrs. Moulton were dropped from the roll of its membership on the ground of continued absence from the services of the church. Deacon West was not present, but Mrs. Moulton was. She was accompanied by her counsel, Roger A. Pryor, who read a protest, signed by Mrs. Moulton, and which closed as follows: 'My absence is an enforced one, and is caused by the crime of adultery committed by Henry Ward Beecher, pastor of this church, with one of his parishoners, which I know to be a fact, through Mr. Beecher's confessions to me, and through the confessions of Mrs. Tilton, and through conclusive evidence of the crime from other sources. I appear before this church in loyal obedience to a summons which I have received, and I hereby declare my disposition to discharge all the duties devolving on me, as a member, that are consistent with my knowledge of the adultery of the pastor and his false swearing with regard to it.'

"The New York and Brooklyn Association of Congregational Ministers has taken action, it is alleged, which will certainly revive the Beecher scandal. A committee of its members has been appointed and instructed to report, after a careful examination of the charges, whether the association ought to retain Mr. Beecher in its membership. It was said, last evening, that Mr. Beecher would withdraw from the association rather than submit to an investigation."

Sufferings of the Poor in Germany.

A recent Berlin dispatch says: "The depression of trade is felt so keenly by the industrial classes that the government has been requested, as a means of preventing acute distress, to resort to the measure successfully adopted in the last two wars, namely, the establishment of loan banks. The government has not as yet shown much inclination to accede to the request. Serious distress is anticipated among the industrial working classes during the coming winter, and apprehensions are also entertained of a crisis in financial circles."

A contemporary, commenting upon the above, pertinently remarks: "While France is more prosperous than she has been since the empire, Germany is on the extremities of distress. The proposition for government aid to the people shows that however vigorous and masterful Bismark is in war, he doesn't equal his French rivals in peace. It is a singular comment on the lack of governing faculty in the German nation—that is to say, the stimulus and upholding of industry—that in four years from the reception of an indemnity greater than her national debt, Germany is the poorest country in Europe."

Fickle Frenchmen.

When the name of the streets of Paris were changed after the fall of the empire, the new Republican names were simply painted over on the plates the Imperialists used. The other day the people were startled at beholding here and there "Rue Napoleon," "Place Napoleon," etc., and there were dark rumors immediately. It turned out, however—at least the Prefect of Police so explains it—that recent alterations to houses had covered the plates with dirt, and in cleaning them the new names rubbed off and the old ones appeared. It might be interesting to know, if the cleaning process was persevered in, what other names would be discovered. Paris has changed the names of its streets just as often as it has changed the government of France. It has sometimes even changed the names of months. The story will be remembered of the Parisian who, on awaking in the morning, always asked his servant the first thing to tell him what was "the government, the month, and the name of the street he lived on."

A New Process of Making Bread.

M. Cecil, a French engineer, has invented a new process of preparing the materials for making bread, which has receiving the approval of the Minister of War, and will hereafter be adopted in the French army. By this process an increased percentage of the nutritive properties of grain is retained, so that by avoiding the usual grinding and wetting the grain that would make 115 pounds of bread in the ordinary way will make what is equivalent to 140 pounds. The new process is described as follows: The unground grain is first steeped in water, after which it is placed in revolving cylinders, by which it is deprived of its outer husk, which contains but 4 or 5 per cent. of nutriment. The grains are then softened by forming them into a thin sponge, and keeping them for a space of six to eight hours at a temperature of seventy-seven degrees Fahrenheit. They are then crushed under and made into dough with salt and water, as usual.

Earthquake Waves.

A. L. Cox, of Santa Rosa, has just returned from a trip up the coast, where he has been engaged surveying for some days past. He informs us that the heaviest sea known in the past four years was rolling inland on Tuesday and Wednesday, along the north coast. There was no wind. The schooners George Lewis, Champion and Sarah Louise had anchored at Stewart's Point just before the heavy sea set in. The swell continued to increase in volume until it repeatedly swept the decks of the vessels. The small boats were stove up or washed overboard. The men on board had no way to get ashore and were in great danger. John Dinsmore, a carpenter at Stewart's Point, with a heroism worthy of all praise, volunteered to go in a small boat and bring the men ashore. He made three trips, landing the crews of each schooner safely. Dinsmore, whose courage did not fail while his brave work was in hand, fainted from exhaustion and excitement when it was over. The George Lewis had received the most injury when our informant left, but no serious accident had befallen either vessel, though the swells were breaking over them.—Santa Rosa (Cal.) Democrat.

A Curious Fact.

The greatest merchant in the world bears one exceptional mark of peculiar character. I will explain by saying that A. T. Stewart never was a clerk. He was, in fact, not bred to any business, but came to America an educated young man, whose expectations were to become a teacher. He found employment in this business until he was instinctively led to the dry-goods trade, which he has pursued to his present greatness. Claflin was a clerk near Worcester, and subsequently became a dry-goods retailer in that thriving town, whence he came to this city as a partner in the firm of Bulkley & Claflin. As Stewart never had any business education to prepare him for a mercantile career, we see more vividly the power of genius in creating a vast business, and ordaining a system of government such as the world has never seen equaled. It is, perhaps, because Stewart has never been a clerk that he has so little sympathy with this unfortunate class. He has the reputation of being a very hard taskmaster, and I have been told that one of his rules is to never give employment to any one who had ever left his service, either voluntarily or by discharge.—New York Letter.

A Woman's Surgical Operation.

Yesterday afternoon a man whose name could not be learned, and who with his family reside near the corner of Williams alley and Fountain street, got into a quarrel with his wife. Both were intoxicated. They pitched into each other, tore each other's hair, and raised a rumpus generally. By some diplomatic course or other the woman finally succeeded in getting her lord and master to bed. Her next move was to get a bottle of chloroform which was near at hand, and administer a nice little dose to her husband. The next act was to procure an old saw, with which she proceeded to do a job in surgery that would put a professional surgeon to blush. Beginning at the lower end of the man's leg, she commenced sawing until she had severed that useful appendage in twain. He, totally unconscious of what was going on, slept on, "the sleep of the innocent," while she, after the job was done, looked on, watching his life-blood ebb slowly away. Somehow or other the neighbors outside got wind of what was going on inside the house and rushed in, in time to stop the bleeding, but at last accounts it was a question whether the man would live or not.—Cleveland Leader.

Grumblers and the Press.

The truth is that there is scarcely a newspaper published from one end of the year to the other that will not, if critically considered, give offense to somebody in the community. The politician objects to the way his speech is reported. The buyer of one set of shares is offended because the money column reports another set as going up or going down. Gentlemen who find themselves in the hands of the police are grieved at the license of the press which reports their arraignment and trial among the police proceedings. The sympathizer with France is offended at letters from Berlin, and the believer in German unity mourns over dispatches from Paris. The newspaper thus offends some one just as the weather—rain to-day and sunshine to-morrow—is sure to annoy somebody. The common-sense view is that the newspaper is the history of yesterday written to-day; that it is the mirror of the time, and that those that conduct it care nothing for individuals, except to do them justice.—N. Y. Herald.

Jolly Old Age.

To-day is the one hundred and twelfth birthday of the Courant. On the 29th of October, 1764, we issued the first number of the paper, and from that year to the present it has never failed to appear on time, bringing with it the latest advices and the best advice we had to offer. We have had so many birthdays that we do not consider them novelties, and have seen so many strange things that we cannot now recapitulate them; for it has taken us a hundred and eleven years already to tell them once. Without moralizing, we will simply wish our readers the best of good mornings. To our original subscribers we would pay especial greeting, and we promise them a hearty welcome if they will call upon us any day (in the daytime) and renew the acquaintance of early years. Everybody who subscribed in person for the first year of the Courant is entitled to receive it for 1876 gratis, and is invited to come and talk over Centennial matters whenever he feels like it.—Hartford Courant.

IN MICH-I-GAN-I-A.

[A writer in the New York Herald alludes to the ravages of the "Michigan fever in that State, from 1831 to 1836, when Michigan received tens of thousands of New York emigrants, and quotes this old ballad, that was sung, in those times, at husking bees and log rollings:]

You have your State of Vermont—
But [illegible]
Be sure the girls are pretty,
The cattle very fat.
But who among her mountains
In clouds and snow would stay,
When he could have a prairie
In Mich-i-gan-i-a?

Then there's your Massachusetts—
Once good enough, be sure;
But now she's always laying on
Taxation or manure,
She costs you pecks of trouble,
Yet devil a peck can pay;
While all is Scripture measure
In Mich-i-gan-i-a.

And there's your land of Blue Laws
Where deacons cut your hair,
For fear your locks and tenets
Should not exactly square;
Where beer that works on Sunday
A penalty must pay,
While all is free and easy
In Mich-i-gan-i-a.

A Central American Confederation.

During the past three or four weeks says the New York Herald, rumors have reached us from Central America to the effect that a revival of the old "Federation of the United States of Central America" is soon about to take place. It will be remembered that after throwing off the Spanish yoke and undergoing a number of vicissitudes, both foreign and domestic, Guatemala, Costa Rica, San Salvador, Honduras, and Nicaragua formed on the 1st day of July, 1823, a federal republic under the above title. After fifteen years of civel feud and wrangling among themselves the union decreed its own dissolution in 1839. Since that time until now the States which acquired their separate sovereignty have never ceased to regret the disruption of the confederation to which they once belonged. In the present movement, initiated for the purpose of restoring the extinct federation of Central America to its former place among the nations, Guatemala takes the lead.

The figures given below show the area in square miles and the population of the five independent states comprised within the limit of the contemplated confederation.

Republics.	Areas. Square miles.	Population.

4. Costa Rica	21,495	165,000

ROMANCE OF CRIME.

Compromising with Burglars—The Robbery that Bankrupted the Winthrop (Me.) Bank—Felony Compounded Under Court Sanction.

On the 23d of July last, in the early morning, the safe of the Winthrop (Me.) Bank was blown open, and the burglars stole $90,000 in bonds, bankrupting the institution. A reward of $10,000 was offered, but the efforts of the detectives were fruitless. The officers of the bank knew, however, that the bonds could not readily be negotiated, and so they waited patiently. The first clue was obtained by Joshua Taggart, the Philadelphia detective, who, being in Boston on business about ten days after the robbery, extended his trip to Winthrop. He examined the safes that had been sent to Boston to be exchanged for new ones, and the indications were that the burglary had been committed by persons whom he knew. He procured a description of certain men seen in Winthrop on the day before the robbery, and soon after wrote to the bank officials asking them to send one of their number to Philadelphia at once with authority to act. The mission was given to Col. Charles A. Wing, of Winthrop, and on the 6th of September he went to Philadelphia with full authority.

An arrangement was made for the burglars' agent to meet Col. Wing in a secluded place on the 9th of September, and the person who represented the burglars offered to restore all the securities except the government bonds and the currency. Col. Wing said that if that was the final conclusion in regard to the government bonds, he would not care to negotiate. The robbers' agent seemed indifferent, and smoked his cigar, and twirled a cane. Finally Col. Wing asked what could be done in regard to the other securities.

"My directions are for twenty per cent. of the market value," was the reply.

The interview was then adjourned for three hours, and another place was selected for the second meeting. Then the burglars' agent offered for $10,000 to restore all the property, except currency and government bonds, which the burglars had disposed of. Col. Wing asked time to report to the Trustees of the bank.

Col. Wing reported the result of his mission to the bank officers, and they unanimously thought that the $10,000 should be paid. As the appointment of a Receiver by the court was then pending, a decision was deferred until after the appointment had been made. The Receiver concurred with the Trustees, and obtained an order from the Court authorizing him to offer a reward, not exceeding $10,000, for the recovery of "certain assets set forth in his petition." The Receiver then gave Col. Wing $10,000, and authorized him to recover the property. On the 25th of October Col. Wing started for Philadelphia. The agent of the robbers was in New York, and Col. Wing and Detective Taggart agreed by telegraph to meet him in the St. Nicholas Hotel on the evening of the 27th. All parties were prompt, and a meeting was arranged for the same evening up town in a small back room, up two flights of stairs in a building occupied as a saloon. Col. Wing and Taggart were on time, and a few minutes afterward the robbers' agent entered with a package. He was not the same person whom Col. Wing had seen in Philadelphia, and evidently did not wish to be recognized. The collar of his heavy overcoat was drawn up around his neck, and his felt hat was down over his eyes. He held a white handkerchief to his face, which completely concealed his features. The $10,000 was in $100 bank notes. Taggart handed the money over, and the agent handed a package to Detective Taggart. The securities which the agent had promised to return were all there. Immediately after receiving the money the man went out of the room. The market value of the securities recovered is $50,000.

Iron versus Wood on the Farm.

"As I look at my iron field gates," says the celebrated English farmer, J. J. Mechi, "iron wire fences, iron sheep hurdles, supplied to me by my friend Garrett, thirty odd years ago, but all perfect now, and when I compare them with the rotten gate posts and other wooden matter of an equal age, I can only wonder that agriculture still runs in the old wooden rut. Iron tubs and iron barrows stand alike heat and cold—no cooperage and carpentering. The posts which support our sheds should, if of wood, have their feet placed within the socket of an iron pipe driven in the ground. I saw this admirably done at the Earl of Essex's, Cassiobury, where the lower end of unplaned fir poles rested in the socket of iron pipes (5s. each), firmly embedded in the soil. Pig troughs and drinking troughs for animals and poultry appear to be nearly everlasting, while the water in them is always acceptable. We find the large circular pig troughs very convenient in the sheep fold, for their weight and form prevents their being upset by the sheep, and the water lost. The temperature of the water is also slightly raised by the heated iron. I have seen lambs injured by drinking water immediately taken from a spring, at a temperature of about 48 deg., in hot weather. My twelve-iron rick frames (Garrett's patent) are worth as much as they were thirty odd years ago, when first put down—no rats. By the by, this reminds me that my practical friends sarcastically suggested thirty years ago that I should want no such frames, for I should never grow up enough to fill my new great barn. We evidently, on the score of profit, should pass more rapidly from the old wooden age to that of iron, coal and brick, with steam as a motive power. Who would have thought, forty years ago, of building iron ships?"

Somnambulism Extraordinary.

A curious case of somnambulism, says the London Echo, is reported by a correspondent at Calcutta, of which a khidmutgar in the employ of his friends is the subject. A little after midnight till nearly 2 o'clock in the morning this man, he says, begins chanting verse after verse of his Koran and of sacred hymns; repeats the divine precepts; criticises the shortness of time in this world, and the length of eternity in the next; and, finally, winds up with an unearthly howl or shriek. During all this time he is in the soundest of slumbers. And the only way to put a stop to this hullabaloo is to turn the man on his side; for, should any one awake him, he will just open his eyes for a minute, and if allowed to continue on the flat of his back, he will recommence his howling hymns.

BURNING OF VIRGINIA CITY.

Graphic Description of the Conflagration—Loss Estimated at $5,000,000.

A correspondent at Virginia City, Nevada, who witnessed the burning of that town on the 26th of October, gives the following graphic description of the conflagration and the scenes incident to it:

The greatest fire that has ever visited Virginia City has just spent it force, and the whole town from Taylor street north is in ashes. About daylight the alarm was given, the fire having broken out in a private dwelling on A street. A high wind was blowing at the time, and before the department could get at work many buildings were in ruins. With incredible rapidity the flames spread to B street, and soon it was apparent that the greater part of the city was doomed. The alarm was taken up by all the hoisting works in the city, and the shrill notes of steam-whistles and fire-bells, the howling of the wind, and the crackling of the flames made a perfect bedlam of sounds. The engines from Gold Hill were brought into service, and every available appliance used to check the fire. Within an hour from the time the first alarm was given, at least twenty dwelling-houses on A street, and the main business portion of B street were burned to the ground. The first building that succumbed on B street was Mooney's livery stable, a brick building with a wooden roof; all the horses and carriages had been removed.

After leaping across several small frame buildings the fire next took hold of the County Court-House, a large three-story brick edifice, in which were confined about fifteen prisoners. These were removed to an adjoining building, and subsequently liberated upon their own parole, as under the existing circumstances nothing else could be done with them. The east side of B street was soon enveloped in flames, and the fire was extending northward as fast as a high wind and a succession of wooden houses could carry it. The firemen were doing their utmost, but to no avail. People removed their effects into the street only to have them burned before they could be taken to a place of safety. While the fire was thus extending to the business heart of the town, it was also crawling up toward the base of Mount Davidson, destroying in its course the finest family residence in the city. On B street, the International Hotel, a four-story brick, was burning on the roof, and the jewelry manufactory of M. M. Frederick, on C street, was smoking, while at the same time the high wind was carrying cinders as large as one's hand over into the east side of C street, and presently a frame building in the rear of the Enterprise office was in flames. Thus did the fire approach so quickly from B to C street that business houses in the latter thoroughfare were considered safe until it was too late to save anything from them. The Enterprise Building was on fire so soon that the accountant's books alone were saved. The office of the Evening Chronicle was with its contents totally destroyed. The Footlight, published in the same building, was also a total loss. During the burning of these buildings, the fire was making rapid headway northward and eastward, and communication between the extremes of the city was cut off. Piper's Opera-House and adjacent buildings on D street were smoking hotly from the roof, and soon burst into a live flame. It was now the most exciting moment of the fire. From the start the flames seemed to approach directly the Consolidated Virginia hoisting works and the railroad depot, but now it was certain that unless something extraordinary was done the works and the large sixty-stamp mill must succumb. There were a few intervening buildings that had not yet taken fire, and giant powder was brought into use to destroy them. Explosion after explosion thundered, but the high wind and the great heat could not be overcome by powder even, and the roaring flames marched straight down E street and to the mines and the mills in their resistless course, sweeping everything before them, including the hoisting works and mill of the Consolidated Virginia, the new battery mill of the California, and the hoisting works of the Ophir mine.

The Virginia hoisting-shaft abuts on the railroad depot, and northeast from it are the hoisting works of the Ophir and Mexican. The hoisting works of the Consolidated Virginia were, at the time they were erected, the best appoined of any in the world. Attached to them were mechanical shops for every mechanical department connected with the mine the whole costing from $300,000 to $400,000. The new mill of the Consolidated Virginia was connected with the hoisting works by a railroad built upon woodwork with trestles, and the fire dashed along this for several hundred feet, till it reached the mill, which was a lumber-built structure, and therefore fell a rapid prey to the fire.

As the progress of the fire became so formidable the miners had been hoisted to the surface from every part of the works below, the shafts bulkheaded near the surface, and every precaution taken to save the lives of the men and as much property as possible. There is no doubt that, had the situation been properly taken in at the start, by the use of a few kegs of powder upon buildings that had not yet taken fire, a large portion of the city might have been saved. No correct estimate can yet be made of the losses, though they will probably reach $5,000,000.

A WEEK ago Monday Wm. Clifton, foreman of the gas works in East Saginaw, died suddenly. His sister, who had been keeping house temporarily for him, stepped out to the meat market and when she returned a few moments later he was dead. A post mortem examination was made, several of the best physicians in the city being present. The vital organs were healthy, and they were unable to understand the cause of death, or in fact why he should have died at all. After laboring all the week on the inquest the jury finally ceased and returned a verdict Saturday night that deceased came to his death by visitation of God, and from some cause to the jury unknown.

Remarkable Snake Story.

We are too veracious a chronicler to push up a snake story without a first-class voucher. This comes authenticated by our worthy countryman, E. Duncan Macnair, an ancient and consistent member of the P. E. Church in Tarboro. Gen. Bryan Grimes resides in Pitt county. Mosquitoes in that locality are a mite ferocious and bloodthirsty. As an antidote to these musical vampires fires are kindled in the yard at night. A little child of Gen. Grimes was playing, after supper, in the glare of the light, when a sudden scream from the child attracted the attention of the General. He rushed to the spot in time to rescue the little fellow from the fatal fang of a large rattlesnake, in the coil of attack ready to strike. The snake glided away in the darkness, and the General saw serpents of all assortments, sizes and varieties, in playful multitudes, running about in all directions. Some were going under the house, others crawling out. Such a convention of reptiles would have alarmed any but a brave and gallant soldier. But the situation required attention. So a council of war was held, consisting of the General and an old negro named Ned. Ned said, "I tell you, Marse Bryan, if you will kill a snake or two, and burn 'em, dem oders will all git from here." No sooner said than done; the General and old Ned readily slaughtered a few, and piled them on the glowing fagots. The smoke and odor commenced ascending and permeating the atmosphere. Soon a head could be seen here and there protruding from the holes, forked tongues flashing and eyes glittering. Then whole bodies appeared, and such a hegira of snakes was never witnessed before. In a short time "mother earth seemed to have swallowed up her warlike birth." Gen. Grimes has not been troubled with them since.—Tarboro (N. C.) Southerner.

The Sultan as a Financier.

Whatever may be said against the Sultan, says the New York Graphic, there is no question as to his capacity as a first-class financier. He has swindled the Christian nations which were foolish enough to keep him on his throne by force out of $900,000,000. He has sold bonds at a high rate of interest till it is impossible to borrow money to pay the interest any longer, and now he proposes to fund one half the interest for five years, which is a confession of bankruptcy and the first step toward repudiation. It is something marvelous, the way this sensual barbarian has succeeded in gulling the astute financiers of Christian Europe of hundreds of millions, and should he ever go out of the governing and borrowing business at Constantinople he would make a capital partner for Jay Gould, whose swindling capacities need fertilizing. It must be slightly humiliating, however, to English capitalists to reflect on their facility for being fleeced by foreigners, and semi-barbarians at that. A large portion of this vast Turkish debt is due to English people, and the refusal of the Sultan to pay interest has led to something of a panic in London. But the London banks are loaded with Egyptian paper, and Mexican bonds are piled up in stacks with the worthless Venezuelan securities. It is hard to understand why it is that the most practical people in the world, people who are made of solid, matter-of-fact material, are also the most easily deceived, and have been most tempted to part with their money for wild and impracticable schemes.

An Apt Repartee.

The frequency with which unreasonable complaints concerning the management of public business come to the different departments is very provoking to those officers, says a Washington correspondent, and some of their replies to these complaints are worthy of wits and philosophers. The other day a Postmaster down South complained of the delay in transportation of mails across the Gulf, and in the body of the complaint was a voluntary admission that the delay was occasioned by bad weather. The document came to the hands of one of Col. Bangs' assistants, who is noted for his aptness at repartee. He read the papers over carefully, to be sure he was right then he wrote the following indorsement:

"If your case is as represented within, it should have been referred to Almighty God instead of the Postmaster General. Respectfully &c."

Gained 15 Pounds of Flesh.

SOUTH BERWICK, Me., Jan. 17, 1872.

H. R. STEVENS, Esq.:

Dear Sir—I have had Dyspepsia in its worst form for the last ten years, and have taken hundreds of dollars' worth of medicine without obtaining any relief. In September last I commenced taking the VEGETINE, since which time my health has steadily improved. My food digests well, and I have gained fifteen pounds of flesh. There are several others in this place taking the VEGETINE, and all have obtained relief.

Yours truly,
THOMAS E. MOORE,
Overseer of the Card Room, Portsmouth Co.'s Mills.

DYSPEPSIA.

SYMPTOMS.—Want of appetite, rising of food and wind from the stomach, acidity of the stomach, heartburn, dryness and whiteness of the tongue in the morning, sense of distension in the stomach and bowels, sometimes rumbling and pain; costiveness, which is occasionally interrupted by diarrhea; paleness of the urine. The mouth is clammy, or has a sour or bitter taste. Other frequent symptoms are waterbrash, palpitation of the heart, headache, and disorders of the senses, as seeing double, &c. There is general debility, languor and aversion to motion, dejection of the spirits, disturbed sleep, and frightful dreams.

Feel Myself a New Man.

NATICK, Mass., June 1st, 1872.

Mr. H. R. STEVENS:

Dear Sir—Through the advice and earnest persuasion of Rev. E. S. Best, of this place, I have been taking VEGETINE for Dyspepsia, of which I have suffered for years. I have used only two bottles, and already feel myself a new man.

Respectfully, DR. J. W. CARTER.

A Source of Great Anxiety.

My daughter has received great benefit from the use of VEGETINE. Her declining health was a source of great anxiety to all of her friends. A few bottles of the VEGETINE restored her health, strength and appetite.

WHAT I KNOW ABOUT VEGETINE.

SOUTH BOSTON, May 9, 1870.

H. R. STEVENS:

Dear Sir—I have had considerable experience with the VEGETINE. For dyspepsia, general debility and impure blood, the VEGETINE is superior to anything which I have ever used. I commenced taking VEGETINE about the middle of last winter, and after using a few bottles it entirely cured me of dyspepsia, and my blood never was in so good condition as at the present time. It will afford me pleasure to give any further particulars relative to what I know about this good medicine, to any one who will call or address me at my residence, 386 Athens street.

Very respectfully, MONROE PARKER,
386 Athens Street.

NEW and BEAUTIFUL INSTRUMENT.

THE Piano-Harp CABINET ORGAN.

An exquisite combination adding to the capacity of the organ much of that of the piano-forte and harp. With a double-reed organ, complete and perfect in every respect, is combined a new instrument, the PIANO-HARP, the tones of which are produced by steel tongues or bars, rigidly set in steel plates affixed to a sounding-box, and struck by hammers, as in the piano-forte. The tones are of a pure, silvery, bell-like quality, very beautiful in combination or alternation with the organ tones. The organ may be used alone, and is in every respect as complete and perfect an organ as without the PIANO-HARP, or may be used with the PIANO-HARP; the latter may be used separately or in combination with any or all the stops of the organ, to which it adds greatly in vivacity, life and variety, adapting it to a much wider range of music.

Upon its invention and introduction, about a year since, this new instrument was received with so much favor that the demand greatly exceeded the manufacturers' utmost ability to supply; so that they have had no occasion to advertise it extensively. Having now perfected facilities for a large supply, they offer it to the public with confidence.

[illegible] with drawings and full descriptions, free. MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN CO., 154 Tremont St., BOSTON; 25 Union Square, NEW YORK; 80 and 82 Adams Street, CHICAGO.

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS, please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN INDIANA, NOV. 18, 1875.

Good people will rejoice over the defeat of Hessing in Chicago, and we can't say we went into spasms over the election in Detroit, as Sabbath beer drinking was the issue those in favor being the winners.

The movement for the erection of a monument to the dead soldiers of Indiana is assuming definite shape. At a meeting of the committee, held at Indianapolis on Wednesday last, it was decided to call meetings in every county in the State on the 4th of December and a State convention on the 7th to determine the style and location of the monument. As a matter of State pride, not more then a tribute to the memery of the thousands of Indiana soldiers who laid down their lives in defense of their country, the monument should be pushed to completion at the earliest possible time.

Of the $3,500,000,000 collected by the Republican administrations during the last ten years, nearly twice as much as the whole national debt, an amount so amazingly large as to make the head swim in trying to comprehend its immensity. Nearly every dollar has been spent. This is the work of the party in power that is called the party of progress, the party of liberty, the party of honesty, the party that asks an extension of power If the people feel like paying that enormous amount again during the next ten years, let them favor Republicanism, and help fetter the nation in utter financial ruin.

In Pennsylvania the Republican party under Hartranft has a plurality as officially declared, of 11,669. This is not a fact, which ought to render the Republicans very confident of carrying the State in next year's election. Apart from the inflation dogma of their platform, the Democrats labored under serious disabilities. Their candidate for Governor was a man comparatively unknown, and after his nomination he refused to resign his office as a Judge of the Supreme Court, and appear before the people as a candidate for Governor ought to do. This fact weakened the democracy seriously in the contest and, indeed, it would alone be sufficient to account for their defeat. Had Wm. Bigler been their candidate, it is pretty certain that the official returns would have been of a different character.

A survey of the elections just passed is much more hopeful then it was, says the Fort Wayne Sentinel midst of the first reports. Not only [illegible] the republicans led to get back two of their states,—New York with the largest electoral vote in the country and Wisconsin, which has always been republican,—but they have failed to approximate their old time majorities in those states they have carried, leaving them hanging uncertain in the balance, and in a condition to be brought over by steadfastness and a unity of purpose in the democratic party. The republicans everywhere in the late elections cast their full vote. In Pennsyvania they cast more then their full vote; the Philadelphia ring was as efficient in its work as usual. The republican party also gained votes on the local issues in the various states which they will fail to get on national issues. The congressional elections are the fairest test of a party's strength in national affairs, and referring to the democratic congressional majorities of last year and the vote in Mississippi this year, there has not been sufficient change to overcome these majorities in a national vote.

The theory of republican papers like the Chicago Times, that the recent election "lays out" the democratic party rests upon very frail support. The democratic party this year has had just enough discipline to teach it that it must make a proper use of success, but not enough to change the result of the presidential election of 1876, full forecast by the congressional victories of last year. The regaining of some ground lost by the republicans is not by such majorities as to justify their faith they can hold it; while its loss has shown the democrats that they must not trifle with their power. The result of these state elections will keep the democratic congress well in hand It will restrain any tendancy that may crop out to go into the subsidy business set up by the republican party, and which was one of the main causes of its decline and fall. The disciplining of the late elections, much less serious than we first supposed, will cure any wild inflation ideas that might otherwise have been forced upon the party to its destruction in 1876. The effort of the Chicago Times (with it evidently hopes will be taken up by the other republican newspapers) to induce gentlemen like Tilden. Bigelow, Church. Gaston, Bayard, and Kerr to join the republican party is just as ridiculous as is in the Times to class Mr. Hendricks among the inflationists. This is simply dishonest The democratic party has not had so much life in twenty years as it has to day, and its unity will grow closer and closer from now on.

Last Thursday evening our German friends had a social dance in the second story of Hebel's new brick, wherein the Fadderland of our city was largely represented. There was no end to waltzs and larger beer, which, of course, kept things in a lively state until morning.—The supper was dished up by John Hebel in grand style.

The following matter was received by our P. M. on a postal card:

"The Butler Dramatic Association" present their thanks to Messrs. Yandes, Leasure, Mays, Musicians and the Auburn Dramatic Association, for the kindness extended to them during their visit to Auburn.

W. P. Carpenter, Mang.
Butler, Nov. 11, 1875.

Auburn stands alone among the wide-awake and progressive towns in the matter of protection against fire.—Something ought to be done. Will our citizens submit to a tax of 25 cents on each $100 valuation for fire purposes?

The Mason House at Indianapolis, has been nicely improved by the erection of a large addition thereto and the name changed to Grand Central. It is now the finest hotel in the State and is being run by Col. Baker and his polite clerks in the best of style.

We regret exceedingly that we did not have enough papers last week to supply our regular subscribers. By some great mistake, the first of the kind in five years, there was not the usual number printed. We are sorry for this and will take particular pains to prevent a repetition, but yet it may occur again in the next five years.

We regreat to announce that Dr. J. J. Littlefield left last Thursday for Adrain Mich., where will engage in his profession. The doctor leaves many warm friends here, and a reputation as a physician that is without blemish. We trust that he will meet with success in his new field of labor and reap that reward he so eminently merits.

We have received several answers to the problem given last week, one of which we give, the others being the same.

Here's another out, a regular doubled and twisted one. If a dog can eat a sheep in seven eights of an hour, a wolf in three forths of an hour, and a bear in three-fifths of an hour, how long will it take them all to finish it after the dog has eaten half an hour?

Required—the time in minutes.

A Philomathic Institute will be organized this week, for the benefit of those who cannot attend school. Mr. A. J. Little is at the head of the movement, and has a large room where all can meet once a week. Literary and scientific lectures and demonstrations will be given each week by our best talent. It will fill the place of a literary society, something much needed in town.

The Defiance "Democrat" takes in the situation when it says the Woolen Mills at Auburn, Indiana, were destroyed by fire on Sunday night. Loss $15,000; no insurance. Auburn is one of the towns that does not see the necessity of having a fire department. Two fires in that place within the past six weeks cost more money than the price of four good steamers.

Accident.—The other day on South Main-st., some little boys were jumping, from a street-crossing into a ditch. All were enjoying themselves finely, until one little fellow overrating his activity, jumped from the middle of the crossing His heels just missed the edge of it, and he came down on his seat-of-comfort like a keg of nails. He jumped up, licked his little brother for laughing at him, and struck a bee-line for home, yelling like a Comanche Indian.

Excited.—The other evening at the fire, one man had two buckets. He stood turning water from one into the other (yelling for water all the time.) Some boys seeing that the old man was excited carried seven or eight pails of water and set them down at his feet, telling him when they were empty they would bring him more. The old man began to think what he was doing. He kicked his buckets over and started for home, vowing that was the last fire he was ever going to attend until the town had a fire engine.

It was down on the Eel River road.—A steer jumped from a car while in motion and the animal was caught under the wheels throwing the car and caboose off of the track, and they went bumping along on the ties. A newly wedded pair were on that caboose, and they became terribly frightened Every thing was confusion and the groom, clasping his adored in his arms and cried out, "We'll die together, won't we, Dollie," and just then the car stopped. If you want to see a brakeman grin on that road, just say, "We'll die together'

There was a Texas cattle dealer in town the other day. He claimed to have six carloads of Texas cattle on the track at the Saginaw depot, and he stood the hotel and several soloons off accordingly Joe Link wanted to see such a large lot of these cattle, and therefore accompanied the dealer to the depot. They were not there, however, and fearing they had been shipped by the Eel River road they proceeded to that depot. Not finding them there he suggested that they were doubtless at the Junction. It was a cold day, and Joe's enthusiasm gave out, and the dealer came pretty near getting a thrashing.

Our neighbor at Garrett, the "News," is on its ear already, and having a pretty long ear, it brays accordingly. It calls itself a Democratic paper of the true blue kind. Sudden conversions are never permanent. When two old-timed Republicans go into a good Democratic community and start a Democratic paper, and call it a hard money organ without a proper appreciation of what that implies, they want to be careful about showing their ear marks. There is no campaign in this State at present but when there is, it will be time enough for our erudite neighbor to get on his hobby. The "News" should go a little slow, and learn to peddle.

So superior in workmanship and style, is the stock displayed in our house, that competition with other Clothiers is out of the question. Our trade and customers acknowledge this fact, that our clothes fit better, are much cheaper, and in every way equal to the best custom work, really making us competititors of Merchant Tailors. Especial attention is called to the nobby line of Worsted Diagonal Overcoats, which we are selling to the "toniest" trade in the city. Study your own interest and deal with

Sam, Pete & Max, Star Clothing House,

Fort Wayne

Accident.

Last Monday afternoon while Samuel Brandon was engaged at his work in the Stave Factory, his coat sleeve was caught by a cog-wheel and his arm drawn between two cogs, stopping the machine instantly. He was held fast until the belts were taken off and the wheels sprung sufficient to release him. During this interval, it is said, he never uttered a cry, and when dressing the wound he stood as calm and cool as if, apparently, nothing had happened. The arm was fearfully mangled, the flesh torn off in several places, but fortunately no bones were broken. By a little care and attention he may soon have the use of it again. He was a hard-working, industrious boy, about 15 years of age, a son of Peter Bradon, jr.

Amusements.

The Butler Dramatic Company, presented "The Drunkards' Warning," at Ensley's hall, on Wednesday evening of last week, to a fair audience, considering the short notice given. We can say truly that for an amateur troup it was well rendered and gave entire satisfaction. The lady characters were well sustained by Miss Worth and Maxwell, making happy hits and gaining frequent applauses. The boys also did well, Tip and Smash bringing down the house several times.

The ladies sang a duet "The Boston Fire," which was so well received, that Miss Maxwell was compelled for an "encore," to sing "Down where the Woodbine Twineth."

The beautiful Cantata of Queen Esther is being rehearsed by our local singers, and will be presented in gorgeous costumes in due time.

Noticing the completion of the new jail, the Courier remarked that without doubt it is one of the best constructed buildings in the country for the money invested. We are glad to note this evidence that Tom has concluded at last that the structure is not going to be a disgrace to the county.—[Waterloo Press.

We had indulged in the hope that Baxter would show up a little more fair and honorable, since his assuming entire control of the "Press" but the "true inwardness" of that man is bound to come to the surface, and you can't make a horse out of a donkey. He wishes to give out the impression in the above, that we were of the opinion that our jail was going to be a disgrace to the county. We never thought so much less expressed ourselves so in the Courier. We were opposed to its location on the public square, and not against its construction. We knew that Charley was meaner than a violinist's female dog, but then we didn't think him quite so thin.

Breaking a cow to Milk.

The other day Mr. Samuel Smithers living on Ensley Avenue, went to a sale and bought a nice young cow. The next thing was to break her to milk. The Smithers' family started for the barnyard, some with ropes, others with barrel hoops to hold the cow fast. He caught her and put the hoop over her knees, got one of the girls to hold the cow by the horns while he milked. But the hoop broke and the cow whisked her tail in Smither' face and started on the full jump around the yard again. All his neighbors gave him their plans. At last he run her through a mud puddle into a corner, formed by the hog pen and fence. Smithers grabed a rail and placed one end on the fence and the other on the pen and leaned against it. This time he thought he had her foul.—He sent his girl into the corner to milk while he held the rail. The cow kicked the girl over, wheeled around and jumped against the rail, knocking Smithers heels over head into the mud-puddle—Smithers gathered himself up and started for the house to change his clothes, all the time swearing vengence on the cow and all her posterity.

Stop that Cough.

"No pulmonary complaint however obstinate, can resist the healing influence of Dr. Morris' Syrup of Tar, Wild Cherry and Horehound.—Nothing that we have ever sold acts so promptly and effectually in coughs, colds, hoarseness, sore throat, asthma and all diseases of the throat lungs and chest, leading to consumption. It is a certain cure for Hooping Cough and Croup. Contains no opium and is pleasant to take.—Cough worn victims whose lungs are racked and torn with paroxyims that threatened to choke them, find speedy relief in its use. Trial size 10 cents. Ask for Dr. Morris' Syrup take no other. F. E. Davenport Druggist.

Catarrh.—If you would avoid being rendered deaf, or unfit to mingle in society, on account of foul and nauseating discharges from gangrenous ulcers in the head, use Dr. Detchon's celebrated Catarrh Remedy. It is the greatest cure and control for the hideous destroyer, the world ever saw. It will save every life threatened by it. It immediately arrests its progress, and if perseveringly used, will never disappoint in a cure. Go to Davenport's Drug Store, and get a sample bottle free. Sept. 30 y

Killinger—Segner—At Lent House Waterloo, last Monday evening by Justice Long, Mr. Franklin Killinger and Miss Clara Segner.

Frank is a good boy, and we are glad he has won the charming Miss Clara for his bride. We have taken off our hat to say that we wish our happy friends, a rattlin' good time down the meandering ways of life. May they live long and prosper.

A little incident occured the other day that reminded us of the valient deeds of Don Quixote. Two of our young men thought to surprise several young ladies of their acquaintance, who were in the oyster restaurant one evening last week. There were several gentlemen eating oysters at the same time. Whack, came a handful of pebbles against the window, and some of them went clear through. Thereupon our gentlemen rallied forth, in search of the desperadoes, valient and brave in the defense of lovely woman. There were no windmills to tackle, but there was a small out house, back of the tannery that narrowly escaped demolition. Deadly weapons such as doubled barreled hoss pistols and toad stickers, were brought forth with a grand flourish, and warriors rushed into the midst of the fray with a valor only equaled by a Spartan band. Monster beasts attacked them but they threw them off as a feather. At last a report was heard away around in behind somebody's barn, and then their wrath was appeased. The boys found out afterwards it was all a joke.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1875.

GOSSIP OF THE DAY.

A PROMINENT Democratic member of Congress, who claims to have carefully looked over the ground and canvassed the matter thoroughly, says the election of Mr. Kerr to the Speakership of the next House is "as certain as any event of like character in the future."

THERE is a degree of satisfaction in he news that the wretch LaPage, arrested for the murder of Josie Langmaid, in New Hampshire, has been identified. A blacker scoundrel never crawled upon the earth. The murder was one of the most heartless and horrible in the long catalogue of crime.

THE following stanza from a poem in one of the November magazines is supposed to be a delicate tribute to Francis E. Spinner, late Treasurer of the United States:

He wrote and wrote, but could not make a name;
Then cursed his fate and called the world to blame—
The world, that knew not genius when it came.

THE Internal Revenue Department is constantly bringing to light fresh frauds in the distillery business. The discoveries of fraud among the old records that are constantly being made is the best possible evidence of the efficiency of the system at present in operation in this branch of the special service. Let the good work go on.

LIEUT. FRED COLLINS, of the United States Navy, commander of the expedition that made the recent survey of the route for the proposed inter-oceanic canal across the Isthmus of Darien, has reported and furnished some estimates of the cost of the work. The distance of the canal in a straight line is thirty miles, and the work will cost a total sum of $105,000,000.

THE dispatch from Lima, Peru, giving the result of the Peruvian elections illustrates the growth of telegraphic facilities. That dispatch was the first ever sent from that city, and it went a long distance to reach this country. It crossed the Andes, passed under the Atlantic from Brazil to Portugal, and returned to this continent by way of London and Newfoundland.

LOUIS and Wm. Renk, two young wretches, aged 17 and 15 years, treated their mother in a shameful and unnatural manner, in New York city, the other day. During the absence of their father they drove their younger brothers into a room, and, after locking the doors, presented pistols and dirk knives at the old lady, and robbed her of her jewelry and pocketbook. They then threatened to kill her and their brothers if they attempted to prevent them from making their escape. They have been arrested.

THE Herzegovinian rebellion is again assuming a grave aspect. The defeat of the Turks at Zubei, and the report of the Consular Commission that the Porte cannot restore order, attest the strength and vitality of the insurrection. The significant attitude of Russia calls forth from the London Times a declaration that England is not prepared to engage in armed intervention. It seems probable that Turkey will be obliged to grant to the disaffected province something more substantial than the promised reforms.

JOHN KING, of Tennessee, is very busy asking questions about what has taken place during the last thirteen years. He had a farm in Tennessee in 1862, and the soldiers of both armies made themselves cordially at home on his premises. So he removed with all his produce to a cave in the Cumberland Mountains. A storm threw down a rock which closed the mouth of the cave. Therein he lived for thirteen years, in the dark, eating from his produce and drinking from a spring. The other day a railroad company, blasting for a tunnel, blasted him out.

TWO MURDERERS, Standerman and Dolan, are to be executed at the Tombs, New York, Dec. 17—the first named for the killing of Miss Siedenbaum, who refused to marry him, and Dolan for the murder of Noe, a brush merchant, whose store the prisoner broke into one Sunday morning about three months ago. On the 17th of December three colored men named Weston, Thompson, and Ellis, will be hanged at the same place for the murder of a poor peddler at West Farms, in Westchester county, N. Y., a few weeks previous to their arrest and conviction. Evidently hanging is not played out in New York.

THE official total net revenue of the government for the last fiscal year was $288,000,051, distributed thus: Customs, $157,167,722; internal revenue; $110,007,493; lands, $1,413,640; miscellaneous sources, $19,411,195. The total net expenditures were $274,623,393; divided thus: Customs, $19,713,707; internal revenue, $5,188,513; Interior Department, $4,957,535; Treasury proper, $33,643,262; diplomatic, $3,199,290; quarterly salaries, $564,517; judiciary, $3,808,945; not civil and miscellaneous expenditures, $71,070,702; War Department, $41,120,645; Navy Department, $21,497,626; Interior Department, $37,840,873; public debt interest, $103,093,544.

THE Jews as a class are probably the most peaceable, non-combative people in the world. There are, however, exceptions, among which are to be classed Joseph Goldman and Moses Piskall, partners in a New York jewelry store. This duo of chivalric Hebrews had a quarrel about a business transaction, and, being unable to settle the dispute amicably, had recourse to the code duello. The meeting had a most tragic termination. The parties met in the loft of a building in Delancey street, armed with revolvers, and proceeded to pepper each other in genuine Buffalo Bill style. Goldman received two bullets through the head, and was instantly killed. Piskall was shot through the right eye and mortally wounded. There were no witnesses to this singular and terrible combat.

SOME days ago a speculative Pennsylvanian wrote to Assistant Postmaster-General Barber, offering to give him $25 a quarter provided he would send his partner, a country Postmaster $400 in postage stamps every three months to be sold outside of the office, so that the Postmaster could, by an increased sale of stamps, increase he salary of his office. Mr. Barber considered the tempting proposition, but concluded to remain true to his oath, and be guided by his convictions of duty, so he positively refused to accept the fabulous bribe, and sent the tempter the following:

"The department can make no arrangements, for or without a bonus, to supply you with stamps for sale either by yourself or your partner in business, the Postmaster, and if the latter is discovered selling stamps in the manner you suggest, his official tenure will be of very short duration. The innate dishonesty of your proposition suggests the propriety of keeping watch on his actions. I inclose copy of the regulations regarding the sale of stamps."

H. B. CLAFLIN & Co., the well-known New York dry goods merchants, have been indicted for smuggling silks....Interest in Moody and Sankey's revival meetings in Brooklyn is on the decline, and the attendance is growing smaller each day....Lewis G. Phillips & Co., cap manufacturers of New York, have failed for a heavy amount....At a business meeting of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, last week, the names of Deacon West and Mrs. Francis D. Moulton were dropped from the roll of membership on the ground of continued absence. Mrs. Moulton protested through her counsel, Roger A. Pryor, stating that her absence was an enforced one, caused by the crime of adultery committed by Henry Ward Beecher, which she knew to be true through confessions and other evidence. She declared her disposition to discharge all the duties devolving on her as a member, that are consistent with with her knowledge of the adultery of the pastor and his false swearing with regard to it.

THE committee of reverends charged with investigating Beecher promise to do their work thoroughly. They propose first to scrutinize closely the evidence brought out in the scandal trial, and then to search for new evidence. The following are named as the committee: Rev. William M. Taylor, of the Broadway Tabernacle, New York; Rev. Dr. Wm. Ives Buddington, of the Clinton Avenue Church, Brooklyn; Rev. Profs. Parsons and Martin, of the New York Theological Seminary, and Rev. Charles H. Everest, of the Church of the Puritans, Brooklyn.... The undertakers of Williamsburgh, N. Y., are greatly excited about the queer operations of a coffin-maker in that city. It has been discovered that he was in the habit of robbing cemeteries of the coffins deposited in newly-made graves. His plan was to visit a graveyard at night, remove the coffins from the rough box cases, take the corpse out of the coffin, put it in the box and refill the grave. The coffins thus procured would be taken to the city and sold to some undertaker. The offender, whose name is Wm. Blake, has been arrested. ....During the performance in a New York theater, the other evening, Superintendent Jenkins, of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, raided upon the stage and took in charge the little trapeze performer known as Leo. The wee acrobat, who is about 6 years old, was in the act of walking a tight rope with a balancing pole at the time of the raid. When it became known, however, what was the object of the whole affair, the audience gave expressions of their satisfaction and sympathy in a burst of applause.

THE people of Saratoga county, N. Y., are excited over the discovery of the defalcation of Henry R. Mann, who has been the Treasurer of the county for the last fifteen years. THE experiment of running a fast mail train from New York to Pittsburgh was inaugurated on the 9th inst., and would have been successful but for an accident that happened near Philadelphia. Mr. Douglas, Chief Engineer of the Pennsylvania railroad, who was superintending the trip, leaned out of a window so far that his head struck a post standing near the track. He was instantly killed. A stop was made, when the train proceeded on its way, making the run through to Pittsburgh in eleven hours and thirty minutes. The locomotive showed no signs of giving out, and the officials are confident that regular trips can be made as proposed.

THE Oceanic Hotel and its cottages, located on Star Island, a summer resort on the New Hampshire sea coast, have been destroyed by fire. THE United States Grand Jury at Chicago has found about sixty indictments against parties charged with criminal violations of the internal revenue laws relating to whisky. Most of those implicated reside in Chicago, and many of them are prominent citizens....Mrs. Smith, of Brookfield, Mo., was handling a loaded gun the other day, when the weapon was discharged, the load passing through the body of her little daughter and producing almost instant death. ...The Northwestern Railroad Company has purchased and will hereafter operate the Rockford, Rock Island and St. Louis road....The National Gold Bank of San Francisco has gone into voluntary liquidation. Creditors will be paid in full.

A HORRIBLE murder occurred at Springfield, Mo., lately. A woman named Mary Collins went into the room where her husband, James Collins, was sleeping, and seizing an ax split his skull in two, killing him instantly. She then attempted to murder her little daughter, but the child made her escape to a neighbor's. ....Elder Morgan, an apostle of the Mormon religion, appointed by Brigham Young to evangelize Illinois, Kentucky and Tennessee, began his "work of grace" at Bloomington, Ill., last Sunday, by addressing a large meeting upon the "Tenets of the Mormon Faith." DISTINCT shocks of earthquake were felt in different sections of Kansas early on the morning of the 8th inst. The vibrations were from east to west, and were accompanied by a heavy, dull, rumbling sound. Buildings were considerably shaken, and the inmates, in some cases, much alarmed, but no damage was done.

THE whisky ring throughout the West is thoroughly demoralized. In Chicago nearly all the distillers have been indicted and will soon be brought to trial. The evidence against them is said to be of a very positive character, and cannot fail to convict. The St. Louis ring is completely bursted. Some of the most prominent citizens have been indicted, including William McKee, of the Globe-Democrat, Constantine Maguire, late Revenue Assessor, and others. They have retained Dan Voorhees and Ben Butler for the defense. A review of the operations of the St. Louis ring shows that during the last few years they have defrauded the government out of at least a million dollars annually. At Milwaukee a large number of distillers are under indictment, and the prosecutions will be pushed vigorously.

THERE is no truth in the report that the Northwestern Railroad Company has purchased the Rockford, Rock Island and St. Louis road. ....Miss Jane Coombs, one of the most popular comediennes at present on the American stage, is playing a very successful engagement at McVicker's Chicago Theater. Crowded houses nightly witness her renditions of the heroine in the great historical spectacle of "The Jewess."

THE telegraph furnishes a synopsis of the statement of Neal O'Haley, one of the two survivors of the Pacific disaster. He says: "About 250 people were on board. When the shock occurred I ran on deck. Everything was in confusion, and the passengers crowding on the hurricane deck. The ship fell off into the trough of the sea. I saw a long vessel under sail, which they said struck the steamer. The passengers crowded into life-boats, against the commands of the officers. I, with the chief engineer, got the port boat forward into the water; got fifteen women and six men in her. She was capsized by the rolling of the ship. I saw none of them afterward. I supported myself by a floating skylight about fifteen minutes; then got on a portion of the hurricane deck, with some eight others. On looking for the steamer, I found she had disappeared, leaving a floating mass of human beings. The screams for help were fearful, but soon ceased, and we were alone on the raft. There were the Captain, second mate, second cook, and four passengers, including a young lady. At 1 o'clock next morning it blew a gale from the southeast, the sea making a clean breach over the raft. We lashed ourselves on. About 4 a. m. the sea washed overboard the Captain, second mate, the lady, and another passenger. About 9 the second cook died. It cleared up about 4 p. m. I saw land fifteen miles distant, and a piece of the wreck with two or more on it. About 5 p. m. another man died. On the morning of the 6th, 4 p. m., a large empty box floated near me, and I got it on the raft for shelter. I slept sound that night for several hours. On the morning of the 7th, at 3 o'clock, I was rescued by the cutter."

THE SOUTH.

THE steamship City of Waco was burned in the gulf, near Galveston, Tex., on the morning of the 9th inst. She had just arrived from New York, and was anchored outside the harbor. The fire caught in a large quantity of oil which composed part of the cargo, and spread rapidly. The passengers and crew, consisting of fifty persons, put off in the steamer's boats. The wind at the time was blowing a gale, and, as at last accounts nothing had been heard of them, it is thought every soul perished. The City of Waco was built at Chester, Pa., was almost new, and was valued at $250,000. The cargo was worth $10,000.

THE Treasury Department has received information of the conviction of eighteen persons at Abingdon, Va., accused of illicit distilling in that neighborhood. Over fifty additional arrests have also been made for illicit distilling in the Virginia mountain region, and frauds against the government there are in a fair way to be completely checked, as they have already been in the West....The wife, daughter and son of Charles Massey, living near Fordsville, Ky., recently died from the effects of arsenic poison, which some fiend threw into the family well.

JEFF DAVIS has been made President of the American Department of the Mississippi Valley Society, of London, England. The object of this movement is to direct attention to the development of the commercial, agricultural, and mineral resources of the valley of the Mississippi....It now seems probable that no boats left the steamer City of Waco, burned off Galveston. The testimony of those on board of other vessels riding at anchor near the Waco is unanimously against the assumption that several boats left the wreck. Explosion after explosion was heard, supposed to be a part of the cargo of oil, while the steamer was burning, but no lifeboats were seen. It is probable that the whole list of passengers and crew perished. Some of them were seen floating in the water and crying for assistance, but no aid could be extended on account of the boisterous sea that was running.

A Washington telegram states that a large number of special agents are employed in investigating frauds in the pension business. These frauds are chiefly in the West, and there is reason to believe that the total amount of money which the government is defrauded of annually by this means is an enormous sum. One of the special agents fixes the sum as high as $2,000,000. He thinks that amount of money is illegally paid out to persons claiming to be pensioners.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says it is now certain that three topics, at least, will be largely dwelt upon by the President in his coming message to Congress. These three topics will embrace the public school question, the finances, and the condition of affairs in Cuba. It is said he will urge, as he has done heretofore, the justice of recognizing the rights of the belligerent Cubans; will come out strongly against the demands of Catholicism; and will take advanced ground in favor of an immediate return to specie payments....The Postoffice Department has ruled that where a postal card is to be sent through the mails a second time, a cent stamp is not enough to secure its transmission. It must carry letter postage.

A CONSTANTINOPLE dispatch says the Russian Ambassador has had a long interview with the Sultan. He represented to him the maladministration of the country, the discontent of the population, the dilapidation of the finances, and the consequent urgency of reform.

THE members of the Franco-American Union in Paris gave a grand banquet at the Hotel du Louvre recently. Two hundred guests sat down to the table, and M. de Laboulaye, the distinguished jurisconsult and member of the Assembly, presided. Speeches were delivered by Minister Washburn and Col. THE New York Herald prints a telegraphic synopsis of Henry M. Stanley's latest letters from the interior of Africa. The intrepid explorer had several conflicts with slave-dealers on Victoria Lake. On one occasion he was attacked by 100 natives, armed with spears, in thirteen canoes, who were repulsed after a severe fight. Three natives were killed. He arrived at the Utesal hunting-camp at Masyura, April 12, where the King directed extraordinary festivities and displays. One feature was a naval review on the lake of eighty-four canoes, manned by 2,800 men. On the second day, in addition to the naval manœuvres, there were races in which eighty-four canoes were engaged, each propelled by thirty oarsmen, the King leading the fleet personally in the presence of a great crowd of on-lookers, including the 300 wives of the King. On the third day there was bird-shooting and target-practice by 3,000 troops, and on the fourth day he returned to Mtesas, the capital. The King has 2,000,000 of subjects. DANGERS OF THE DEEP.

Story of a Castaway—Terrible Picture of Suffering and Starvation.

The story of the sufferings of Antonio Maximo, the only survivor of the crew of the bark Toronto, recently wrecked in the West Indies, is almost too terrible for belief. Maximo was picked up by the brig Centaur and brought to New York. He states that the Toronto was a bark which sailed from Glasgow, Scotland, about four months ago, with a cargo of coal. There were fourteen men on board. The name of the first mate was Smith. This is the only name Maximo could remember. From Glasgow they sailed to Madeira, the voyage taking a month and a half. From Madeira they proceeded to Navassa, an island in the West Indies, where they took on board a cargo. Soon after leaving Navassa, a severe storm arose, and they buoyed to anchor. At about 11 o'clock at night the foremast broke off quite close to the deck. They cut away the mast, and, an hour after, the mid-mast gave way, leaving only the mizzen-mast. The Captain was below sleeping, at the time, and one of the men, discovering land close by, called out to the first mate (Smith), "Look! There's the land!" What land this was, Maximo did not know. The Captain was then called and ordered a boat to be lowered. There were three boats, but one was sufficient to carry all the crew. The sea was running high at the time, and the storm raged furiously. One of the boats was put out and the Captain and crew all got into it. It was, however, immediately filled with water, and seven of the men were washed into the sea, and the violence of the waves soon carried the boat out of the sight of them. There were then seven men in the boat, but no provisions. Maximo could give no intelligent account of how they fared in the boat; but, as far as could be ascertained, they drifted for days without food and without water. Water was obtained by spreading a sail during rains and heavy dews at night. The boat, which is on the Centaur, shows where it has been scratched by the men, as one of the sailors on board suggested, for the purpose of eating the dirt that clung to the sides. The sufferings of the men must have been intense. Maximo describes the men as walking about looking out at the sea and sky. Some, driven to desperation by the sufferings they endured, jumped into the sea. Some lay on their backs, with their longing faces turned to Heaven, and so died. One by one they threw themselves into the sea, or were thrown by their companions, until all had been lost but himself. From this man's account, it is clear that the men lost their reason. He ate seaweed to sustain life. He caught a sea bird occasionally and sometimes a fish, but here his reason seems to have wandered. He says he was twenty-five days in the boat, but cannot tell how he measured the time. When found by the Centaur, the boat was drifting helplessly along, with Maximo reclining against the side, his head leaning over his bosom. He could not speak nor move. They hoisted him into the vessel by means of a rope, and by slow degrees he recovered. Some birds were found on board the boat, which was also taken on board. Maximo is now well enough in health, and does not seem unintelligent. He tells his story with an evident desire for truthfulness, but on important questions he is very deficient.

THE FIJIAN PLAGUE.

Forty Thousand Deaths in Four Months—Burying People Alive.

Further information from Fiji conveys still darker accounts of the plague which has recently passed over the new colony. A resident of long standing, writing to a Victoria contemporary, says: "The death rate is not yet made up, but the probability is that 40,000 Fijians died during the four months' plague. The native population of Fiji is now about one-third only of what it was when I landed here about twenty-five years ago." The accounts given of the magnitude of the disaster are less harrowing than those of the sufferings of the victims. "Very few died of the measles, the majority dying of subsequent disease in the form of dysentery, congestion of the lungs, etc. Want of nourishment, or starvation, carried off thousands." We are told that "all work was suspended for two months. You could pass through whole towns without meeting any one in the streets, which were soon completely covered with grass. Entering a house, you would find men, women, and children lying down indiscriminately, some just attacked, some still in agony, and some dying. Some who were strong enough attempted suicide, and not always unsuccessfully." We are further told that "as the scourge became more permanent, some four or five were buried together in one grave, and generally without religious service. In some cases the dead were buried in the earthen floors of the houses. The burials were hurried, and the probability is that some were buried alive. In many instances the husband, wife, and children all died. In one village all the women died, and in another all the men." It is interesting to read of the different mental effects produced by the torture of the disease. It is not surprising that "some made fruitless appeals" to their ancient god. Some inland tribes, who had only recently embraced Christianity, considered that the disease was conveyed by their religious teachers, and they dismissed them and then abandoned their new religion. Among these some were for killing the teachers, but wiser counsels prevailed. It is said that one tribe buried alive one teacher's wife and child, whose father died of the plague, to stop infection. But while some in their distress fell back on their former superstitions, the greater number are said to have borne their calamity with fortitude, and to have suffered and died under the influence of Christianity.—Sidney (Australia) Herald.

A Pleasant Neighborhood to Live In.

At Senatobia, a few days ago, Barton McHenry and J. H. Cocke, both white, became involved in a personal altercation. Cocke fired until his pistol was exhausted, when they clinched, Cocke drawing his knife and McHenry using his pistol by striking him on the head. A short struggle ensued, when McHenry fell dead in front of Slaton & Slaton's office, with seven stabs in his breast, two in the region of the heart. Mr. Cocke went home without assistance, but feeling himsel badly wounded, medical aid was soon in attendance, when it was found that he was mortally wounded, a ball having struck him near the center of his abdomen, ranging downward and coming out near the spine on the left side. One shot also took effect near the point of his hip bone, another struck him lower down on the other hip, and the fourth made a slight wound just above his ankle.—Vicksburg Herald.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Around the Farm.

Keep your different kinds of stock in separate fields and yards; it's the only safe way.

Fine wool being only forty-four cents a pound, lower than since 1857, it is wise to shut up merino rams for the season and cross with Cotswold.

In making whiffletrees, they will be stronger if the front side of the whiffletree is nearest the heart timber and the back side toward the bark; they will retain their shape longer if the timber be split in this direction, across the grain of the wood.

Milch cows don't shrink in milk except they are under-fed. Therefore, as the pastures are almost used up, feed as much as two quarts of meal and bran daily to each cow. Poor economy to starve a cow now and waste food in filling her up in the spring.

Everything about the granaries and corn cribs should be made safe against vermin. Several cats may be fed at the cost of one dog, and they earn their feed far more profitably. Make holes where they can get in and out of the buildings and under them, but a foot or more above the ground, that skunks may not take possession.

Growing Potatoes Under Straw.—One of my neighbors last season raised over 400 bushels of fine potatoes per acre under straw, while the rest of us in open ground hardly got our seed back, the summer being extremely hot and dry. His plan is to plant every shallow (one or two inches deep) in rows 18 inches apart, and when the potatoes are beginning to come up to cover with straw to the depth of eight or ten inches. This straw is of advantage in dry seasons, showing but little if any benefit, and sometimes a positive damage, in wet.—New York Tribune.

The Best Farmer.—The best farmer is he who raises the best and largest crops on the smallest surface of land at the least expense, and at the same time annually improves his soil; who understands his business and attends to it; whose manure heap is very large and always increasing; whose corn crib and smoke house are at home; who is surrounded by all the necessaries and comforts of life; who studies his profession, and strives to reach perfection in it; keeps a strict account of his out-goes as well as his incomes, and who knows how he stands at the end of each season. Such a farmer, in nine times out of ten, will succeed, and not only make farming a pleasant but profitable occupation. Try it and see how it is yourself, reader.—Farmers' Vindicator.

A correspondent of the Building News says: "Nothing can be better to exclude rats than to concrete the surface of the ground beneath wood floors; not only for this, but also to prevent, as well, damp rising. All ground floors, whether wood, paved, or tiled, should have a layer of concrete, three inches to four inches thick, between them and the soil. I have been in the habit of doing this for years, and all such houses have dry floors, and are vermin proof, as far as the latter are concerned, as rats cannot disturb well-made concrete. The concrete should be made of moderately fine gravel (broken flint or glass added to it as an improvement), mixed with Portland cement, in the proportion of one of cement to seven of gravel. Not too much water should be used, but the cement must be thoroughly mixed with gravel, and, when deposited in place, well trodden or beaten with a grass-beater. Three or four inches at most is sufficient in thickness."

The best time to cut hard wood for durability is early winter before the sap has a thought of moving. December is far better than February, and November or even October, often better than later. During the latter part of the growing season those substances which, with access of water, form and enrich the sap, are produced in the wood. They gradually become soluble as the winter advances, and before spring fairly opens (trees varying considerably in time) are in a soluble condition, and taxing the soil for water to carry them to every twig and swelling bud. If cut thus, when filled with water or when full of soluble substances, the durability of the timber is much less than when these substances are in a chiefly insoluble condition, as they are in the autumn. The above indicates a general principle. It may, however, be considerably modified in practice. For many trees may be cut in full leaf even shortly after midsummer to good advantage. For firewood it is important to cut soon after the leaves fall.

About the House.

Toothache of the most excruciating sort may be relieved by alum and salt, pulverized, mixed in equal quantities, and applied to the hollow tooth in a plug of cotton.

When color on a fabric has been destroyed by acid, ammonia is applied to neutralize the acid, after which an application of chloroform will, in almost all cases, restore the original color.

First-rate Tooth Powder.—Mix equal portions of powdered chalk and charcoal, adding a small quantity of powdered curd soap. This simple recipe not only cleanses the teeth, but is preservative against decay.

A piece of red pepper the size of your finger nail, put into meat or vegetables when first beginning to cook, will aid greatly in killing the unpleasant odor arising therefrom. Remember this for boiling cabbage, green beans, onions, chickens, mutton, etc.

Keeping Mice Out.—Mouse holes in walls and closets should be first filled with lime and afterward pasted over with plaster of Paris, mixed with water. It is a good plan to keep a paper of the latter in every house, as it is useful in filling cracks, and, in fact, comes in many other ways into household economy.

Fried Mackerel.—For frying, take small mackerel, as fresh as possible. Wash them, dry them in a clean cloth and score them deeply in the back, making several deep cuts. Season them with a little salt and pepper. Go over them with a beaten egg, and then cover them thickly with grated bread-crumbs. Fry them in boiling lard and dish them hot.

To Make Boots Waterproof.—Beef tallow four ounces, rosin one ounce, beeswax one ounce. Melt together. Add, when cold, a quantity of neat's foot oil equal to the mass. Apply with a rag, warming the boots before a fire, to the soles as well as uppers, and rub in well with the hand. Two applications, it is said, will make the boots thoroughly waterproof and still keep them soft.

To keep the lips soft, use this salve: White wax three drachms, spermaceti one and a half drachms, olive-oil six drachms, alkanet root one drachm. Melt the wax and spermaceti in a cup, then the oil and root in another, near the fire; strain through muslin, or fine linen, and mix with the wax; add balsam of Peru one drachm, essence of bergamot ten drops, otto of rose five drops.

Moths will work in carpets in rooms that are kept warm, in the winter as well as in the summer. A sure method of removing the pests is to pour strong alum-water on the floor to the distance of half a yard, around the edges, before laying the carpets. Then, once or twice during the season, sprinkle dry salt over the carpet before sweeping. Insects do not like salt, and sufficient adheres to the carpet to prevent their alighting upon it.

What Ugly Toes Women Have.

Canova chose five hundred beautiful women from whom to model his Venus, and among them all could not find a decent set of toes. If he lived nowadays what luck would he have under the dainty little buttoned boots, with their sharp-pointed heels.

As soon as the helpless baby can put its foot on the ground, and before it can complain in words, shoes are put on it by which the width of the toes are contracted fully half an inch; and usually a stiff counter is ordered in the heel, with some vague idea of "strengthening the ankle." From that time, no matter how watchful or sensible its parents may be in other respects, these instruments of torture always constitute part of its dress. The toes are forced into narrower space, year by year, "to give a good shape to the foot," until they overlap and knot and knob themselves over with incipient corns and bunions. Then the heel is lifted from the ground by artificial means, and thus the action of the calf muscles is hindered and the elastic cartilage of the whole foot is stiffened at the earliest and most tender period of its growth.

The results are a total lack of elasticity in the step and carriage, and a foot inevitably distorted. American women are noted for their cramped and mincing walk. Southern children are more fortunate in this matter than those in the North, as it is customary, even in the wealthiest classes, to let their feet go uncovered until the age of six.

Mothers in the North are not wholly to blame, however, as the climate requires that the feet shall be covered, and it is almost impossible, even in New York, to find shoes properly made for children, unless a last is ordered for the foot. As a new last would be required every month or so, very few parents are able to give the watchfulness and money required; but, if the proper shape were insisted upon by those buying shoes, dealers would quickly furnish them.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Heavy Bank Robbery.

A recent dispatch from Scranton, Pa., says: The First National Bank of Pittston was broken into last night by a band of burglars, and robbed of $40,000 in bonds and money. The robbers by a dexterous maneuvre effected an entrance to the vault, having entered the building through the roof, where they blew open two spherical safes, from which they abstracted the money and decamped. The bank is a one-story brick structure, with a flat tin roof. Through this roof the robbers cut a hole with a tinsmith's shears several days ago, so as to have it ready for election night, taking the precaution to adjust it again with putty to prevent the rain from going through. The hole is about eighteen inches square, and through this three of the gang descended into the vault by means of a rope ladder, leaving two confederates outside to watch and assist them in escaping. The vault is guarded by a strong door supplied with a burglar alarm, but they left that unmolested, and entered through the top of the vault. This is occupied by three strong spherical safes, two of which were blown open with powder and rifled of their contents, including Lackawanna and Bloomsburg railroad bonds, amounting to $11,600; Wilkesbarre city bonds for $5,000, and Pittston Seminary bonds for $1,000, besides some $20,000 worth of bonds of the Oxford Iron Company, of New Jersey, and a quantity of cash, amounting in all to over $40,000 in bonds and money.

A Physician's Brain.

The autopsy of Dr. Athon's brain establishes the claim of medicine to being an almost exact science. The first stroke of paralysis, involving the left side, naturally enough excited a great deal of interest among the city doctors, and it was agreed that it was caused by the bursting of a small blood vessel in the right hemisphere of the brain. The second stroke, it was also decided, was caused by a more serious rupture in the left hemisphere, necessitating a more complete paralysis of the right side. The doctors also diagnosed the cause of the trouble—fatty degeneration of the blood vessels of the base of the brain. They even told the exact location of the two blood clots that formed in the brain. After death the clots—the smaller one on the right and the larger one on the left—were found just as they had been predicted, and dissection revealed so extensive a weakening of the blood vessels by fatty degeneration that it was a matter of wonder the doctor had lived so long. The brain itself was large, solid, and fine-looking in texture. It weighed nearly fifty-four ounces. Before the autopsy a well-known physician staked his reputation on finding the larger blood clot in a certain locality, and agreed to quit the practice of medicine if it was not found there. He even predicted the size of it.—Indianapolis Herald.

BRIGHAM YOUNG'S TROUBLES.

The Old Mormon Now Desires to Avail Himself of the Nation's Laws.

An interesting case came up before a Cabinet meeting here to-day. It was the case of Brigham Young—whether he could be legally imprisoned for his neglect to pay alimony to Ann Eliza Young. The case in brief is as follows: Some time ago Ann Eliza Young sued before Judge McKean for a divorce and alimony. She obtained a decree, granting a verdict of $3,000 to pay her counsel fees, and an allowance for alimony. Brigham paid the $3,000 counsel fees, but has since refused to pay the alimony. Judge McKean, before whom the case was originally tried, shortly after the trial of the case resigned. Recently his successor noted the fact that the decree of the court ordering Young to pay alimony had not been complied with. In order to secure this compliance, Brigham Young was on yesterday imprisoned. The case has been presented here on to-day by the counsel of Young to see if he cannot be legally released. The view advanced by them is certainly a new one, and it is a wonder that this point was not mentioned in the trial of the case before Judge McKean. They claim that under the United States law the seventeenth wife of Brigham Young has no standing in the court, and that she, in becoming his wife, under the Mormon law, voluntarily consented to become his concubine under the United States law, and that, therefore, her claims are not entitled to respect in a Federal court. It is a puzzle to the average individual how this case can come up here at the present time. If this point is such a good one it is wondered why Brigham did not make the point when Ann Eliza first sued for divorce, and still further, it is a source of surprise that any representations should be made here when the local courts of Utah are surely refuges of redress in the case of justice being misapplied. However, things happen so often here out of the regular order that it should not be such a source of surprise that Brigham should apply to the paternal government to adjudicate upon a question which, if settled in his favor, will result in his release from imprisonment. Young, in allowing this point against his seventeenth wife, surely does not stand by the Mormon doctrines, for in very self-defense, from the demands of Ann Eliza, he can find no better plan than to take advantage of the United States laws, and claim that under them she was only his concubine. The case was but briefly discussed in the Cabinet to-day, and was then referred to the Attorney-General for a decision. Mr. Pierrepont, before examining the case, remarked casually to a friend that he did not see how Ann Eliza's claims for alimony could be sustained, as surely the law could not recognize the relations of a seventeenth wife. Another reason given for Brigham's appeal to Washington is the fact that he claims that the local courts of Utah have been organized by designing politicians with the view of persecuting him.—Washington Dispatch.

Fire and the Sword in Spain.

A correspondent of the London Times writes as follows from Santander, Spain:

It is impossible for any one not on the spot to realize the wanton devastion of property and barbarity to persons with which the civil war is being carried on by the combatants in the Basque Provinces and Navarre. Many an English tourist who has entered Spain by Irun, en route to Sebastian, must remember the fair country, sprinkled with farmhouses, orchards, maize fields and groves on gentle acclivities which spread between those two places. It is now almost a wilderness of trampled crops, trees destroyed and homesteads burnt. The same picture of desolation presents itself in Navarre, except that instead of orchards the vineyards are cut down with hatchets by the government troops. With this material ruin, the savage spirit of the war becomes more intense, and, although neither party publicly admits the act, scarcely any quarter is given on either side. The reprisals of Gen. Trillo go too far and are cruelly unjust, because the places he has directed to be destroyed are open towns, or rather villages, not occupied militarily by the enemy, whereas, Hernani, Guetaria and San Sebastian, which are being cannonaded by the Carlists, play the part of fortresses, and are therefore liable to be fired upon. The peaceful places thus doomed by the Alfonsine chief also contain the houses, shops, stores and furniture belonging to numbers of Liberals. Supporters of the government, who, obliged to fly or expelled from their houses by the Carlists, will think their devotion to it ill-requited by this wanton destruction of their property.

How Little Alice Died.

Not long ago Rev. Mr. Winsor, of Redwing, Minn., met with a painful loss in the burning of his daughter Alice. Her breast, abdomen, legs, arms and hands were shockingly burned, and after a few hours she died. She was only about five years old, and as she lingered between heaven and earth a little while, she asked her mother to lie on the bed with her, and when this request was granted she said, "Sing to me 'I am Jesus' little lamb.'" As her stricken mother tried to press back the torrent of grief that welled up in her heart, and sang the words, the dear little sufferer made an effort, with her failing strength, to put one of her crisped arms around her neck. Afterward, as death drew nearer, she requested her father to sing, "Rock of ages, cleft for me," and seemed to be soothed by those grand old words.—St. Paul Dispatch.

A Horrible Story

We have heard of a very distressing accident occurring in Jackson County, West Virginia. It was a "house-raising." As is customary on such occasions, chickens had been killed by chopping off their heads. Two little sons of the owner of the house to be raised saw the chickens thus guillotined, and during the day concluded to repeat the operation. It was just at a time when the men were lifting a heavy log into its place. The father, who was holding one end of the log, casting his eyes toward the little fellows, one of whom had the axe raised to sever the neck of his brother, let go of the log to save the boy, and it fell, killing six men, two instantly, the others living only a few hours. The axe fell before the father could reach the scene, severing the neck of the son. Thus were seven persons hurled into eternity in a twinkling.—Middleport (O.) News.

Nuggets of Knowledge.

TO KEEP AWAY BEDBUGS.

Dilute oil of sassafras with water, sprinkle the sheets with it and the bugs will leave in a hurry. Oil of pennyroyal is also excellent. It leaves a yellow stain, but that can be removed in the wash. Equally good for mosquitoes.

PAPER PILLOWS.

Excellent paper pillows may be made of old letters—the stiffer the paper the better. Newspapers will not do. The paper should be cut into slips and rolled round an ivory knitting-kneedle. It is then almost like a spring, and makes a much better cushion than the torn paper, being more elastic.

VALUE OF CORN-COBS.

The average yield of corn-cobs is 7.69 parts of carbonate of potash in 1,000 parts of the cobs, which is nearly twice as much as is furnished by the best specimens of wood. The corn crop of this country will supply 15,400,000,000 pounds of cobs, from which 115,500,000 pounds of potash might be made.

LINIMENT.

Put into spirits of turpentine as much camphor gum as it will cut; then add as much laudanum as there is turpentine, when it is fit for use. I have used this liniment myself repeatedly, when hurt by being kicked or otherwise injured by horses, and can recommend it to others for injuries inflicted in like manner. It will be found as efficient and valuable as it is simple.

TO REMOVE INK FROM PAPER.

Take one pound of chloride of lime, thoroughly pulverized, and four quarts of soft water. Shake thoroughly and let it stand twenty-four hours; strain through a cotton cloth; add a teaspoonful of acetic acid to every ounce of the chloride of lime water. Dip a stick in the fluid, and apply it without rubbing to the blot. When the ink has disappeared, absorb the fluid with a boiler, and the paper is immediately ready to write upon again.

SIMPLE REMEDY TO PURIFY WATER.

It is not generally known, as it ought to be, that pounded alum possesses the property of purifying the water. A large teaspoonful of pulverized alum sprinkled into a hogshead of water—the water stirred round at the time—will, after the lapse of a few hours, by precipitating to the bottom the impure articles, so purify it that it will be found to possess nearly all the freshness and clearness of the finest spring water. A pailful containing four gallons may be purified by a single teaspoonful.

PRESERVING FRUIT.

Fruit is kept in Russia by being packed in creosotized lime. The lime is slaked in water in which a little creosote has been dissolved, and is allowed to fall to powder. The latter is spread over the bottom of a deal box, to about one inch in thickness. A sheet of paper is laid above, and then the fruit. Over the fruit is another sheet of paper, then more lime, and so on until the box is full, when a little finely powdered charcoal is packed in the corners, and the lid tightly closed. Fruit thus inclosed will, it is said, remain good for a year.

A USEFUL HINT.

If a finger ring becomes too tight to pass the joint of the finger, the finger should first be held in cold water to reduce any swelling or inflammation. Then wrap a rag soaked in hot water around the ring to expand the metal, and lastly soap the finger. A needle threaded with strong silk can then be passed between the ring and finger, and a person holding the two ends, and pulling the silk, while sliding it around the peripnery of the ring, will readily remove the latter. Another method is to pass a piece of sewing silk under the ring, and wind th thread in pretty close spirals closely around the finger to the end—that below the ring—and begin unwinding.

Melancholy Boating Accident.

A letter from Binghamton, N. Y., says: "About a week ago Maurice Goodrich and his brother William, of Worcester, N. Y., were married in that village to two sisters. The brothers, as well as the sisters, were twins. On Wednesday last, to complete their wedding trip, the two couples went to Unadilla to visit the family of Joseph Morehouse, whose wife was a sister of the newly-married ladies. On Thursday morning the bridal party and Mr. and Mrs. Morehouse went boat-riding on the Susquehanna at Unadilla. William Goodrich took the oars, and while rowing the ladies became frightened. The boat was capsized, and the entire party thrown into the water. Mr. Morehouse, being an old sailor and an expert swimmer, tried to support his wife and Mrs. Maurice Goodrich. The women, however, threw their arms about him, and the three were drowned. Maurice Goodrich swam a few feet, but being weighed down with heavy clothing, was also drowned. William Goodrich, before beginning to row, had removed his coats. He was a good swimmer, and saved his wife. The bodies of Mr. and Mrs. Morehouse and Maurice Goodrich were recovered the same day, but that of the latter's wife had not been found at last accounts."

Too Much Instinct.

The instinct of Newfoundland dogs to save a drowning person has been somewhat painfully tested by an unlucky Frenchman. He was walking in the country with a friend, who possessed a magnificent Newfoundland, and incautiously questioned the truth of the animal's sagacity. The dog's master, vexed at the slur cast on his favorite, gave his friend a push and knocked him into a shallow river. "Turk" immediately sprang in, and, seizing one of the tails of the immersed man's coat, commenced to swim for land. Unfortunately another Newfoundland, trotting along the other side of the river, saw the affair, and also came to the rescue. Dog number two seized the other tail of the coat, and wished to swim back to his master. "Turk" held fast and struggled for his side, and the owner of the coat cried in vain for help. At last the coat gave way, and each Newfoundland swam proudly home with a piece of cloth in his mouth, so that "Turk's" master was obliged to plunge in himself to save his friend.—London Graphic.

THE CUBAN QUESTION.

The Present Diplomatic Relation Between Spain and the United States—Views of the President.

A press dispatch from Washington says: "Since Caleb Cushing went to Madrid in the capacity of Minister of the United States, less than two years ago, there have been four different changes of the Spanish Cabinet. These changes and the prevalence of civil war have affected and necessarily delayed the transaction of the business with which he was charged. The instructions he received from the government had reference entirely to the actual state of the Island of Cuba and its relations to the United States as well as to Spain. He was also furnished with a selection, in chronological order, of the numerous dispatches which had passed between the two governments. From them he derived ample information, not only concerning special questions which had arisen from time to time, but also respecting the general purposes and policy of the President in the premises. The discussion of the Spanish Cabinet's reply to what is called in the late Madrid telegram, 'The Washington Note,' has reference to the unsettled questions between the two countries, the statement of them being free from the verbiage of correspondence, and presented in a comparatively brief memorandum. The exact points of this official paper cannot be ascertained, but they may be inferred from the views of the President which form the basis of the instructions to Minister Cushing, and which show that the President regards the civil dissensions in Cuba, and especially the sanguinary hostilities, such as have been prevailing there for the last seven years, as producing effects in the United States second in gravity only to those which they produce in Spain. Meantime the political relation of the United States to Cuba is altogether anomalous, seeing that for any injury done to the United States or their citizens in Cuba the United States has no direct means of redress there, and can obtain it only by long and circuitous action by way of Madrid. The ultimate issue of events in Cuba will be its independence, however that issue may be produced, whether by means of negotiation, or as the result of military operations, or of one of those unexpected incidents which so frequently determine the fate of nations. The continuation of the insurrection grows day by day more insupportable to the United States; and while the attention of this government is fixed on Cuba in the interest of humanity, by the horrors of civil war prevailing there, it cannot forbear to reflect that the existence of slave labor in Cuba and its influence upon the feelings and interests of the Peninsular Spaniards lie at the foundation of all the calamities which now afflict the island. The President has not been without hope that all these questions might be settled by the spontaneous act of Spain herself, she being more deeply interested in such settlement than all the rest of the world. The question, what decision the United States shall make, is a serious and difficult one, not to be determined without careful consideration of its complex elements of domestic and foreign policy, but the determination of which may at any moment be forced upon us by occurrences either in Spain or Cuba. The policy of the United States in reference to Cuba at the present time is declared to be one of expectancy, but with positive and fixed convictions as to the duty of the United States when the time or emergency of action shall arrive."

Reminiscence of the Deep Snow.

A correspondent of the Bloomington Pantagraph gives some interesting items of the "deep snow" in Illinois in the winter of 1830-31. He says:

The snow fell about thirty inches deep. It then cleared off a little, then it again snowed till it was four feet deep. It was so soft I could walk through it; and the quails, when they flew, would light in the snow and be buried, so you could run your hand down into the snow and get them out. In this way you could catch an entire covey by watching where they lit. The prairie chickens would die in the drifts with their tails so that the snow banked over them and fastened them in. You could dig out all of these you wanted also in a little while. But the great destruction was with the deer we caught—thirty-eight in two days, by four boys and three dogs. A slight crust formed on the snow, which a small dog could run on. When the deer came over a drift they would break through. We were going over or across some hollows when we met three deer, with the dogs close behind them. I jumped out ahead of a big-horned fellow, and the dog laid hold, and all of us, being over a hollow filled up with loose snow some fifteen feet deep, went to the bottom. I happened to get a tail hold, and not fearing the horns so long as I had a good hold, we were badly covered up in the snow. The old buck commenced climbing up the side hill till his horns reached the crust, when he soon made a hole through it, but before he got out I cut his hamstring. My comrades were looking all around to see how they would get us out. The little dog followed me out, and started off for another deer. The last four we caught we brought home alive. They had shed their horns and were poor. We put them in a lot with cattle, and they stayed till grass became quite plenty, and then they forgot to come back.

The drifting of the snow was very deep. A long lane with high rail fence was nearly covered, stakes and all. It was a month before we got a road through the lane, and, when the snow went off, the road-bed was four or five feet high, hard and solid. The ten-ox sled-load of youngsters would sometimes upset and dump them in the mud. All through the winter the snow lay on the ground like a floor, never melting by the sun till near the last of March. The frost was nearly out before this, as we found in hunting for sassafras for tea, which was the drink in those days.

An Extinguisher of Pain and Fire.

Chloroform, which banishes pain, has been found at Antwerp to extinguish by its vapor the flames of petroleum vapor—that most inextinguishable of all flames. And other highly combustible gases when mixed with chloroform vapor appeared to lose their dangerous properties, even to the extent of having their explosive qualities removed. In view of recent fire catastrophes on ship-board, where the means of the extinction of fires appear in general to be of limited and ineffectual nature, an apparatus in which this vapor might be employed should prove useful.

INDIANA ITEMS.

Eleven men are in jail in Allen county—two for murder in the first degree, seven for murder in the second degree, and two for manslaughter.

The Daviess County Democrat mentions the failure of the firm of Spink & Veale, manufacturers and real estate dealers, with liabilities aggregating $100,000.

The Newport Hoosier State tells of a man living in Fountain county who was too mean to allow a minister to baptize two ladies in a stream of water running through his property.

Mrs. Murray, wife of the editor of the South Bend Daily Herald, is "doing" the Washington correspondence for that paper, having gone to the Federal Capital to spend the winter.

Rev. Martin Houser died at the residence of George Bay, in Hope, Bartholomew county, in his seventy-sixth year of his age. He was the founder of that village and of the Moravian congregation there.

John Whitcup, an old bachelor, who lived alone on Indian creek, five miles below Corydon, was found dead in his house last Sunday. The Coroner's jury found that death had resulted from natural causes.

Monroe township, Allen county, is crowing over the presence within its limits of a child—a native—which is but seven months old and weighs fifty pounds. The leg, just above the knee, measures a foot in circumference, and the arm, above the elbow, eight inches.

Wm. Kacher, a prominent lawyer of Huntington, was cowhided on Main street, that city, one day last week, by James Scott, Justice of the Peace. It is not known what caused the trouble. Sam Winter, editor of the Democrat, interfered and got part of the whipping himself.

An employe at the Indianapolis Rolling Mill named Barr thinks that lifting dead weights is his "best hold," and he has issued a challenge offering to lift 100 pounds more than any other man who will make the test with him. He further offers to put the lifter himself on the load, after beating him, of course, and lift the combined weight.

The joint commissioners appointed last winter to settle the question of the boundary between the States of Indiana and Kentucky, at Green Island, in the Ohio river, near Evansville, have decided that the island belongs to the jurisdiction of Kentucky. This question having been long unsettled, advantage was taken of it by criminals from both sides of the river, who made a resort of the island, and thus secured immunity from arrest.

Berry O. Robinson, of Hopkinsville, Ky., correspondent of the Evansville Journal, came up to Evansville on a visit one night recently. On the way he fell in with a very agreeable and companionable person, who discovered, after landing, that he had to go in the same direction with Mr. Robinson, and would walk with him. Just after crossing Pigeon creek bridge, on Franklin street, the companionable gentleman dealt Mr. Robinson a blow on the back of the head, knocking him senseless. He then robbed and left him.

The Evansville Journal gives the particulars of a quarrel and fight between two men named Peters and Kalbfuss, of that city, in which the former knocked the latter down and pounded him until he drew a knife and stabbed his assailant in the side. The wounded man pursued Kalbfusz with a billet of wood, and would probably have killed him but for the interference of outsiders. He then went home, and at last accounts was in a critical condition from his wounds. The quarrel grew out of a controversy on doctrinal points—the disputants being members of the same church.

At Terre Haute, Sunday night, H. Herman, a grocer, living on Second street, was aroused by some one at his back door. He dressed and went to investigate. The intruder asked for something to eat, but Mr. Herman thought 2 a. m. a rather untimely hour for such a request. He awoke three young men who were inmates of the house, and arming himself with a revolver, opened the door and ordered the stranger off the premises. He suddenly obeyed the order, but just as he got to the gate two other ruffians joined him, and Mr. Herman, not desiring to engage in a brawl with them, retreated within his house and locked the door. The intruders remained about the premises for some time, but finally took their departure without further demonstrations.

James H. Smart, Superintendent of Public Instruction, is summarizing the annual reports of the County Superintendents for the year ending Sept. 1, from which the following figures are taken: Number of white children admitted into the schools during the year, 492,723; colored, 6,651; males, 267,463; females, 231,911; number of school districts, 9,191; colored schools taught during the year, 132; white teachers employed, 13,047; colored teachers 86; average compensation per day of male teachers in townships, $2.03; females in townships, $1.80; males in towns, $3.25; females in towns, $1.96; males in cities, $4.71; females in cities, $2.28; total revenue received for tuition, $4,797,127.45; amount expended since September, 1874, $2,830,747.15; on hand $1,956,380.34; received on account of special fund, $2,354,395.45; expended since Sept. 1, 1874, $1,690,457.44; on hand, $654,932.97; school houses in the State, 9,807; total estimated value of school property, $10,880,337.58; total estimated special school tax, $1,018,978.77; amount paid to Trustees for managing educational matters, $72,988.21; number of school houses erected during the year, 383; value of school houses erected, $641,544; private schools, 949; teachers in private schools, 960; number of pupils admitted during the year, 13,956.

TEAS—Our Tea trade is the wonder of the country. No one ever dreamt such a trade could be built up. We sell more chests daily than some houses do pounds, and still our trade is increasing. It is a uncommon thing for us to purchase two hundred chests at a time, and here is the great element of our success. As by purchasing such larger quantities direct of the Importers we save our consumer, at least the three extra profits of jobbers, speculator and wholesale grocer, who make 10 to 20 cents per pound. This our customers get the benefit of. No middle men with us. As with teas, so with sugar coffee, syrup and all other goods. No secret—it is simply in purchasing all our goods at first hands and re-selling direct to our customers at small margin, and save them at least 20 to 40 cents a pound on tea and 20 per cent on all other goods.

TESTING THE OLD MAN'S LOVE.

Mrs. Clark had been reading the Beecher-Tilton scandal until her faith in man had dwindled down to a very fine point.

She had noticed that her hitherto loving spouse had, for the past two weeks, been very low spirited and down hearted.

She thought perhaps he too had been led from the paths of virtue by the deluding voice of some bewitching siren and his voice was growing cold. But how to find out such was the case. Josephus did not show any signs of producing the statement, or confessing his guilt to a mutual friend

Her brow corrugated, and her hands clenched as she brooded over her imaginary wrongs and she determined to put the fidelity of her husband to the test.

"Ah! I have it," said she triumphantly. "I'll drown myself, that is figuratively."

Clark was a farmer in good circumstances, and being several years younger than his wife, and good-looking, it kept her in a state of jealously, and Mrs Clark proceeded to put her plan into execution.

Just behind the house was a very deep well, that had not been used for some time, and it was covered over with boards to prevent the cattle from falling into it.

She removed the covering from the well, and placing her bonnet and shawl upon the brink, she crawled in under a large gooseberry bush to await developments.

The weather was cold, and she saw her husband and hired man coming from the barn where they had been at work.

Clark passed the well without noticing the clothing, but the hired man saw them and gave a cry of horror.

"Mercy on us, Mr. Clark! Your wife has thrown herself in the well," he shouted frantically.

Mrs. Clark expected that her husband would tear his hair, and rush to the edge of the well, and after calling her all the endearing names he could think of, descend into its watery depths in eager search of her damp corpse.

But Clark did'nt do anything of the kind. He quietly took a fresh chew of tobacco, and then approached the well looked quietly into in.

"I guess the old gal has suicided," he said, without any emotion worth speaking of. "Jake, you sling them boards back again; I would'nt have that brindle heifer get in there for $50, and after dinner we'll hoist the old woman out of it."

"Had'nt I better get some of the neigbors here first?"

"After dinner will do, Jake. Business before pleasure is my motto, and I'm awful hungry."

Jake covered up the well, and the men went into the house, leaving the old lady howling with rage.

"I'll old gal him. I'll suicide him.—Take more pains over that pesky heifer than he does over me. I'll, I'll—

Words failed her, they were inadaquate to express her feelings.

After dinner Clark sent the hired man after some of the neighbors, and while he was awaiting his return he seated himself on a log, in plain sight of his loving wife, and whistled Old Hundred through.

The neighbors arrived and were full of sympathy for the bereaved husband and Josephus bore his honors very meekly.

Various plans were canvassed for raising the body, but owing to the great depth of the well they could not decide upon the right one.

"I'll tell you the best way, my dear friends," said Clark, pathetically. "She is gone and will never come back to this world of woe and trouble, so I think we had better let the body remain where it is and fill up the well. It will save a power of trouble and bother."

This proposition was agreed to by the neighbors as being feasible, and the work of filling it up commenced. Josephus threw in all the large stones and blocks of wood that he could lay his hands on.

"There," said he; "I quess that will do," after they had thrown a couple of cart loads of rubbish into the well.—"Jake can fill up the rest at odd times and rainy days. We'll have a funeral sermon preached as soon as I get done hauling wood."

Near by the side of Josephus stood a woman of about thirty summers or winters, and she been regarding the solemn scene with a mixture of pleasure and sorrow intermingled, and when the rest of the neighbors took their departure she lingered behind to comfort the aching heart of the bereaved widower.

"It is a great pity to be so suddenly cut down in the prime of life, like the flower at nobntide," she said very mournfully.

"Yes," said he, shifting his quid of tobacco from one side of his mouth to the other, "but Betsy was getting along in years, and we must be resigned."

"Just so, Mr. Clark, resignation is a cooling balm, as it were, to fill the void in a troubled breast, and I always thought your wife was too old for such a smart active man as you."

"Did you really? answered Clark, with sudden interest.

"To be sure I did; I always took a great interest in your welfare."

Clark was lost in meditations for some time.

"Miss Perkins," said he, "can you make good butter?"

"Now, Mr. Clark," she answered, blushing, "you are touching me on a tender spot, for if I do say it myself, I won't turn my back to any woman in the country making good butter."

"Good cook?"

"First rate."

"Understand housekeeping?"

"None better."

"Then I'll tell you what I have been thinking about," said he, picking up another large stone, and throwing it into the well, "suppose you and I get married?"

"Now, really, Mr. Clark, you are so sudden, and take me by surprise, but my heart bleeds for you in your bereavment, and—and I consent. Take me—I am yours."

The fond couple embraced, taking a kiss to ratify the bargain.

Mrs. Clark, under the goosberry bush, was boiling with rage, but she restrined herself for a few moments.

"I say," said Clark, after they had regained their composure, "won't Betsy's clothes fit you?"

"Of course they will, and it will be a great saving."

"And I will take that new cloak of hers, and make me an overcoat—a long one like the city folks wear," said Mr. Clark.

"Oh, my dear creature!" replied she,

"Sweet angel of my soul!" said he.

Just then something lit upon Clark's back; and he did not know whether it was a wild cat, or a streak of lightning or the devil, but he found out.

His charmer cast one glance at the apparition and scooted.

Clark is just about again. He says it was the worst case of inflammatory sickness he ever had.

But he is the meekest husband to be found, and the well is filled up.

Harum Scarum's Letter.

MR. COURIER MAN: My pa takes your paper and reads it to me and ma at night.

Ma said I might send a letter to you to print in your paper. I say it and ma writes it down.

My name is Harry and my sister is Mineova, but folks call me Harum Scarum, and they call her Topsy Turvy. I'm six and most seven.

We go to school. I'm in No. 10 and Turvy's in No. 8. I like the teacher well enough when she don't take a fellow's playthings.

I don't think much of girls. Turvy is pretty good when she plays horse, but she won't play horse much.

Turvy's got another cat. She is black all over, and her name is Cherry.

Me and some other fellers put her in the cisern for fun. We wanted see her swim and scratch out.

She didn't. Ma came and got her out and shook me, cose Turvy screamed so. Turvy is a great friend of cats. She goes over to grandma's house sometimes. I don't like grandma, 'cept her doughnuts, 'cause she makes me keep stiller than anything.

I know a dog over there.

His name is Billy. We harness him up, and he'll bark us all round.

I set him on Cherry, the other day, and she licked. He ki yied some. you bet.

I learnt some naughty words once, but my ma won't let me say'em. She washed my mouth out with soap suds cause I said gosh and something else.

I got mad once after supper, and I put on my tippet and rubber boots. Ma asked me where I was goin', I told her I was goin'out doors to say darn.

She said, "Well, run right along.

I opened the door and looked out; it was awful dark. I thought I wouldn't say it then.

I shall when the sun shines.

Ma said words that were too naughty to say in the dark were too naughty to say any time.

Turvy said, "Aint you ashamed, Harry?" I said I guessed I wouldn't take two lumps of sugar when my ma was up stairs.

Turvy hollered, "O, I never." But she did, cose I see her. Pa says I had better go to bed now. I guess so, too. Good night.

The trade in town Saturday last was immense.

The Truthful Pilot

The passeger, who was going down the big river for the first time in his life, secured permission to climb up beside the pilot, a grim old grayback who never told a lie in his life.

"Many alligators in this river?" inquired the stranger, after a look around.

"Not so many now, since they got to shootin' em for their hides and taller," was the reply.

"Used to be lots, eh?"

"I don't want to tell you about'em, stranger," replied the pilot, sighing heavily.

"Why?"

"'Cause you'd think I was a-lyin' to you, and that's sumthin' I never do. I kin cheat at keerds, drink whiskey or chaw poor terbacker, but I can't lie."

"Then there used to be lots of 'em?" inquired the passenger.

"I'm most afraid to tell ye, Mister, but I've counted 'leven hundred allygators to the mile from Vicksburg cl'ar down to Orleans! That was years ago, afore a shot was ever fired at'em."

"Well I don't doubt it." replied the stranger.

"And I've counted 3,459 of 'em o one sand bar!" continued the pilot, "looks big to tell, but a Government surveyor was aboard, and he checked 'em off as I called out."

"I haven't the least doubt of it," said the passenger as he heaved a sigh.

"I'm glad o' that, stranger. Some fellers would think I was a liar when I'm telling the solemn truth. This used to be a paradise for alligators, and they were so thick that the wheels of the boat killed an average of fortynine to to the mile!"

"Is that so?"

"True as Gospel, mister! I used to almost feel sorry for the cussed brutes, 'cause they'd cry out e'en most like a human being. We killed lots of 'em as I said, and we hurt a pile more. I sailed with one captain who allus carried a thousand bottles of liniment to throw over to the wounded ones!"

"He did?"

"True as you live, he did, I don't spect I'll ever see another such a kind Christian man. And the alligators got to know the Nancy Jane, and to know Capt. Tom and they'd swim out and rub their tails agin the boat an'purr like cats an'look up and try to smile!"

"They would?"

"Solemn truth," stranger. "And once when we ground on a bar, with an opposition boat right behind, the alligators gathered around, got under her stern, and humped her clean over the bar by a grand push! It looks like a big story, but I never told a lie yet, and I never shall. I wouldn't lie for all the money you could put aboard this boat."

There was a painful pause, and after awhile the pilot continued;

"Our injines gin out once, and a crowd of alligators took a towline and hauled us forty-five miles up stream to Vicksburg!"

"They did?"

"And when the news got along the river that Capt. Tom was dead every alligator in the river daubed his left ear with mud as a badge of mournin', and lots of'em pined away and died!"

The passenger left the pilot house with the remark that he didn't doubt the statement, and the old man gave the wheel a turn, and replied;

"Thar's one thing I won't do for love nor money, and that's make a liar of myself. I was brung up by a good mother, and I'm going to stick to the truth if this boat doesn't make a cent."

THE VACATION.

BY ELIZABETH W. DENISON.

A wonderful October day,
An atmosphere of gold and azure,
Made ready, one might dare to say,
For perfect rest and purest pleasure.

Some children, overworn with care,
Poor, tired children, grown so weary
With many things [illegible],
They almost thought the world was dreary.

"Shall we go out to play?" they said,
And then spake softly to each other,
As if their hearts were comforted:
"O let us go and see our mother!"

For she hath early called and late,
From mountain blue and shining river,
From where cool shadows lie in wait,
And where the [illegible] dance and quiver.

"Come home," she cries, "I long for you,
With hands so full of gift and blessing,
That all about my path I strew
What kings are poor in not possessing."

And when, with swift and eager feet,
These grown-up children sought and found her,
She met them with a welcome sweet,
And blessed them as they gathered round her.

Through lovely, lonely woodland ways
She led them to her fields Elysian;
Around them slept the golden haze,
Above them shone the mount of Vision.

"It is enough," the children said,
"Our hearts with thanks are overflowing;
Can heaven be interpreted?
The rest is surely past our knowing."

"Come up," the mother answered them,
And led the way through misty splendor;
They almost touched the garment's hem,
A spell was on them deep and tender.

Then upward still, away, away,
With strange new strength no toil could weary
Until they heard the mother say,
"Behold your world that was so dreary."

The utmost mountain height was gained.
Beyond the realm of outward beauty
Some higher law eternal reigned,
As grand as Truth, severe as Duty.

But if the mother showed them there
The secrets of her inner glory,
If earth, like Paradise, grew fair,
They never told the wondrous story.

They went their way with their hearts aflame,
And only by their nobler living
We know the benediction came,
And guessed the joy of their Thanksgiving.

MINNIE'S ALLOWANCE.

A Thanksgiving Story.

"Now you just say turkey again, Minnie Rolf, and I'll spank you."

So spoke Mrs. Rolf to her eldest daughter, aged about 9 years—not that Mrs. Rolf would have spanked her daughter; she never had done such a thing—never during the nine long winters and summers through which Minnie had marched or toddled her stage on the journey of life; but Mrs. Rolf was a widow, and poor and worried. She had four children, aged respectively 9 years, 5 years, 4 years and 2 years; Minnie, a girl; Bimmie, a boy; Carrie, a girl; and Bob, a baby.

They were all talking turkey, conjuring up visions of imaginary gobblers with preternaturally extensive development of white meat and unlimited capacity for dressing, whilst Bimmie, the boy, beat a triumphal gastronomic march with a pair of succulent phantom drumsticks.

But alas! it was all a figment of the imagination; there was no material basis of bird for all their oleaginous creations; there was no turkey—and no prospect of turkey—for the widow was not only poor, but very poor—ay, even, as a profane butcher in the neighboring village had said, deucedly poor. It was as much as she could do to keep the wolf from her door.

It is hard work with a thread and needle to keep away that frizzly, grizzly monster, with his great sharp teeth, who is ever waiting and watching to pounce on little children's stomachs, and gnaw them and tear them, and then lick all the color off their cheeks and the luster out of their eyes.

Yes, it is sad, sad work, and poor Mrs. Rolf found that wild beast of a wolf often too much for herself and her needle, and he would get many a snap at the little ones, which made her poor heart ache again.

"Turkey, turkey, turkey!" exclaimed the angry dame. "You may feel thankful if you have dry bread to eat to-morrow, and go down on your bended knees if there is a little butter to it. How on earth am I to buy turkey? If I get that work done—and it's a great IF, I tell you—it's ten chances to one whether the folks will pay me right away when I take it home—ten chances to one; and, if they do—another big IF—there won't be enough to buy a turkey, let alone bread and butter, and potatoes, and tea and coffee, and——"

Here the widow broke down and commenced sobbing.

"But we was only talking, ma," said Minnie. "'Twas only fun; we don't want no turkey. Do we, Bimmie?"

"No!" answered Bimmie, promptly, as though he would fell to the earth any gladiator who should dare to question the statement; and he crept up to the chair where his mother was seated, and, trying to put his little right arm round her shoulders, said, "Don't cry mother; I don't think turkey 'mounts to much anyhow." He spoke in that peculiar dialect belonging to persons who live on the borders of the state of infancy, substituting t for c, and z for th. But this we will not imitate. "Don't cry, mother—there's a dear, good mother;" and, as if to help her along and take the job off her hands, as it were, he started crying himself, at the same time patting that portion of her face which was not buried in her handkerchief with his little hand.

All the children soon collected round the mother, unanimously repudiating a turkey, even scouting, scorning and reviling it.

"Well, well!" exclaimed the widow, rising from her seat, and squaring her shoulders, as if bracing herself for another bout with the wolf, "this will never do, in no shape, way or manner. It's time for you, Bimmie and Carrie, to be starting for school; so put on your thing, and I'll get your lunch ready to take along with you."

So Bimmie got into his absurd little cowhide boots, and the ridiculous little concretion of patches which did duty as his overcoat, whilst Carrie went through a similar process with equally preposterous garments adapted to her sex, and they toddled off with their school-books and a varnished tin imposture resembling a book, labeled the "History of the Sandwich Islands," and called a lunch-box, containing several slices of bread, delicately anointed with the last cubic inch of butter in the widow's larder.

The residence of Mrs. Rolf was on the confines of a medium-sized village, in the State of Nomatter, and the children attended the public school. Their road [illegible] past several farm-houses, and each of these farm-houses owned turkeys, of course, besides chickens and ducks and geese, but all in their living state, covered with feathers, and moving about. These birds never suggested gastronomic ideas to either of the little Rolfs, so the poor children were at least spared many pangs of envy in that way; but the large turkey gobblers did loom up a great source of terror to little Carrie, to whom their ferocious gobbling and rustling were about equivalent to hoisting the black flag, and she wore a tiny red flannel jacket, which the turkeys doubtless took as a standing menace or gage of battle.

Well, as they were passing one of the farms—that belonging to Uncle Ira Fleshwick—and as Carrie was trotting on, some dozen yards ahead, she came upon a caucus of turkeys, whose chairman, or president, a bully boy with a red comforter, a very John Morrissey of a turkey, came fiercely forward in the usual style, scraping his wing-feathers along the ground, and made a personal assault on the young lady. At sight of this, Bimmie felt all the blood of the Rolfs tingling in his veins, and he toddled to the rescue, brandishing aloft in one hand the History of the Sandwich Islands, and in the other a hickory limb which he had hastily picked up in the road.

Boldly thrusting himself between the gobbler and his victim, Bim made a pass at it with the tin impostor, which (being merely held by a nefarious species of twine made of brown paper, which broke, of course) flew out of his hand and fell to the ground; then ensued a combat the like of which has never been seen since Thermopylæ.

The fighting weight of the combatants was about equal, but the bird had the advantage of being an adult, whilst the human was an infant in law, and we may say almost in fact.

"They fit and fit and fit," to quote a great writer. Now, Bimmie came down on his back, and now he came down on the gobbler's knob with his hickory—now Bim was backed into a bramble-bush, and now he rushed forth, ornamented all over with thorns like a pincushion, and made his enemy's feathers fly! Whack! fizzle! gobble! squash! cry! Hammer and tongs, at it they went, a regular rough-and-tumble fight. Bim had blood running from several cuts in his nose and cheeks (had he had six noses, each of them would have been bleeding, so often did the gobbler get in on his claret jug); his preposterous coat and ridiculous pantaloons were tore in several places; but he fought like a hero, with his stick, his hands, his absurd little boots, his head, and his whole body. Fortunately it was only one to one. Had the rest of the turkeys aided their champion, Bimmie would have been quickly vanquished; but the little incident at the beginning of the contest, which looked like a disaster, proved to be a most happy occurrence. When the lunch-box flew out of Bim's hand, it flew open, and the contents, spreading themselves on the ground, attracted the attention of the whole of the non-combatant turkeys, and so engrossed their faculties that they had no leisure to participate in the affray. Neither did Carrie take any part in the affray, but stood and looked on, with her little fists clenched, and her mouth and eyes wide open, in a nervous state of mingled terror and admiration.

How long the fight lasted cannot be exactly told, as neither the turkey nor Bimmie nor Carrie had a watch about them. It seemed but a moment to Bim, to Carrie an age; but the end came at last, and, we are happy to record, with a favorable result for Bim.

Giving a quick and vigorous swing of his hickory, he smote the gobbler on the neck, and the insolent bird, after gyrating, a frantic and confused mass of feathers and squash, for a few seconds, toppled over on his side and gave up the ghost. The fight was over, and victory perched on the hickory of Bim.

"You're a nice young wagabun, ain't you!"

Bim heard these awful words, and, looking up, beheld the head and shoulders of Uncle Fleshwick, leaning, like a Cornish Fee-Fi-Fo-Fum giant, over the top of the fence. Poor Bim!

Farmer Fleshwick was a large and fierce man, with a large mouth and large teeth, who looked big enough to eat him and turkey both together, with Carrie thrown in as dressing.

Poor Bim! He had just courage enough to run away, and away he ran as fast as his absurd little boots would carry him, up the hill, and over the hill, and out of sight, till he reached the school-house, and then he had to wait a few minutes till his sister, who was not far behind, came up, and then they both had to wait till they gained their breath, so what with the fighting and the waiting they were quite late, and received a promise of the usual punishment of being kept in after school hours.

Thus the two wee gladiators had a doleful Thanksgiving Eve of it. They had no lunch, the turkeys having eaten that; they had lost the tin fraud, the lunch-box, an inestimable treasure in their eyes; and they sat in mortal terror all day, expecting every moment the farmer would come in upon them with some frightful lettre-de-cachet from the village Squire, and carry them off to years of incarceration in a felon's cell. And when all this was over, they had the prospect of walking home and being waylaid by Farmer Fleshwick, with his big teeth and big bulldog, ready to do things from which the imagination staggered back appalled.

Indeed, when school was over, and their punishment was over, and the rest of the children had gone home to look at the turkeys hanging in the cellars, and the mince-pies ready for the oven, they held a dismal little council of war over their best line of march to that home which knew no turkey, but where there was a soft mother's bosom on which to lay their troubled little heads and weep away their tiny tears.

To go back by the road was a course fraught with too much danger. Uncle Ira was certain to be there on the watch. How about cross lots? There lay the whole world open before them; to be sure, the world is chiefly made up of cross lots; but, then, there are often high fences and hedges, and brambles and bogs and streams, to be met with in cross lots; and there seemed to be an unusually large number in that particular country.

So they resolved to take a circuitous route through Farmer Jamberee's pasture, along the outskirts of Hope's wood, through Kinsey's orchard (a ticklish spot), down the hollow, and so to the main road and home.

They accomplished the greater part of their journey, and were just looking forward to the warm fireside when for the second time on that miserable day they heard the awful voice of Farmer Fleshwick utter those blood-curdling words:

"You're a nice young wagabun, ain't you?" and there was the monster leaning over a stone wall, glaring at them, and showing all his great teeth in two double rows. "You come here!"

They could not resist—flight would be useless.

"Do you know you killed my turkey?"

"No—o—o—o, sir. I didn't go for—r—r to do it."

"Never mind; you come along with me. You're the Widow Rolf's boy, ain't you?"

"Yes, sir."

"That so!" said the farmer, and he led the way to his own house.

His door stood open, and the light of a fire painted it all red within. There was his wife, and a table covered with a nice supper, all painted red on the side to the fire, and everything looked bright and warm and cheerful. Oh! how hungry these two were, and how unhappy!

"Wife," said the farmer, "here are those two little ones that fit and killed our turkeys; leastways, one of 'em did, and t'other looked on. What shall we do to them?"

"Give 'em some supper," responded the wife.

"Well said—supper it is. Sit down, little folks, and pile in. If you eat more than is there, why, there's plenty more where it came from."

And they piled in. They did pile in. They—but words fail to express the justice those two young Rolfs did to the ham and eggs, and to the fish-cakes, and to the apple-sauce, and the bread and milk, and the molasses-cake.

"Now, little folks, are you all through?" said the farmer, sternly. "'Cause, if you are, I want your opinion on something." So saying, he produced from a closet a naked turkey, so large that, holding it by the legs, he could not lift its head from the ground. "There," he said, "what do you think of that? That's the turkey you killed."

The boy trembled.

"Now, tell me, has your mother bought a turkey for your dinner to-morrer?"

"No, sir," replied Bim, scratching the heel of his right foot with the toe of his left ridiculous cowhide boot.

"Thought as much," said the farmer. "Now, tell me, honest, what are you going to have for dinner to-morrer?"

"Bread," answered Bim.

"And what?"

"Mebbe butter, and mebbe potatoes."

"Well, that ain't high living, be it, mother?" appealing to his wife, in a husky voice, and blowing his nose. "Howsomever, lookee here, little Rolf, see if you can carry that there," pointing to the turkey.

Bim tried it, and managed to stagger across the room with his burden.

"That'll do first-rate," said Fleshwick. "You're agoin' to take that home bime-by. It's already cleaned, and fixed full of the primest dressing; so's all your mother's got to do is jest to put it in the oven; but, she'll find that out. Fust of all, there's something else fur you to look at;" and he turned to his wife, with little winks and twinkles playing all among the wrinkles of his eyes, and round the corners of his mouth. He spoke nothing with his lips, but his eyes said, as plainly as a circus-bill: "Now, then, you know what we agreed upon. Fetch it out."

So the good soul bustled out of the room, and in a few minutes she bustled back again with a big basket, which she placed on the floor.

"There, now, Carrie, see if you can carry——" Here she burst into a fit of laughter. "Well, I declare, if I ain't made a joke; Carrie carry. Ha! ha! ha!"

Carrie made an effort, but it was too much.

"Well, that don't matter a mite," said Farmer Fleshwick. "We'll carry it down as far as their gate, and then the little ones can each on 'em take holt of one side, and hist it in easy."

So they started, Farmer Fleshwick carrying the basket on one arm, with the turkey swung over his back, to keep the head from trailing on the ground.

The little ones toddled one on either side of the wife, a small hand clasped in each of hers.

When they reached the widow's garden-gate, the farmer unloaded, hanging the turkey on the fence and placing the basket on the ground.

"Now, hold on," said he, in a whisper, "you little ones wait here till me and wife gets a good place at the winder, and then, when you see us all ready, you can first carry in the turkey, and then both of you can run back and tote in the basket atween you; but, mind you don't say nothin' about me and wife being at the winder, or I'll never give you nothin' more, so long as you live. Promise?"

"Yeth, thir," promptly responded Bim. He would have promised almost anything at that moment, the full glory of the affair dawning on him in all its brightness. "Yeth, thir; I'll promise."

"God boy!" exclaimed the farmer. "Now!" and off he went, followed by his wife, to station themselves at the window.

It was not a cheerful scene which met their view. There was little fire in the stove, no steam came from the spout of the tea-kettle, and a crooked lamp, with a broken shade, spread but a feeble light over the patched cloth and scanty supper.

The widow kept her eyes fixed anxiously on the door.

"We must send 'em some coal," whispered the farmer to his wife.

"To-morrow," whispered the wife back.

"And one of them large lamps."

"To-night."

"There's no one in this whole wide God's world like you, wife!" and the farmer pressed his arm round the waist of his old spouse like a lover.

Here they saw the door burst open, and Bim and Carrie struggle in with the turkey between them, Bim holding it on his back by the neck, and Carrie supporting the legs behind.

The Rolfs sprang to their feet (all except Bob, the baby, who could not spring) at the astounding spectacle, and then stood in speechless astonishment when the little ones threw their burden on a chair, and then scampered out, only to come staggering back with the big basket, and bump it on the floor.

Then came a volley of questions and answers, and an examination of the contents of the basket, each object eliciting exclamations of rapture.

First of all, there was a soft brown-paper parcel, which proved to be sausages; then a hard newspaper one, which proved to be a jar of cranberry-jelly; then two unmistakable forms, which revealed themselves as bottles of crab-apple cider; then two mince-pies, then a bag of doughnuts, then some tea and some sugar, and a whole lot of rosy apples and brown nuts, and a great round, crusty loaf of home-made bread, and I know not what else.

Then they all stood round, clapped their hands, and laughed and kissed, and almost became crazy.

Then there was a pause, for the mother laid her hand on Bim's shoulder and said something in a low voice to the children round, which made them look grave and quiet. Then they all knelt down, and thanked the Almighty Giver of all good for this unexpected blessing which had come to them.

Outside the window were two figures, with heads bent and tearful eyes, who joined in the widow's prayer, thanking the same great Power for putting it into their hearts to befriend this small group of their fellow-creatures.

There were not, in all these broad United States, any happier or truer Thanksgivings than those which were celebrated beneath the beams and rafters of the widow's and the farmer's home.

Thanksgiving.

Our own severely practical age is not specially given to holidays or holy days—to feasts or fasts, when these interfere materially with what we call business. We have reversed the order in our division of time, as established in the earlier ages of the world, by placing business first and pleasure afterward. The old Romans divided their days into festi and profesti, thus placing the work of professional day after the feast in order of importance. Whether our rule or theirs is the best we do not care to discuss, only noting the fact and passing it with the remark that probably our plan brings in the best returns, and that if our feast days come less often, we may be better prepared to enjoy them.

The American Thanksgiving Day, now observed each year throughout the country, dates back to the earliest days of Plymouth Colony. The summer of 1623 was one of peculiar trial to the infant colony, owing to a long-continued drought, which threatened a total failure of the crops and consequent starvation. A day of humiliation and prayer was appointed, and observed carefully by the people that the calamity might be averted, and in answer to their pious prayers, abundant showers were sent to save the crops and the people.

In grateful acknowledgment to God for these signal favors the first American Thanksgiving was appointed and celebrated.

The second Thanksgiving was celebrated in 1630; the third, probably, in 1651; the next in 1664, then 1676, 1680, 1686, 1688, 1689, 1690.

The Plymouth record, for 1688, reads thus: "The court taking notice of the goodness of God to vs in the continuance of our civil and religious liberties, the general health we have enjoyed, and that it hath pleased God in some comfortable measure to blesse vs in the fruites of the earth, doe conceive that these and other favors doe call vpon vs for returnes of thankfulness to the Lord, whoe might have justly dealt otherwise with vs—and therefore, that we may be joynt in this, our sacrifice, doe propose unto the several congregations of this gov'ment that the 25th day of November next, which will be the fourth day of the week, to be kept as a solemn day of thanksgiving with respect to His goodness in the p'ticulars abovementioned."

After 1700 Thanksgiving Day was observed annually in the New England colonies.

Congress in 1777 appointed a National Thanksgiving Day, also in 1779, on account of the surrender of Yorktown.

Washington issued the first Presidential proclamation for Thanksgiving for Thursday, November 26, 1789.

The Fashions in Furs.

[From Harper's Bazar.]

SABLE SETS.

Notwithstanding all changes of fashion, the Crown Russian sable remains the choicest fur; it is as high in price as ever, and becomes more difficult to obtain yearly. The set consists of a boa a yard and a half or two yards long, and a muff showing three dark stripes, made of well-matched skins. Fine sets cost $1,200, but desirable sets can be had from $700 down to $200. Hudson Bay sable is not used as extensively as formerly, but is chosen by those who want a handsome dark sable and cannot afford to buy the Russian. The finest dark sets are $300. Lighter grades begin as low as $75 for the muff and boa.

SILVER-FOX.

Perhaps the most dressy of all the fancy furs introduced lately is the silver-fox—a light blue-gray fur interspersed with those "silver points" or white tips that are now thought to add so much to the beauty of any fur. The muff and boa cost from $75 to $200; a band of silver-fox trimming costs from $10 to $16 a yard.

CHINCHILLA.
